Dayton, Tennessee, the scene of the Scopes evolution trial, is to have a memorial university in commemoration of the late William Jennings Bryan. Speculation is rife regarding the curriculum of the university. It is taken for granted that nothing will be taught there that has the remotest semblance of scientific knowledge. The late Bryan was the foremost apostle of ignorance of the past century. A garrulous old blackguard, he roared maledictions against everybody that publicly displayed the slightest knowledge of the facts of science or history. A true representative of the petty bourgeoisie of the middle west, he was the embodiment of all the vicious stupidity of that class. He presumed to talk about everything under the sun. Lack of knowledge never deterred his dogmatic harrangues. The less he knew of a subject the more he dwelt upon it.

His latest quarrel with his ancestors made him the butt of ridicule of the whole civilized world.

It is appropriate that the fundamentalists of Tennessee who placed a law upon the statute books forbidding the teaching of the most commonplace scientific facts should subscribe to a fund to erect a monument of infamy—name it after Bryan—and call it a university.

But not forever can the inhabitants of even that state dwell in the black night of fundamentalism. The time will come when the offspring of the present inhabitants of Tennessee will revere their ape-like ancestors of the pleistocene age much more than their more immediate ones.

The Flying Colonel as Agent of Imperialism

By Jack Bradon

EDITOR'S NOTE:—This article was received some weeks ago, but owing to pressure of news and party matters has not been published until now.

IT is seldom that a seemingly pure military matter engages the attention of the average mind as has the mis-named "Mitchell" episode. There are countless conflicting speculations and a multitude of unbridgably divergent theories as to the meaning and outcome of the air-service controversy. Yet there is a certain common characteristic—they are all centered around the personality of Mitchell. He is viewed as the sole cause, the instigator and likely culminator of the affair.

The fact is, while the demoted brigadier-general is circumstantially appearing in a principal role in the matter—he is but a temporarily magnified cog of a machine. It is with the purpose of shielding from the public eye this machine and its plan to loot the public treasury for the extension of aviation, that attention is misleadingly focussed upon Mitchell.

AN attempt to get at the bottom of the air craft situation and its accompanying entanglements by a mere study of Mitchell's publicly advertised connection therewith—is to see the "fat lady" and assume her to be the whole circus. Mitchell is made conspicuous by publicity and the "fat lady" by her poundage. Still, she is but a part of a circus, of which there are many side shows, all dominated by the "big tent," for there in the big tent are found the principal actors as well as the manager and owners.

The "big tent" in the "air circus" is Washington, D. C., the principal actor, the government, and the manager and owner, American capitalism.

THE United States government like any other government is charged with the duty of protecting the interests of its ruling class. Since the well-being of the American ruling class rests upon the exploitation of the bulk of its own people, as well as commercial supremacy over those foreign capitalist groups, who compete with it on foreign soil—it becomes the duty and task of the government so to arm itself as to enable it to subdue the potential enemies of American capitalism, both at home and in foreign spheres.

For more than three years has the military eye of the government looked with jealousy and anxiety upon the threatening development of military aviation of France and England, and so, to safeguard its master, American capitalism, the government has determined to build up its own aviation to a point of being second to none.

It is in this process of building its aviation that the government is compelled to consider and cope with a number of factors, and it is this that provides the Mitchell and other less conspicuous side shows.

THE administration must remember the next election. This demands a gesture at economy. It is deemed politically inexpedient to expend large sums for military purposes, without first paving the way for such extravagance. To meet this problem, that of not driving away votes, because of large aviation expenditures, the administration has set out to mold a favorable public opinion towards such expenditures. This is done by a wide-spread propaganda in favor of air craft extension. Of this, the attempted propaganda trip of the Shenandoah was a part, as well as the Hawaiian flight and the much-heralded Mitchell affair.

UNDER ordinary conditions "insubordination" or, "conduct unbecoming an officer and 'gentleman'"—of which Mitchell appears to be guilty, is quietly disposed of by a court martial, because it is not conductive to military discipline to make a hero of an insubordinate, or a virtue of disrespect to superior officers. Why, then, this about-face of military tradition in the case of Mitchell? Not only is there no attempt to silence Mitchell; on the contrary, a large section of the press is "front-paging" him, and President Coolidge has provided him with a forum in the shape of the Coolidge air-board. The "go-easy" attitude of the administration towards Mitchell is accountable by the following considerations: While Mitchell is shouting loudly for a "separate" air service he is not less noisy and persistent about an "adequate" air service. The saying goes: "If you like the sow, you've got to like her litter." Since the administration's goal is an "adequate" air service, and Mitchell advocates that, it allows him to speak of a separate air service, even tho it is not fully in accord with the latter proposal.

Then there is the pressure of the airplane interests, among whom Mr. Henry Ford could be counted; they are for the Mitchell idea of a separate air department, because they see in its establishment the first step towards the discarding of the Philadelphia naval air craft factory, as well as the engineering air craft division of the army, thus placing the production of military planes entirely into private hands. By removing governmental competition from the field of plane production, the private producers will be enabled to raise prices to their hearts' content.

A separate air service department, being free from army and particularly from naval restriction, which is now the case, will develop more rapidly both in its efficiency and quantity use of planes. A well-developed military aviation will encourage and give moment to civil aviation—all of which will mean increased profits to the producers. No wonder they favor Mitchell, whose platform is: A "separate" and "adequate" air service.

The air service controversy is advertised as a clash of opinions on the part of military heads and nothing more. While it is true that high military men differ in their opinions as to the administration of the air craft service (the reasons for which will be explained) the conflict is in reality between the ship building and steel interests on the one hand and the aviation interests on the other. It is easy enough for the administration to dispose of disagreements between military heads, by administering a "silencing" spanking. But it cannot spank powerful financial groups, who are encouraging and utilizing the conflicting opinions and traditional conservatism of military and naval heads.

WE see that the military advocates of a separate air service become the natural allies of air plane producers. Their common desire is, a rapid and unchecked development of aviation. The naval officers' and ship builders' interests also have a certain commonness of purpose; to each for reasons of his own. The high naval officer of the old school, with its conservatism naturally views a new arm of service with skepticism, this is supplemented by a fear of aviation developing to a height claimed for it by its proponents, and thereby greatly minimizing the importance of the navy and hence the prestige of its officers. The high naval officer particularly, is fearingly mindful of the fact that an excellent military plane could be had for $20,000, while the cost of a modern battle ship reaches several million. It is up to the naval officer to prove that a three or four-million dollar battle ship could not easily be sunk by a $20,000 plane. This they are trying to do by not allowing aviation to show up its effectiveness to full advantage. Testimony to this may be had from the fact that during the Hawaiian maneuvers commanded by naval officers, planes were not permitted to bomb ships from a normal height.

A separate air service department will become a sort of free agent with a reputation of its own to make and maintain, even tho it be at the cost of naval growth and reputation.

The naval officer is not against aviation as such; he merely wants control of it, and to limit it, particularly when it threatens to surpass the navy in importance. That is why the naval officer is against a separate air service.

The ship building interests view a separate air service with suspicion: they see in it the ascent of aviation and the decline of the navy, and therefore, of their profits. Here we see the commonness of interest between the naval officer and the ship builder, they are both for a limited development of aviation, one fearing the loss of profits and the other the loss of importance.

The Role of the Coolidge Air Board.

The appointment of the Coolidge air board was motivated by the need of a forum for the advocacy of aviation extension, upon which, thru the press, the public mind could be directed and favorably impressed, not only by Mitchell's insistence for adequate aviation, but by other witnesses appearing before this board, who, while differing as to how such an air service is to be conducted, are at the same time in full agreement and speak loudly for aviation expansion. The disaster that befell the Shenandoah on her aviation propaganda tour could not be passed up without some attempt to vindicate the guilty, and thus to justify the replacement of the dirigible. This is another reason for the appointment of the airboard as well as the investigation of the naval board.

A third, and chief reason, for the creation of the board is: After the attention of the people has been properly concentrated upon that committee's doings, the latter in due time—after the manner of such hand-picked committee, will with a great emphasis show the dangers that lie in the meagerness of "our" air service. It is quite likely that this board will offer an elaborate plan for aviation expansion, and it may even venture a plan of administration.

THE above propaganda road that the administration is following will enable it to appropriate money for aviation extension and at the same time will take care of the "vote" aspect of the affair. The people will have been adequately propagandized, and in all probability the seventieth congress will be called upon to appropriate a large sum for the building of aviation, as well as to formulate a plan of administration.

The fight is plainly between manufacturing interests rather than between military and naval heads, and the method of administering the air service will depend solely upon the number of votes those conflicting interests could master in the house and senate.

IN all probability a new cabinet office will be created under which the three distant arms of service will function, giving the air service greater independence than before. The development of aviation in France and England will have its influence upon the next congress and the manner in which it will dispose of the air service episode. As to Mitchell, he will in all probability be retained in the service. Should he resign of his own accord for reasons of persecution or demotion—the airplane interests will take good care of their invaluable spokesman.

CIRCULATION OF NEWSPAPERS INCREASE IN U. S. S. R. WHILE NUMBER OF PAPERS DECREASE

MOSCOW—(Tass.)—Nov. 12.—The total of newspapers in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is now 31.8 per cent less than in 1913 (586 against 859), but their daily circulation exceeds the pre-war figures by 10 per cent, having reached about the first of January the total number of 7,356,263 copies daily.

The daily circulation of the largest pre-war newspapers as the Russkoe Slovo, the Kopeika, and the Birjevye Viedomosti used to issue about 700,000; the circulation of modern newspapers as the Pravda, the Izvestia, and the Krestianskaia Gazeta (Peasants' Gazette), has gone over 1,500,000.

The circulation of Soviet newspapers has grown almost six times compared with the figures of the second half of 1922, and every year it approximately doubles.

Workers' Papers Lead.

Before the revolution, the newspapers were divided into papers containing "Publicists' articles, comments upon politics and literature," newspapers "for people and the army" and "church" newspapers. Now they fall into groups according to separate social stratas they serve. Workmen's newspapers are 85 in number and hold the first place in circulation (2,814,087): of them 52 are popular newspapers, 15 leading papers and 17 professional ones. Peasants' papers are the most numerous; there were four of them before the revolution. Of the total number of newspapers appearing in the national language 60 are peasant papers. National newspapers now reach the figure of 139 against 5 to 6 before the revolution. Besides, there are several small groups of papers; economic, co-operative, komsomol (Communist Youth Union), children, military and miscellaneous papers, totally amounting to 110.

Newspapers are being published exclusively by state, party, trade unions co-operative and public organizations.

Wall "Newspapers."

At every factory, mill, every institution, large co-operative shops, almost in every village, in every school, club, military detachment and even in many large houses there is the "stengazeta" (wall newspaper) being published commenting upon questions of interest to the particular organization or locality. The total number of such papers is over 30,000; they are being edited by local circles of correspondents. Such a newspaper is usually written by hand or a typewriter, supplied with hand drawings, mostly cartoons and pasted to the wall in a conspicuous place. Wall papers are highly popular and have great success.

Worker Correspondents.

Voluntary correspondents from factories, villages and institutions are also contributing to large newspapers and magazines. The number of such correspondents affiliated to papers reaches one hundred and fifty thousand workers. Their task is by means of their paper to throw light upon the life of the factory they work in. By disclosing faults, cases of negligence and crimes, the worker correspondents thus take an active part in building new life in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

Method of Extracting Iodine.

MOSCOW.—The Russian engineer Constantov has discovered a new means of obtaining iodine by means of electrolyte from oil borings. The question of producing iodine on the Apsheron Peninsula is now being discussed.

OPERATORS IN ANTHRACITE USE OLD GAME OF DIVIDING MINERS BY RELIGIOUS WAR OVER KLAN

The following is the second of a series of articles upon the life and struggle of the 158,000 striking anthracite miners, written on the field of action by William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, whose graphic description of conditions should interest every reader.

(Article 2.)

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 13.—Alignments which may precipitate armed warfare between klan and anti-klan groups which will dwarf the Herrin struggle are being formed here.

On the surface it appears as a struggle between the local sections of the republican and democrat parties. Beneath the surface, in spite of the heterogenous elements of which both groups are composed, the class line appears. It is faint but it is there.

Twenty state cossacks are on guard in the Lackawanna county courthouse. In the basement are ten more with their horses and machine guns. The exercise of the right of franchise by some thousands of Lackawanna county citizens, and the additional complication of a city election in Scranton, has brot the threat of civil war. Ballots have been cast but bullets are more than likely to decide the moot questions.

Both 100 Per Centers.

McHugh chief of police of Scranton and a democrat, leads the anti-klan forces. Jermyn, a coal operator, heads the republican party and klan cohorts.

Both announce that they are 100 per cent Americans, against the "reds" and for god, country and god's chosen people.

The presence of the state troopers has prevented god from making a decision up to date and his position is more than usually difficult in that it appears that in the county he supported the republican klansmen while in Scranton proper he caused most of the citizenry to cast their ballots for the equally god-fearing democrats. Taking god's Scranton decision as a precedent, the anti-klansmen have seized the klan-filled ballot boxes thruout Lackawanna county with the evident intention of aiding god to arrive at the proper conclusion.

The klan has mobilized to prevent god being imposed upon and trusty 30-30s, and smaller arms, are being oiled up by both sides.

Class Line is Klan Issue.

The class line in this broil, whose seriousness is not to be minimized by facetiousness, is faint, as I have said. More than that it is confused because workers are to be found on both sides. But the general line of division in the ranks of the miners is for the anti-klan forces and against Jermyn, the coal operator and his klansmen.

So powerful has the opposition to Jermyn become among the miners that Cappellini, for years a wheelhorse of the republican machine, was forced to desert the republican organiaztion and support the anti-klan forces.

The whole Lewis machine is beset with contradictions in this situation. It supports the Pinchot republican state gang of silk-stocking reformers but has to break on the klan issue and the candidacy of coal operator Jermyn in Scranton. There is little question but that a klan victory would have serious consequences for the miners' union and its large foreign-born membership. Equally serious for the union is the support of the democrat party with the catholic church dominating its organized section.

ITALIAN DEBT TO COME UP IN CONGRESS

Seventy-Five Per Cent Cut Resented

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13—The Italian debt agreement, in which Italy is to repay $2,042,000,000 borrowed ruring the war on terms far more liberal than have been accorded any other debtor nation, is due for some congressional bombardment when presented for ratification.

It is conceded that it will be adopted because the House of Morgan, dominating the democratic party, will not tolerate opposition to it from that source. The opponents will be the group of republican spokesmen for the American industrialists and the petty bourgeois democrats from the middle west.

Stage Is Set.

Administration leaders will make some speeches on American generosity, and the opposition will extend some sympathy to the American taxpayer pointing out that the Italian settlement represents a net loss of around $75,000,000 a year. The net loss to the taxpayer is incurred thru the difference in interest rates on the Nitrates not sentiment is the motto of the "blue jackets" and "Black-Jack" Pershing who are in this territory and are "arranging" the plebiscite to decide whether Peru or Chile wins in the Tacna-Arica controversy. This territory is valuable to American financiers as it offers easy access to the nitrate fields of South America, and these financiers are seeing to it that "Black-Jack" protects their interests.

NITRATES NOT SENTIMENT

CHANG ADMITS DEFEAT; FENG TAKES PEKING

Form Anglo-U. S. Bloc to Aid Imperialism

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PEKING, China, Nov. 13.—Supporters of Chang Tso-lin the open tool of foreign imperialism, who has been using imperialist backing to suppress the national liberation movement as far south as his troops could penetrate from their Manchurian base, have fled the capital as it was seized by the soldiery of General Feng Yu-hsiang.

Some members of the cabinet have resigned and Feng is the acknowledged master of the situation in the ancient capital where the diplomats of the imperialist powers are meeting to decide—or so they imagine—what concessions they shall give to or withhold from China on the issue of autonomy.

Chang Admits Defeat.

Chang Tso-lin admits defeat in the battles that have taken place to the south in the region of Huschow, in northern Kiangsu province, where the statement issued by Chang admits 2,000 of his troops were killed.

Meanwhile that the provisonal president, old Tuan Chi-jui, is held under guard of Feng's troops who disarmed his bodyguard of Chang's mercenaries, the committee on iterim measures appointed by the international customs conference now being held here, met today after a week's adjournment to discuss possible coordination of the American, Japanese and Chinese proposals.

Anglo-American Bloc.

Reports from America say that President Coolidge and Sir Esme Howard, British ambassador, with Secretary of State Kellogg, recently held a long conference upon the question of China, and formed an alliance

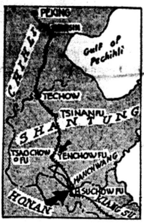
CHANG'S TROOPS ARE DRIVEN NORTH; FENG SEIZES THE CAPITAL



Chang Tso-lin's headquarters at Mukden, Manchuria, admits in a communique that Chang lost 2,000 killed in battles with forces of the central provinces commanded by Wu Pei-fu and the Chekiang governor Sun, near the city of Hsuchow in northern Kiangsu. Meanwhile, General Feng Yu-hsiang, whose alignment with the forces of the Kuomintang and the national liberation movement has won him the sympathy of all who wish to see China free, has seized Peking from the west and Chang's supporters have fled the capital.

Moscow Court Nips Hopes of Bourgeois Wealth in Bank Clerk

MOSCOW, Nov. 13.—When John Zhivetovsky, a clerk in a governmental bank, thought that he would enrich himself while in government employ by selling cotton on commission for the American firm of Tarver, Steel and company, he reckoned without the Moscow authorities. The Moscow provincial court has sentenced him to two years in prison and loss of citizenship for three additional years. It is thus that the budding Falls of the Soviet union are ably handled.

The formal protest was tranamitted to the Hungarian consul general's local secretary.

I. W. W. FINANCE AND PRISONERS ARE DISCUSSED

Per Capita to Vary; Pledge Aid to Ford

The 17th general convention of the Industrial Workers of the World was devoted yesterday almost all day to a discussion of the organization's finances and means of supporting the central headquarters, including the press.

As the sliding scale of dues and initiation fees has been previously adopted, a further motion was carried to provide that per capita tax from the industrial unions should be fifteen per cent of the dues actually collected from the members, thus making the industrial unions with one dollar dues pay 15 cents while those retaining 50 cent dues pay only seven cents per capita.

Quarterly Assessment.

In addition the need of the central organization for more funds with which to work, was provided for by the authorization of a quarterly assessment of one dollar. It is expected by this means to aid the press and discharge other obligations—preventing the discontinuance proposed of the Industrial Pioneer.

In the discussion it was pointed out that at present the general organizer is kept at the headquarters continu-

Seven Coal Diggers Trapped by Cave-In in Missouri Mine

TRENTON, Mo., Nov. 13.— Seven coal miners were trapped 200 feet beneath the earth's surface in the Trenton mine today, by a cave-in, the cause of which is undetermined.

All men are believed to be safe, and officials of the mine believe there is enough good air to sustain the miners until a rescue party tunnels in from a lateral channel. A large force of miners put to work digging for the main shaft, should reach the entombed men by 9 o'clock tonight, it was said.

BEN GOLD DELIVERS SMASHING BLOW AT KAUFMAN IN FURRIERS' CONVENTION; DEFENDS T. U. E. L.

By WILLIAM W. WEINSTONE.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 13.—The delegates forgot about lunch time at the special convention of the Furriers' Union here, while Ben Gold in a two hour speech of defense of the New York joint board delivered a heavy bombardment against the Kaufman machine.

Gold's speech was a smashing indictment of the yellow socialist bureaucracy when he said,—"If to restore the will and fighting spirit of the membership, if to sweep out corruption and gangsterism, if to organize the unorganized, if to build up the power of the union—if these are crimes against the constitution, you may find me guilty, but the furriers in the shops will never condemn me for it."

Delegates Applaud.

As Gold closed, the delegates rose amid prolonged cheering for the magnificent demonstration of the left wing's program and ability. Never was a bureaucratic machine under so severe a bombardment.

Gold's speech followed the report of a handpicked committee on the supplementary report, justifying the action of the international officials against the New York joint board, rendered after days of sidetracking to avoid a fight. Gold spoke for the board, which was ostensibily on trial before the convention, but never for a moment did the delegates feel that the board was being tried.

The yellow socialist bureaucracy, the "socialist" Daily Forward, the Sigmanites and whole pack of corrupt officialdom were on trial, with the left wing's spokesman as the accuser.

Tells of Four-Year Struggle.

The delegates listened in reverential silence as the story was unfolded of viciousness, sluggers, and corruption. Gold was unsparing in words, that fell like shrapnel among the bureaucrats and vice-presidents seated on the dias.

He pictured the story of the last four years' war on the joint board and particularly the last period in the fight against the left wing. Gold refered to the Kaufman regime as a "Fascist dictatorship employing Noske tactics, maintaining terrorism and a spy system known only in the days of czarism under the Romanoffs, working in alliance with the bosses and the district attorney, turning every local union into a bloody battlefield."

Gold spared neither Kaufman's machine nor the Forward, whom he charged with supplying ammunition to manufacturers in their war against the union. He brought in Meyer London, sitting in the convention in silence and not daring yet to address the gathering, serving instead as wire puller for the discredited Kaufman machine.

T. U. E. L. Saved Union.

Gold exposed the "welfare club" organization of gangsters and tools of Kaufman. Coming to the charge against the Trade Union Educational League, he did not for a moment disavow the organization and membership in the T. U. E. L., without which —"the union would have been ruined today.

"The T. U. E. L. left wingers are a factor in the labor movement, standing for the interests of the rank and file and the building up of a powerful union to fight the bosses."

Proud of Party Membership.

Nor did Gold deny affiliation with other Communists in the Workers (Communist) Party. "I declare proudly my membership in a revolutionary, disciplined party, which fights for the workers against all enemies. Kaufman, instead of fighting for the workers, paralyzed the union, destroyed the self-confidence of the workers, placed the union under the control of the manufacturers."

Gold told how Kaufman went to the district attorney—the servant of the capitalist class and enemy of the workers—to destroy the left wing movement. And failing in all measures to overcome the left wing's pow-

'DEGENERATE' HURLED AT CHIEF KLUXER

Politics Excuse of Sadist's Lawyers

NOBLESVILLE, Ind., Nov. 13.—"Political persecution" was the defense flung at the heads of the prosecution in the closing arguments of his lawyers in the trial of ku klux dragon, D. C. Stephenson, Earl Gentry and Earl Klinck, on charges of murder growing out of the death of Miss Madge Oberholtzer.

The charge, voiced by Attorney Floyd Christian, came on the heels of a demand by the state that death in the electric chair be degreed for "Stephenson, the degenerate; Klinck, the Gorilla, and Gentry, the confederate."

Praises Pervert.

"They are trying to wash their dirty politics thru the suicide of Miss Madge Oberholtzer," Christian said in sounding the keynote of his speech. "It's a mud-slinging contest with Stephenson as the target because of the power (meaning the klan) he built up thru untiring efforts to succeed."

An attack upon the death-bed statement of Miss Oberholtzer around which the state built its case also featured Christian's speech.

"Granting for the sake of argument that all the charges of injuries contained in this statement are true," he said, "We find one that slipped by the state. She charges that Stephenson bit her tongue. Who can explain how this could have occurred without cooperation on her part?"

Earlier in the day, Charles E. Cox, former judge and special counsel for the state, had concluded his speech.

IMPERIALIST POWERS WANT TO FORCE HUGE LOAN ON CHINESE

TOKIO, Nov. 13.—Observers who have been watching for the joker in the offer of the imperialist powers of "autonomy" to China have at last uncovered the scheme of the American and other imperialist interests.

The plain distress evident in the diplomats' demeanor at the news that General Feng had seized Peking, was accompanied by the suggestion that the tariff conference should move to some other place, preferably Tokio, draw up a "liberal" tariff concession which would allow a group of international bankers to underwrite a consortium loan of $500,000,000 to fund China's debts and provide a "new administration" to "unite" China.

MARIANNA, Pa., Nov. 13—Over 800 men are out on strike here refusing to accept the 1917 scale which the coal operators are trying to put into effect in place of the 1923 scale which is in force now.

Marianna, a quiet little mining town in ordinary times, has now virtually been turned into a military camp by the coal company. The Pittsburgh Sun, a capitalist sheet, on Nov. 6, reporting on the situation in Marianna, writes:

"No disorder has marked the resumption on the old scale. However, Sheriff Otto Luellen of Washington county has his office ready to cope with any situation that may arise."

The mines were surrounded by an iron fence so that the scabs may be protected. Armed guards were stationed at strategic points. Four powerful searchlights were placed on the roofs of the company buildings so that every move of the striking miners can be watched day and night.

To show that the sheriff is ready to cope with any situation that may arise a number of shots were fired on Tuesday night, Nov. 10, by the armed hirelings of the company. Fortunately no one was wounded or killed.

Attempt to Get Scabs Fails.

Several attempts were made by the Bethlehem Mines corporation, which owns the mines and the coke ovens here, to import scabs. Special arrangements were made to have the trains carrying the scabs stop inside the gates under the protection of the iron fences.

But apparently the imported scabs are leaving the grounds as fast as they arrive. They apparently do not like the protection given them by the armed deputy sheriffs. At the time these lines are written not more than a dozen scabs, or rats, as they are usually called here, remain on the job. There is no resumption on the old scale.

The mines are completely shut down. The coke ovens remain closed. The miners stand united as one man against the attempts of the operators to turn the wage scale eight years back.

Evicts Miners from Company Houses.

Most of the miners live in company houses. Seven of these miners were ordered to "move." The company did not dare to order wholesale evictions but picked out the seven most active men, including the five officers of the local union.

The situation in the coke region is getting more and more serious. The strike wave is spreading, the company is preparing armed forces to cope with "any situation that may arise." This situation exists not only in Marianna but in numerous other places in the coke region.

What is needed now is concerted action on the part of the miners both of the soft coal and the anthracite regions. The time is opportune now for the United Mine Workers of District No. 5 to start an energetic campaign to organize the unorganized fields.

Time Opportune for Union.

The time is opportune now for the union to start an energetic campaign to arouse public sentiment against the outrageous attempts of the coal operators to force a reduction in wages at a time when the cost of living is climbing mountain high.

It is up to the progressive miners everywhere to push their union into action against the united forces of the coal operators and against the use of armed guards against the striking miners.

Record New Earthquakes.

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 13—Two earthquake shocks of great severity, were recorded this morning on the seismograph at Regis College according to Father A. W. Forestall.

The first shock at 5:43 reached its maximum at 6:18 while the second registering at 7:15 was of one and one-half hour duration. The distance could not be estimated and it is believed the shock was not on this

AMERICAN WARSHIPS WILL DECIDE WHO WINS TACNA-ARICA PLEBISCITE

ARICA, Chile, Nov. 13.—Gen. Pershing's "plebiscite commission" has now definitely indicated that it remains faithful only to American imperialism, by postponing the Tacna-Arica plebiscite until May 30, 1926. This long postponement, which has taken Latin America completely by surprise, still further aggravates the Tacna-Arica crisis and is opposed by Chileans and Peruvians alike.

Warships to Decide Controversy.

It is pointed out on all sides that the delay can serve only one purpose: to prolong the period of American domination in the disputed area. Besides General Pershing and his aides, the military might of the United States is representend in the persons of the officers and men from the cruiser Rochester, whose domineering attitude on the streets of Arica would indicate that not Chile or Peru, but the United States, is the chief interested party in the disposition of Tacna and Arica. The Rochester is anchored in Arica harbor and will remain there until after the plebiscite—presuming that the plebiscite is to be held at all.

Registration of the voters has not been started, despite the fact that Gen. Pershing has been on the scene for months. Hints are thrown out that "the characteristic American efficiency is interfered with" by difficulties created due to the expected arrival of 4,000 Tacna-Arica voters from Callao, and also the 8,000 Chilean voters already here.

"Too much importance is being given the sentimental aspect of Tacna and Arica," said Senor Augustin Edwards in an interview recently, "and very little is being said regarding the economic importance, which to my mind is paramount."

Nitrates Not Sentiment.

What Senor Edwards refers to is the nearby nitrate region, for which Arica is the principal port. Nitrates, not sentiment, are the principal concern in the Tacna-Arica matter. The nitrate fields are controlled by American companies, which accounts for the extraordinary interest of the United States government in the dispute.

The commission headed by Gen. Pershing was appointed by President Coolidge, after Chile and Peru had been practically obliged to come to him with their differences. Coolidge declared at the time that there could be no appeal from his award. These facts, together with the great United States military show at Arica and the postponement of the plebiscite just announced, indicate clearly that whatever the result of the vote may be, the purpose of American imperialism is to establish the dominance and arbitral authority of the United States government in South America, as it has already been established in Central America.

Ex-President Alessandri, who is known as the tool of the American nitrate interests in Chile, is now in Arica.

Italian Comrades to Hear Jay Lovestone on Reorganization

All Italian Workers (Communist) Party members in Chicago, Pullman and Cicero are urged to attend the tea party, which is being given under the initiative of the 19th Ward Italian Branch at which Comrade Jay Lovestone, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, will explain the bolshevization and reorganization of the party.

The tea party will take place at 2024 West Harrison street, in the basement, at 8 o'clock tonight. The English speaking comrades are also invited to attend.

Ukrainian and Russian Workers Arrange Play and Dance for Sunday

Gold Blasts Kaufman Machine Rule

er. Kaufman employed murderous Noske tactics.

Kaufman, egged on by the yellow Forward, went further and turned the fight upon the left wingers into a war upon Communism, Zinoviev, and the Russian revolution; but still unavailing Kaufman followed the footsteps of Sigman with the suspensions of the left wingers Warshafsky, Gold and others. But the membership time and again demonstrated its contempt for the international officials, so much so that the latter never dared debate issues before the members.

The violations of the constitution, which the machine uses to justify the suspensions, Gold declared as mere pretexts. Kaufman made two constitutions, one for officials, another for the rank and file.

Not a Personal Fights.

Gold closed by pointing out that the fight was not a personal one of Gold against Kaufman. It was a struggle between two sets of policies. The tactics of Kaufmanism represented the tactics of the bureaucrats thruout the labor movement. The left wing policy stood for giving voice to the rank and file, for amalgamation, for new life and spirit in the union. The session adjourned amid applause as Gold's speech struck home.

The afternoon session opened with the left wing Delegate Mensher speaking on the situation in Local 5, telling in greater detail his experiences and those of other victims of Kaufman's sluggers. He was followed by Schachtman, secretary of the New York joint board, who opened an hour's speech with a telling attack upon the sham of constitutional arguments advanced by the machine:

Schachtmann Speaks

"Every tyrant in history has fallen back upon constitution to support their own crimes against the exploited." He replied to the international report, exposing again the ruinous policies of the yellow socialist bureaucracy.

The report brought in by the majority of Kaufman's handpicked committee, recommended the upholding of the general executive board and the finding of the New York joint board guilty on six counts. No evidence was heard despite thirty delegates being ready to go before the committee.

The minority report of left wing Delegate Schneider, moved to reject the report and condemn the international officials.

The left wingers and other joint board delegates will continue the attack on the report tomorrow. The officials are holding off for final speeches. The convention is likely to continue until early next week.

which move the miners, even those who are nominally republican, to reject the coal operator candidate, can be developed to support for a labor party but it will have to be done against the united opposition of the democrat, republican and Lewis-Cappellini machine.

The existence of such a situation as prevails here has no other parallel than Russia under the czars. The largest city in a great industrial district in which 158,000 miners are on strike is torn, not by class but by religious warfare. The capitalists have maneuvered to divide the workers on religious lines, the strike and the issues involved in it, have been pushed far into the background.

Operators Can't Lose.

In the struggle between klan and anti-klan forces the coal operators have nothing to lose. They probably would choose Jermyn to rule Scranton if they had complete freedom of choice but if McHugh wins, either by court decision or by open warfare, the coal operators are assured that no "reds," with their gospel of the class struggle, will be tolerated.

In Scranton are to be seen two very interesting and instructive things:

(1) The proof that the "peaceful processes of American democracy" under pressure of hatreds generated by the conflicting elements in American capitalist democracy automatically produce conditions approximating civil war between large sections of the population.

(2) that in spite of its essential weaknesses, American capitalism is still strong and cunning enuf to turn class issues into channels comparatively harmless for itself but filled with danger for great masses of workers.

Labor Must Not Bite on Football Hero Bait of Ruling Class Politicians

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, several millions of football crazed fans will jam hundreds of stadiums over the country to witness the recognized first place college sport of the United States.

Sunday morning's newspapers will be filled with the news accounts of the games played and the pictures of new gridiron heroes, or of stars that still manage to shine. The football luminary takes his place with the champion prize fighter and the successful baseball player. They constitute the trio of heroic gods that the American masses are supposed to worship. Together they fill the calendar—summer, fall, winter and spring.

In the center of the limelight of the football idol worshippers stands Harold E. ("Red") Grange. His qualifications are that he is fleet of foot, and that he is quick and sure in kicking an inflated piece of pigskin, thus helping to pile up the scores and win games for the University of Illinois that he attends. Because of all this, the newspapers rave about him, jam an untold amount of printed froth into the minds of their readers, receptive or not, until these readers are forced to admit, in self defense, that "Red" Grange is one of greatest human creatures of all time. One of the results is that Grange receives an offer of $40,000 to appear in three games; the American readiness to capitalize in dollars anyone caught in the ever-shifting glare of publicity.

• • • •

But there is another interesting phase of this cross section of American life. Some of the Grange idolators are circulating petitions to get names to have his name placed on the ballot as a candidate for congressman-at-large in next year's elections. It is not because Grange, able to kick and run, is also able to help guide the political destiny of the land, that he is singled out. He is chosen because the publicity he has received has made him known practically to every household in the state; the publicity every capitalist candidate for office seeks, because it helps him get the votes and resulting victory on election day. Scratch this effort to send "Red" Grange to Washington and you will find a willy old party politician scheming to build up his political machine.

• • • •

The case of "Red" Grange going into politics is not new It is an old game in American politics. It is only one phase of the perversion of sports under capitalism and the hoodwinking of the workers and farmers, who constitute the overwhelming mass of the voters. An athlete possesses no special political qualifications. Instead the development of muscle usually proceeds to the detriment of the brain. "Babe" Ruth gets his nickname, not because of his size. Physically he is big, as all baseball fans know. But mentally he is considered but a child. Walter Steffens, the "famous" Chicago University quarterback, when sent to the Chicago city council, proved a nonentity, voting as the political bosses directed him. This, of course, qualified him for election as a capitalist judge. Similar cases could be recorded without number.

• • • •

Sports and athletics are not deprecated in Soviet Russia. But instead of lifting a few athletes into the limelight, the masses are drawn into health-giving exercises. Workers and peasants in the Soviet Union are not foolish enough to elect an athlete, because he can run or jump, to some political office. He will have to show in addition that he is able to direct and enhance the building of the workers' political power that challenges the rule of capitalism.

• • • •

Let the workers and farmers of Illinois remember this as the political bosses try to lure them into support of the football "hero" of the day. The pigskin pet of the parasites who are able to give their children a higher education, while the children of labor are sent into industry, must not become an election day idol of any considerable number of those who toil. Those who suffer under capitalist exploitation must not only build their own class strength politically, but must also pick their own standard bearers from their own ranks. Such working class fighters will never receive favorable mention from the profit press, tho they might have been in their youth the best athletes in all the world.

SOUTH SIDE SECTION ANTI-IMPERIALIST LEAGUE COMMITTEE MEETS MONDAY

That the organization of the first branch of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League among American Negroes, which took place recently at the Metropolitan Community Center, 3118 Giles Ave., is to be followed up by immediate activities for building and extending the influence of the organization is evident from the energetic way in which the provisional executive committee is going about its task.

A session of the committee has been called for next Monday night at seven o'clock, when plans for further mass meetings on the south side of Chicago will be discussed. The committee consists of W. B. Anderson, Olive Crosswaite, A. A. Torrence, H. V. Phillips and Lovett Fort-Whiteman.

The new South Side Branch, which will be affiliated with the Chicago section of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, already has more than 40 members.

The agreement to help the bloody terror of Mussolini remain in power was reached on the basis of this country cancelling 75 per cent of the total debt and interest thereon. The entire amount of the principal of $2,042,000,000 is to be paid and in addition about $400,000,000 in interest, but even at that figure the cancellation is two-thirds of the total debt.

Exceedingly Liberal.

The terms are the most liberal granted any government thus far, as special efforts were made to aid Mussolini maintain his power because the House of Morgan considers him an ideal tool. He has no principles whatsoever to bother about and is just a brazen prostitute for sale to anyone with the most money. So long as Morgan has the money there is no fear of the braggart despot being lured away by others.

Already the House of Morgan has agreed to a loan to Italy of $100,000,000 and an additional $50,000,000 is to be invested in Italian industrial securities.

DRUSE INVADE AND CAPTURE FRENCH BASE

Sweep Into Lebanon Taking Supplies

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BEIRUT, Syria, Nov. 13.—In a whirlwind flanking movement Druse tribesmen sweeping down from the Hermon mountain range cut thru the French lines and captured the important base of supplies recently established at Hasbeiya, half way between Damascus and Saida. Immediately the natives were equipped with captured arms and ammunition and joined in the fight against the invading French.

This town is important strategicaly and was formerly the headquarters of American and British missions. The missionaries have fled into the ranks of the French with what loot they could carry away. Long known as petty thieves and addicts of the most depraved practices to be relieved of the christian missionaries infesting the place, won the instant acclaim of the natives.

Important Victory.

This capture of Hasbeiya is especially significant as it the first time the Druses have crossed the Hermon mountain range and overran Lebanon, which is not a part of Syria, but is, like Syria, under French mandate. Christians have falsely claimed Lebanon for themselves, but the majority of the natives despise them as they are considered agents of foreign imperialism and symbolise the frightfulness that holds the population in subjection.

The consolidated Druse and Syrian forces under Bakri, the former member of the Syrian government, are concentrating forces on cutting the Jerusalem railroad which is used by the French for troop movements. Fierce fighting is going on with the French posts endangered.

More French Troops.

Eight hundred more French troops embarked here today to go to the aid of the forces combating Bakri and many transports are reported on the Meditteranean headed for Syria.

On the Damascus-Haifa line Syrian forces hold many strategic points. The battle started yesterday between Damascus and Homs is still raging, but the details of the fighting are not known here. The silence indicates French reverses as they are always prompt in reporting alleged gains.

upon that issue which it is not thot that Japan can break, unless Japan's influence upon China by making still greater concessions herself to Chinese liberation sentiment, can break the Anglo-American accord by making it futile in effect.

The details of the accord are lacking, but Chinese understand fully that it is aimed at making promises of "autonomy" without really granting it and at the same time to work for the interest of the alliance against other imperialist interests, which are definitely Japanese in this instance.

CAPITAL CITY CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY

Wolfe and Tallentire Tell of Russia

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 13.—The eighth anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution in Russia was celebrated here in the Playhouse with speakers for the Workers (Communist) Party, the Young Workers' League and the Juniors, besides a musical program and tableau representing the conditions of the workers in four countries— England, France, Germany and China—as contrasted with the favorable conditions in the Soviet Union.

Eulogizes Frunze.

The Playhouse was filled to capacity, over three hundred being present, and the first speaker, Comrade Seigman of San Francisco, who was chairman, opened the meeting with a review of the life and eulogy of Comrade Frunze, late commissar of war in the Soviet Union. After paying silent tribute to his memory the audience sang the International and the musical program began, which was well-liked by the audience.

Helen Gorewitz, the youngest member of the Y. W. L. in this city, recited two revolutionary poems, and Sophie Jackerman, secretary of the Y. W. L., outlined the aims and objects of the league and appealed to the boys and girls present to join it and help fight for Communism.

Tallentire Speaks.

Norman Tallentire, district organizer, reviewed the struggle between Soviet Russia and the capitalist world in a very able address. Then he dealt with the importance of maintaining The DAILY WORKER in order to defen dthe working class in their present struggles and lead them to new and more effective struggles. His appeal for a collection brot a response of $50.

Russia Stabilized.

Bertram D. Wolfe, of New York, spoke and dealt with the progress of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. He showed the gradual growth of power and the technical improvements since 1917, declaring that Russia, of all countries in Europe, was stabilised and the other European governments were in a state of chaos.

His remarks were well received by the audience and frequent applause interspersed his effective portrayal of the rise of the proletariat to complete power in Russia.

Unveiling of Dublin Memorial Cross Scene Rebuked by Republicans

DUBLIN, Ireland, Nov. 13—Enraged at the brazen efforts of the British agents who unveiled a memorial cross to the Irish war dead at 11 o'clock here today in commemoration of armistice day, republican sympathizers threw smoke bombs into the demonstation causing considerable confusion and quick dispersal of the crowd after a mere pretense at conducting the exercises.

All thinking elements, not bribed by Britain, are incensed that such a performance should be attempted, inasmuch as the Irish condemned the war and its British associations.

Your neighbor will appreciate the favor—give him this copy of the DAILY WORKER.

WORKERS' MASS PICKETING WINS STRIKE; OFFICIALS WHO OPPOSED STRIKERS TRY TO TAKE CREDIT

(By a Worker Correspondent.)

Now that the 19-week strike of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America against the International Tailoring Co. and the J. L. Taylor Co., a subsidiary of the International Tailoring Co., has been won, the officials of the Amalgamated are parading about as tho they were responsible for the victory. At the strike meeting that was held they would pat each other on the back and say "stand behind the officials, for they won the strike."

Let us see whether it was the militancy of the workers themselves or the actions of the officials that won the strike.

Company Does Not Sign Contract.

When the contract which the union had made with the bosses expired on May 1, 1925, a number of the bosses signed up. The bosses of the International Tailoring Co. and the J. L. Taylor Co. refused to sign up a renewal of the old contract. They did not flatly refuse, but found excuse after excuse to drag out the question of the renewal of the contract.

In the meantime, the bosses of the International got in touch with the scabby United Garment Workers of America, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, signed a contract with them and then notified the members of the Amalgamated that they no longer could employ them as a contract had been signed with the heads of the United Garment Workers' Union and not with the Amalgamated.

Officials Try Bulldozing Members.

In face of this lockout, the officials of the Amalgamated were forced to follow the steps that had been outlined by members of the shop to strike on May 1, which would have tied up the plant in the very midst of the busy season and thus forced the company to renew the contract. The officials have long ago forgotten the use of the strike weapon and when we insisted on a strike they babied us along telling us that an "agreement would be signed the next week," "the next day," "that a conference was being held that day," etc., until the bosses had locked us out.

The members of the Amalgamated working in the shop, declared a strike on June 27, 1925, and the officials were forced to sanction it. Members of the Amalgamated that had been working in other shops, but were out of work at the time, realizing that this strike was not only a strike of the workers in the International Tailoring Co., but a strike of the entire Amalgamated against the wage-slashing and open-shop drive of the employers, joined the strikers in the picketing of the plant.

Opposed Mass Picketing.

This did not suit the officials. They did not want to see mass picketing. They elected and hired "committees" that would take care of the strike. In order to discourage mass picketing on the part of the strikers and those who were aiding the strikers, the officials had joint meetings of various shops called, where they told the workers that they should not go down on the picket line as "committees" were handling the affair and that their picketing of the plant might destroy whatever "good" work the "committees" would be able to do.

Their appeals were unheeded and mass picketing continued. The objections of the officials became stronger and it was only after the mass picketing of the New York plant by the New York Left-Wing Committee of Action, following which over 80 of those in the shop in key positions, that were turning out the struck work, walked out, adding to the victory of the workers who had organized the mass picketing, did these officials silenced their sharp tongues.

The injunction which the bosses had taken out in New York forbidding the strikers to go within ten blocks of the struck plant, was violated and shattered not by any official action or organization work of the officials, but by the left wing, whom the Hillman machine kept out of the strike meeting, after they had hopelessly shattered the injunction that J. L. Reiss, president of the International Tailoring and J. L. Taylor com. panies, had hoped would gain the bosses an important victory in the fight against the amalgamated.

"Readjustments" Promised.

When signing the contracts with the bosses on May 1, 1925, the officials promised the employers that if conditions necessitated a change in rate of production or wages, that each plant, that found itself unable to meet its competition, could appeal to the union and that a "readjustment" conference would be held and attempts would be made to "readjust" the conditions in the plant.

The bosses are now taking advantage of that promise, which they know the union officials will break their necks to keep, and are appealing for a "readjustment" conference.

Shall We Lose Victory?

The strike of the workers of the International Tailoring company was a strike against wage cuts. Tho the bosses were forced to grant the demands of the workers following the mass demonstrations in front of their plants that were so tied up, that they were unable to fill the smallest portion of the orders that they had on hand, yet in these "readjustment" conferences of the union heads and the bosses, this victory of the workers will be negated by the granting of wage cuts and the sacrificing of other conditions which the strikers won, not only for themselves but also for other shops.

There is but one course open to those of us who are in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and that is we must take advantage of this victory which we have won and organize ourselves against wage cuts and "readjustments" that the bosses will attempt in their efforts to make us return to the standards of 1910.

We have learned from this strike that we can fight, and that our officials cannot fight and don't want to fight, and that it's up to us who have won the fight, to protect our interests.

WORKERS IN BIG BIZ CITADEL WILL HEAR OF COAL MINERS' STRIKE

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 13—Pat Toohey, member of the national executive committee of the Young Workers League and recently released from jail in the anthracite coal region for his participation in the anthracite miners' strike, will speak here Monday evening, December 7, at the Workmen's Circle Hall, 1337 Seventh Ave., N. W.

Circulars are being printed and will be distributed to all union meetings in the city in an effort to get as many workers to this meeting as possible so that they may learn the condition of the miners in the Pennsylvania anthracite coal fields.

PURCELL URGES UNITY TO KEEP EIGHT-HOUR DAY

Workers Must Unite to Fight Bosses

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—Albert A. Purcell, noted British trade union leader, who is to speak at the two meetings at Central Opera House and the New Star Casino on Tuesday, Nov. 17 points out the fact that the issue of the eight-hour day is vitally bound up with the question of international trade union unity. In a statement released today by the trade union committee for organizing the Purcell meetings, Mr. Purcell reviews the situation in various countries of the world, and points out the necessity for trade union unity if the eight-hour day is to be maintained. His comment is in part as follows:

"What is the situation as regards the hours of labor thruout the world today? In Germany, as a result of the Dawes plan, the eight-hours day is dead; the normal working day is nine to ten hours and more. In France the legal recognition of the eight-hour day is little better than a mockery. In Czecho-Slovakia the trade unions complain that the employers evade the eight-hour day 'by a skillful system of overtime' and so all over Europe. We need no reminding, I hope, of the long hours worked in India, China, and other eastern countries. Here in England the argument of longer hours on the continent is being openly used by the employers, notably in mining and engineering as a pretext for lengthening the working day.

Russia Has 8-Hour Day

"On the other hand, there is one country in the world where the eight-hour day (and the six-hour day in certain trades) is a reality — workers' Russia. If we are serious in our will to maintain the 8-hour day, then surely unity with the Russian trade unions is worth while for that object alone. Indeed, it is more than just worth while; it is absolutely essential.

"Taken all round, then, the 8-hour day is a fine international rallying cry for the workers of the world. What we want is a world-wide agitation; but for that to succeed we surely must have international unity."

Committee Mets Sunday.

The next conference of the trade union committee before the big Purcell meetings will be held on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 15, at 3 p. m., at Beethoven Hall, 210 E. Fifth St. Interested trade unions are sending delegates to this conference.

Standard Oil Company Has Little Fellow Beat

OMAHA, Nov. 13.—Rumblings of another gas war in Omaha, which has driven the price to as low as ten cents a gallon during the last eight months, were heard today as the price cutting companies boosted their price 2¼ cents, while the Standard Oil Co. remains unchanged at 14 cents.

Close observers believe the Standard Oil Co. has eventually got the smaller companies in a "corner" and now is going to force them out of business.

In Hopeless Discord.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13—President Coolidge's Muscle Shoals commission, which he appointed a year ago to advise on a method of disposition of this vast property, is in "hopeless discord," Russell Bower, American farm bureau representative on the commission, reported to the president.

CONNECTICUT DISTRICT ARRANGES FOR REORGANIZATION MEETINGS

The following meetings have been arranged in the Connecticut district by the District Executive Committee:

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—Monday, November 16.
NAUGATUCK, R. I.—Thursday, November 19.
WATERBURY, CONN.—Friday, November 20.
TORRINGTON, CONN.—Saturday, November 21.
HARTFORD, CONN.—Wednesday, November 25.

NEW LONDON, CONN.—Monday, November 30.

These meetings are being held for reorganization purposes and it is extremely important that the membership in the respective cities named above attend these meetings.

FIVE BIG NORTHWESTERN RAILROADS SHOW LARGE PROFITS FOR SEPTEMBER

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.— Reports filed by the five big northwestern roads—the St. Paul, Soo, Chicago & Northwestern, Northern Pacific and the Great Northern—with the interstate commerce commission for September show an increase in revenue and net earnings—camouflage for profits.

These roads had a gross revenue of $60,252,016, an increase of 9.5 per cent.

Profits Run High.

Net revenues, or profits, totaled $16,855,855.

As far as the profits of the individual roads are concerned, the Soo road showed a gain of 87.5 per cent, the Great Northern 40.7 per cent; the Northern Pacific 35.5 per cent; the Chicago & Northwestern 15.4 and the St. Paul 13.3 per cent.

All the roads showed a decrease in their maintenance expenditures, with the exception of the St. Paul for the first eight months of 1925, over the same period last year.

Why Rate Increases?

It will be remembered that the interstate commerce commission has granted many of these roads permission to raise commuters' rates, especially to the Chicago & Northwestern, which was given the right to boost fares 20 per cent before. The Chicago & Northwestern pleaded that the road was losing heavily and that it needed this increase in order to be able to make expenses and in the face of the profit that was being realized on the road, the interstate commerce commission granted the increase.

WIDOW CHARGES NAVAL OFFICERS URGED PERJURY

Shows Up Tricks of Wilbur Agents

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—A new sensation was sprung in today's session of the court martial trial of Col. William Mitchell, charged with violating the rules of military discipline for criticizing his superior officials. Mrs. Zachary Landsdowne, widow of the commander of the ill-fated Shenendoah, the dirigible that was sent on a political tour of the state fairs by the govrenment, and collapsed in a storm with heavy loss of life, was on the stand most of the morning.

She dropped a bombshell into the camp when she accused high navy officials of trying to induce her to give false testimony at the naval court of inquiry on the Shenendoah disaster in which her husband lost his life.

Advocated Perjury.

The naval officers tried to get her to commit perjury before the board of inquiry, and one of them, Capt. John Foley, was judge advocate of the board of inquiry. Mrs. Landsdowne testified that Mrs. George W. Steele, Jr., wife of the commandant at Lakehurst, visited her and gave her a letter from Capt. Foley asking her to lie about the attitude of her husband toward the flight of the Shenendoah.

The other officer who called was Capt. Walter B. Gherardi, aid to secretary of the navy, Wilbur, who tried to persuade her not to blame Wilbur and the political aspirations of the Coolidge administration for the ill-fated flight over county fairs so that the farmers of the middle west could be made to realize something of the naval program of the government.

The case is being intently watched by agents of airplane manufacturers as well as those who represent the steel trust, manufacturing armour plate for battleships.

Former Senator Clark's Estate Is $47,763,508

BUTTE, Mont., Nov. 13.—Inventory and appraisement of the estate of the late Senator W. A. Clark, filed in district court here, fixes the total value at $47,763,508.

GENNA GUNMEN GET FOURTEEN YEARS IN JAIL

Police "Shake-up" Is Still-Born

Albert Anselmi and John Scalice the two Genna men, who were tried for the murder of two Chicago policemen and during whose trial charges were made that over 300 Chicago policemen were on the payroll of the Genna gang of bootleggers, have been found guilty and sentenced to 14 years in jail by the jurors, who sat at the trial.

Verdict Compromise

The verdict came after many hours of battling in which the various technical points raised by the defense attorneys as to the right of citizens to resist arrest were raised. A number of the jurors stood out for acquittal, others demanded a verdict of guilty of manslaughter and others demanded the death penalty. The verdict is looked upon as a compromise.

The incident which threatened to expose the whole police force as part of the Genna machinery in selling booze in Cook county has been glossed over by the police and the state prosecutors.

Police Had "Evidence."

During a tilt between the attorney for the Genna gunmen and the chief of police, it was brought out that the police had taken the payroll list for three months during a raid, they had staged on the Italian-American Club headquarters on West Taylor Street, within a few hours of the Genna murder. The attorney showed that if the police want to "clean up" they had more evidence then he had.

When the chief of police attempted to "whitewash" the raiders and himself by stating that the raid was in search of gallons of moonshine and shotguns, the attorney wanted to know why they ripped off wall-paper, coverings of chairs and wrecked a table and showed the the list he had was one that the raiding squad had overlooked in their eagerness to destroy "evidence" that might show the "efficient" servants of "law and order" as employes of one of the worst gang in the city.

Shakeups Never Come.

The shakeups promised by the police department and heralded by the capitalist press have not taken place as yet. A few patrolman who received the "ten-spots" may be effected, but it is doubtful if the big guns will ever be called to account for their $100-a-month "salaries" from the Gennas.

Costumers Strike at Metropolitan Opera; Picket Line Strong

By A Worker Correspondent

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—The Metropolitan Opera House in New York is being picketed this week by members of Local No. 38 of the Ladies' Tailors Costume and Alteration Workers' Union, on strike against the Metropolitan Opera Co.

Many of the strikers have worked for the company as many as 15 years, being specialized mechanics in the theatrical costume trade. Their union is striking as a result of the opera company's failure to come to an agreement with them.

Expedition to the Urals.

MOSCOW, Nov. 13.—An expedition to the Ural Mountains has been organized with the aim of investigating living conditions of the workers at the end of the 18th and commencement of the 19th century.

More than 350 hitherto uninvestigated factory documents have been discovered which are of enormous interest to historians. Many relics of the past have also been found. For instance, the expedition has made a collection of headgear of the commencement of the 19th century, a collection of implements of punishment, some old cut-glass, and pictures painted by chattel slave artists.

Seventy-Five Per Cent Cancellation

When Secretary of the Treasury Mellon announced on Thursday that the Italian debt agreement was the most liberal that had been granted any debtor nation, his language was too reserved. The terms of the settlement amount to a 75% cancellation, counting interest, of the entire amount due his country.

Just as we predicted, the House of Morgan secures domination of Italy and stands back of the Mussolini tyranny. On the field of international politics it means that Italy, like France, is to be an ally of this country in its world-wide struggle against Great Britain.

Thru this agreement the taxpayers of the United States make up the difference between what Italy was originally supposed to pay and what she will pay. The Italian debt was floated by money obtained from the sale of liberty bonds during the world war. These bonds are supposed to draw interest of four per cent guaranteed by the United States government. Italy has sixty-two years in which to pay her debt, now reduced to 25% of the original, but during those 62 years the American government will have to pay seventy-five per cent more to the holders of liberty bonds than is collected from Italy. That is the theory of the thing. In practice these bonds will be beaten down on the exchanges to such a degree that the small holders will unload them and Morgan will buy them and collect the interest from the government. Hence, altho the terms to Italy seem, in the words of Mellon, "most liberal," the House of Morgan will lose nothing. It is the taxpayers who will bear the burden. Thus the debt burden is removed from the Italy of Mussolini and placed upon the United States. A larger part than formerly of the surplus derived from the exploitation of labor will flow into the hands of Morgan. In the last analysis it means that the workers of the United States who fought the war will be compelled to slave still harder in order that Morgan's investments in Italy may be secured and that Mussolini may obtain the credits necessary to enable him to continue crushing the working class of that country. It also means that ere long American industries will face a slowing down of production as commodities produced by the Morganized industries of Italy enter the world market in huge quantities.

Practical results for imperialism are already realized. While the terms are so easy that Italy only needs to pay $5,000,000 per year for the next five years, the House of Morgan, according to Wall Street advices in the capitalist press, is preparing to float a $100,000,000 loan to the Italian government, and at least $50,000,000 worth of industrial bonds to shortly follow. So, by paying the mere bagatelle of $5,000,000, Italy gets from Morgan the sum of $150,000,000, or thirty times the sum paid.

When bank capital penetrates a nation the object is not to realize the principal invested, but to obtain interest and profits forever. Already Wall Street dominates the Italian government and with the debt settlement now realized the complete domination of American finance capital over all Italian industry will soon also be realized.

The political reflex of the settlement in Italy was instantaneous. No sooner had advices that the settlement was a greed upon reached Rome than the most fierce suppression was resumed and new laws are being enacted that extend the power of Mussolini to the point of absolutism.

The settlement embraces a period of 62 years. To the revolutionist this is ironic, for the working class of both the United States and Italy—and the rest of the world—will write finis to the rule of the Mussolinis and Morgans long before that time has expired.

Berry Heard From

George L. Berry, dress parade major, and head of his personally conducted International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union, is perfectly at home among the yokels of the fundamentalist belt. From his native hearth in Tennessee he delivered a public harrangue at Morristown, on Armistice Day. This army officer and fascist, who did not fight, paid lip service to those privates who served as cannon fodder and died on soil that he feared to tread. Amidst the piffle with which he regaled the fundamentalists, the major didn't forget to recite his monolog against the vanguard of the labor movement that has exposed him so thoroly that even Tammany's candidates issue special letters to disassociate themselves from him. Said Berry:

> "There is no wealth in the mere accumulation of moneys. Wealth is in one's ability to contribute to and enlighten a happy civilization. It would (sic) seem to me this is fundamental and is representative of the real antidote to autocracy and will do much to stiffle the growth of Communism."

Berry's recommendation for dealing with Communists is "to apply the same remedy as it applied to the deserter in time of war."

In fact Berry wants the government to treat rebels against its despotism in the same way as he treats opponents of his autocracy in the Pressmen's Union. The difference being that the government would at one fell stroke murder the Communists, instead of trying to deprive them of a means of livelihood by filling their places with union scabs as does the major.

The statement of Berry that mere accumulation of money is not wealth, can be taken for what it is worth by those who know Berry's history. The members of local unions whose treasuries he has pillaged are the best judges of Berry's attitude toward this question. If wealth is in one's ability to "contribute to enlighten a happy civilization," Berry would be a bedraggled pauper. His contribution to anything except devising new methods of betraying the working class being absolutely nil.

It is laughable to hear this capitalist lackey talk of antidotes to autocracy. He fears Communism because he knows the growing influence of Communists in the American labor movement means the end of his regime, when he will have to depend for pay upon the capitalist class that he serves, instead of bludgeoning dues out of pressmen who are so unfortunate as to find themselves under his despotism.

The graduates of the Ann Arbor naval academy must receive training in plain and fancy perjury, if the testimony of Mrs. Landsdowne, widow of the late commander of the wrecked Shenandoah, is correct.

PROGRESSIVE MINERS' DEMAND UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF WITH A SIX-HOUR DAY, FIVE-DAY WEEK

The following is the eleventh of a series of twelve articles on the great anthracite strike, now going on for two and a half months, involving 158,000 miners. The present article deals with the program of the Progressive Miners' Committee, of which Alex Reid, author of the articles, is the secretary.

• • • •

By ALEX REID,
(Secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee.)

ARTICLE XI.

We come now to the balance of the progressive miners' program, every point of which was, at one time or other, one of the major demands of the United Mine Workers of America.

At the miners' convention in Cleveland in 1919, John L. Lewis said: "Recognizing that unemployment is a constant threat and menace to the security, happiness and prosperity of the miners of the United States, which unemployment is created by the over-development of the mining industry, we recommend and declare for a six-hour day, five-day week and recommend that the full power and influence of the United Mine Workers be used to attain that end."

Offered in "Good Faith."

Since the convention, Farrington, president of the Illinois miners has alternately indorsed and repudiated that policy and at Peoria, in the Illinois Miners' convention in 1924, William Green, now the president of the American Federation of Labor, said, "I have always felt that our proposal for a shorter work day in the coal mines of the country offered at least a partial solution of this unemployment problem." And again Green stated, "Our proposition for a shorter work day is offered in good faith as a partial solution of this problem of unemployment."

But this is all changed now. John L. Lewis has reached the presidency of the United Mine Workers and Green dines in Wall Street. No more do they mention the six-hour day or five-day week, but on the contrary, their gang aids in jailing, persecuting, and prosecuting any worker that mentions it.

The Farrington gang, and the Cappellini fakers are expelling from the union any and all, that fight for those policies, but the progressive miners still have the six-hour day and five-day week high up on their program, and will carry their program to victory in spite of all the Greens, Lewises, Farringtons, Cappellinis, and jails in America.

It is very interesting to see how the Lewis machine have tried to smother this program and substitute their pet remedy for unemployment.

Squeeze Out 200,000.

They propose regular employment for fifty per cent of the miners at the expense of total unemployment to the remaining fifty per cent. Lewis states, "There are over two hundred thousand too many miners in the industry."

His remedy is to squeeze out this two hundred thousand. He does not state where this two hundred thousand will receive employment. He does not state that every industry in America has its surplus labor supply, that workers from all industries are walking the streets seeking employment and none to be found.

He does not make any mention of too many officers, with their padded expenses, but we know there have been none of the upper strata of labor squeezed out, and nothing has been said in that connection.

Equalize Work.

The progressive miners deny that a squeezing out of coal diggers is necessary to the stabilization of the industry. Every miner is a part of the industry. Every miner is entitled to a living from the industry, they have grown up in it, and know no other, and is fitted for no other division of the available labor in the mines, and to receive that, we demand the six-hour day and five-day week.

We further demand a minimum wage for the workers in the mine. Why? The mine workers many times —as shown by the coal commission's report are prevented from work thru no fault of their own, because of falls of roof, breakdown of machinery, gas in working places, lack of material and cars, etc., and have to return home many days from the mine without earning a penny.

No Excuse for Most Lost Time.

NEW YORK-BOUND TRAIN CRASHES INTO EXPRESS ON WAY TO WASHINGTON

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—Train No. 6 of the Pennsylvania railroad, bound from St. Louis to New York, crashed into the rear end of the Washington express, during heavy fog two miles west of Monhouth Junction, N. J., killing a number of passengers and critically injuring more than a dozen.

The heavy locomotive of Train No. 6 crashed into the rear sleeper of the Washington express and trapped those in the car. The Pullman car ahead of this was also wrecked. Only four of the 19 in the last car escaped injury. A number of casualties resulted in the car ahead.

Rescue parties were immediately organized in Newark, Jersey City, Trenton and New Brunswick and the injured that were first taken from the wreck were rushed to Trenton and New Brunswick.

"As We See It" Monday, Nov. 16

Beginning next week, "As We See It," the column edited by T. J. O'Flaherty, will again appear in The DAILY WORKER as one of its regular features.

This bright, analytical comment on the events of the day—graced with the keen wit of the well-known writer, is the very best reason to induce your friends to

SUBSCRIBE!

The miners know that most of this lost time is preventable and proper management would eliminate over 75 per cent of lost time with proper efficiency management. Seventy-five per cent of falls would be eliminated if proper material was delivered and used in time.

There is no excuse for gas being the cause of unemployment, but as long as the operators have nothing to pay for this loss of time and the miner is the only victim, nothing will be done to remedy it.

The miners know what it means to them, it is one of the greatest menaces to existence, and the progressive miners will fight on for a minimum wage, in spite of the coal companies and Lewis' opposition.

Unemployment Benefits.

The progressive miners demand unemployment benefits. We hold the industry can, and must take care of its employes during shut downs, or during the time that men are prevented from work thru the failure of the operators to furnish us working places.

The coal commission pointed out "That the miners' wages were reduced thru lack of being furnished another working place when their place was finished," and every miner knows that he does not average more than fifty per cent time thruout the year. We have the right to live, and our life is dependent on the right to work, we demand that work, or unemployment benefits be paid us, until work is furnished us.

Relief in Many Countries.

The official figures that I quoted in my former articles dealing with the enormous profits of the coal owners show that unemployment benefits can be paid by the industry. We are not alone in this demand. Many governments have officially recognized the right to work, to live, and where work was not supplied that unemployment benefits be paid.

Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, and various countries of Europe, particularly Great Britain, have enacted laws which furnish unemployment relief to the workers.

The progressive miners have made a fight to have unemployment relief measures made a part of the miners' program, and introduced the subject matter to the tri-district convention of the hard coal miners, but the Lewis-Cappellini machine harkened to the voice of Wall Street and the miners' demand was temporarily shelved.

The fight of the progressives is hard and meets the combined opposition of Wall Street and the reactionary labor leaders, but their program is becoming understood, and when explained to the miners and a little better known thruout the anthracite, and bituminous as well, all the Wall Streets and reactionary labor leaders in America, will not be able to prevent the incorporation of our demands in the official program and a finish fight for their victory.

We realize that as long as private ownership of the mining industry prevails, we will have the same f that is going on now, hence our desire to eliminate private ownership. Nationalization of the mines was also put forward as part of our program and I will discuss this in my next article

WORKERS' SCHOOL TO CELEBRATE OPENING OF BROWER LIBRARY

NEW YORK, Nov. 13—The Workers School will celebrate the opening of the Brower Memorial Library with an entertainment and dance on Thanksgiving Eve, Thursday, Nov. 25th, at the school headquarters, 108 East 14th Street.

An elaborate and interesting program has been prepared for the event, which students and friends of the Workers' School have been eagerly awaiting. Made possible by the generosity of relatives and friends of Comrade Charles Brower, an active member of Local Brownsville who died over a year ago, the Brower Memorial Library has already acquired several hundred books, hundreds of pamphlets, files of revolutionary papers and magazines, and promises to become a reading and study center for militant workers of New York.

None should miss the opening on Thanksgiving Eve. Admission is only 35 cents—and much fun is in store for those who attend. Tickets can be obtained at the office of the school. Get them now!

WORKER CORRESPONDENTS' CLASS TO START FRIDAY WITH ENGDAHL, DUNNE AND CARLSON AS TEACHERS

A class for worker correspondents is being organized by the district agitprop in Chicago. The first meeting will be held on Friday, November 20, 1925, 8 p. m., at The DAILY WORKER office, 1113 W. Washington Blvd.

This worker correspondents' class is primarily a practical course which will result in getting the comrades from the shops and factories to write in shop experiences and stories. The course will be conducted in such a fashion that worker correspondents are trained and make contributions while they learn. The members of the class will write articles and stories on conditions in their shops; these stories will be used in the columns of The DAILY WORKER and other party papers. There will be discussion and criticism of these stories by the workers' correspondents and the instructors.

The class for workers' correspondents will be conducted by Comrades Wm. F. Dunne, J. Louis Engdahl, editors of The DAILY WORKER; and Oliver Carlson, circuit lecturer for the Workers' School in the Chicago district. Comrade Dunne's pamphlet on the training and use of workers' correspondents will be used as one of the texts.

Special letters on this class have been sent to nearly 100 workers in the shops and factories of Chicago and Pullman, asking them to join the correspondents' class. Any comrade, however, who wishes to join this class may do so by registering at the District Party Office, 19 South Lincoln street, or by coming to the first meeting on Friday, Nov. 20, at The DAILY WORKER, 1113 West Washington Blvd.

SHOP NUCLEI IN ILLINOIS COAL MINES HAVE BEGUN TO FUNCTION

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 13.—Within a month's existence on a shop nuclei basis the party units at Springfield, Ill., have enrolled six new members and thereby aided materially in increasing the organized militant forces amongst the miners in that locality.

Party shop nuclei are functioning in five different mines, the Devroux mine, the Old West mine, the Old North mine, the Woodside mine, the Sangamon Mine No. 2. The party fractions function in the local unions endeavoring to give real organized expression to the fight against the policy of rule or ruin pursued by Frank Farrington and his helpers.

During the sharp clashes when the high handed actions of Farrington resulted in the ejection from office to which they were duly elected of Sub-District President Freeman Thompson and Secretary J. J. Watt, one of our party members held the office of checkweighman at one of the Springfield mines. He at several instances had difficulties in finding just where he fitted in and always take a stand squarely in the front ranks of the progressive miners. Before the subsequent elections the party fraction decided that he could not again run for the office, at least not until he had become clear as to what party policies imply in the everyday activities amongst organized workers. He did not become a candidate but he is now making good and showing himself a better fighter.

The Miners' Educational League is functioning within the Springfield sub-district and there is no intention on their part to give up the fight for the right of progressive elements holding office within the union. The party shop nuclei members are taking the leadership. However, the tendency toward limiting the educational league to delegates from the various locals and local union progressive groups is wrong. The league must be built up as a genuine mass organization in which every adherent becomes an active member.

Thruout the Southern Illinois coal fields the party is rapidly becoming reorganized on a shop nuclei basis. West Frankfort when completed, will have six such units, Christopher, two; Zeigler already has two functioning nuclei, while one or two are being organized in several of the other small coal cities.

In the Southern Illinois steel center, in Granite City and Madison, shop nuclei are being organized. One is being established in each one of the steel mills and one of the big foundries composed of a number of live party members. With common laborers being paid 38½ cents per hour for a ten-hour work day and conditions of slave driving almost equal to any steel center there are plenty of activities for these nuclei to engage in.

The party membership being quite scattered in St. Louis, Mo., the first steps taken towards reorganization have been the division of the city into two sections within which the language branch lines will disappear. There are immediate possibility of organization of a shop nucleus in a large clothing factory.

In East St. Louis, Ill., steps are being taken toward the formation of a shop nucleus in the packinghouse.

Milwaukee Notes

Local Milwaukee, Wis., Workers (Communist) Party, District No. 8, has made rapid headway in the reorganization of the party on the basis of shop nuclei. Section membership meetings have been held with the results that four shop nuclei have been organized. They are:

1. Allis Chalmers nucleus, (automobile plant) 22 members. 2. Seaman Body shop nucleus (automobile body makers) 8 members. 3. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul Railroad shops, 8 members. 4. International Harvester Co., 8 members.

This is an average of 12 members to a shop. The character of the nuclei and the sizes indicate real possibilities for growth and work.

Comrade Karl Mikalachky, sub-district organizer, declares that the party will put fullest energies toward developing the shop nuclei. They have elected the necessary officers and have gotten down to work.

The total membership in Milwaukee in the former English and language branches was only 150. This means that nearly one-third of the membership is already organized into genuine shop nuclei organizations.

There are good prospects that virtually the total membership will remain in the party either in the shop or street nuclei, nearly 70 per cent of members attended the various section meetings which is a very high average.

The street nuclei are now being sub-divided into smaller units. Some of the members will be placed perhaps in shop nuclei and efforts will be made to develop street nuclei into shop nuclei organizations.

Extend State Reservation.

MOSCOW, Nov. 12.—The territory of the Ponza state reservation has been extended by the inclusion of three new sections with a total area of 817 dessiatins consisting of pine forests and marshes.

Extremely rare and valuable plants are found in these sections. Thus, in the Arbanev reservation are growing 10 species of the third pre-glacial varieties of vegetation which are rapidly disappearing. The rarest among these is the Altaian anemona.

A scientific expedition is being organized to explore the fisheries of the lakes and rivers of this region.

HEAVY BLOWS STRUCK FOR LABOR PRESS

Three heavy blows were struck for The DAILY WORKER today with the receipt of remittances from three far-away cities—$83.30 from San Francisco, Cal.; $71.00 from Buffalo, N. Y., Finnish branch of the Workers Party; and $62.25 from Hanna, Wyo., where Finnish comrades are always on the job.

The total amount, however, is less than $300.00, not one-thirtieth of what must be raised within the next two weeks.

Today's list is as follows:

Walter Kraft, Chicago, Ill.	$ 5.00
Arthur Klainman, Bronx, N. Y.	1.00
Cleveland, O., and Philadelphia, Pa., W. P. meetings	15.40
San Francisco, Cal., Soviet celebration	83.30
Polish Br., W. P., Neffs, Ohio, (collected by Mary Hornik and K. Obraska)	14.50
Michael Nahpka, Detroit, Mich.	5.00
Hanna, Wyo., D. W. stamps and Soviet celebration	62.25
English Br., W. P., Detroit, Mich.	7.00
Grand Rapids, Mich. (Soviet celebration)	7.50
G. Tuchelski, Detroit, Mich.	10.00
F. L. V. Blazina, Rankin, Pa.	2.00
Lithuanian Br. 15, W. P., Elizabeth, N. J.	5.00
Finnish Br., W. P., Buffalo, N. Y.	71.00
John Kaulta, Detroit, Mich.	2.00
So. Slavic Women Workers Club "Svijetlo," Kansas City, Kan.	10.00
Today's total	$ 290.95
Previously reported	18,284.74
Total to date	$18,575.69

LAST MINUTE CHECKS HELP TO RESCUE DAILY WORKER

Last minute remittances to tide The DAILY WORKER over the present bad crisis brought in $312.85 more, rushed in from WORKERS PARTY branches.

A check for $32.00 came from Lithuanian Br. 96 of Helen, W. Va., including $5.00 from Street Nucleus 2 of Chicago Section 3. Three other checks contained proceeds from the Soviet celebration meetings, including a partial payment of $150.00 from Cleveland, O.; a partial payment of $95.00 from Philadelphia, Pa.; and $35.85 from Maynard, Mass.

With the $18,575.69 received earlier, the total amount to date is thus brot to $18,888.54.

Russian Labor's Tasks in 1906

By V. I. Lenin

The following article by Comrade Lenin appeared for the first time in the Molodaja Rossija (Young Russia) of 4th January 1906. Ed.

WHEREIN consists the peculiarty of the situation of the great Russian revolution? It consists in the fact that the further events have completely exposed with all its hollowness of the Czar's Manifesto of 17th October. The constitutional illusions have been destroyed. Reaction prevails all along the line. Despotism has been completely restored, it has even been "deepened" by the dictatorial rights of Eastern satrapism, beginning with Dubassov[*] right down to the lower police authorities.

Civil war is raging. The political strike, as such, is beginning to exhaust itself, it is beginning to be left behind as a obsolete form of the movement in the past. In St. Petersburg, for example, the exhausted and enfeebled workers were not able to carry thru the December strike. On the other hand the movement, although it is stifled for the present by the reaction, has doubtless reached a much higher stage.

The heroic Moscow proletariat showed that it is possible to conduct an active struggle, and drew along with it a mass of such sections of the population who have hitherto been politically indifferent, if not reactionary. The Moscow events, however, represent one of the most definite forms of the "tendency" which revealed itself in all the corners of Russia. The new form of action was confronted with tasks of such a gigantic character that they of course could not be solved at one stroke. These tasks are now, however, clearly confronting the entire people, the movement is being raised to a higher level, it is becoming steeled and consolidated. The revolution can no longer be deprived of these achievements.

Dubassov's cannons revolutionized enormous masses of fresh people. The new farce of the Duma encountered far greater hostility in the ranks of the advanced fighters and an incomparably greater scepticism in the ranks of the bourgeoisie than did the old Bulygin Duma.

What is the situation now?

We will look the facts straight in the face. A new task now confronts us of assimilating and analysing the lessons of recent forms of struggle, a work of preparing and organizing the forces in the chief centers of the movement.

It would be of great advantage to the government to suppress, as hitherto, the scattered and isolated actions of the proletariat. The government would very much like to provoke the workers in St. Petersburg to immediate struggle under most disadvantageous conditions for the latter. The workers, however, will not respond to this provocation and will succeed in pursuing their own course of independent preparation for the further action which will extend over the whole country.

Forces are to hand for such an action: they are growing more quickly than we. Only a limited portion of these forces were drawn into the stream of the December events. The movement has not by a long way revealed its entire breadth and depth.

Let us cast a glance at the moderate bourgeois and ultra-reactionary press. Nobody, not even the Novoye Vremya (The New Times, organ of the reactionary nobility. Ed.) places any belief in the boastings of the government that it will immediately nip any new action in the bud. Nobody doubts that the enormous inflammable material—the peasantry—will really blaze up next spring. Nobody believes that the government will or can honestly convene the Duma under the old system of repressions, of bureaucracy, of deprivation of rights, etc.

Not irresponsible acts of revolutionaries, which in such a situation are a hundred times more dangerous than the decisive action, but obvious facts, which are even recognized by opponents of the revolution, go to prove that the "victory" of the government in Moscow has rendered its position more desperate than it was before October

The peasants' revolt is growing. The financial collapse is approaching. The gold currency is losing its value. The deficit of half a milliard rubles cannot be made good even with all the help of the reactionary bourgeoisie of Europe who are hastening to the aid of despotism. All those troops who are ready to fight against the revolution have been called up, but the "pacification of the Caucasus and Siberia" is farther off than ever. The ferment in the army and in the fleet, which found clear expression after the 17th October, will of course not be stifled by the employment of force against the fighters for freedom thruout all Russia. The return of the war prisoners and the return of the Manchurian army will only increase the ferment. The mobilization of fresh divisions of troops against the enemy at home only entails fresh dangers to despotism. The crisis has not only not been solved, on the contrary, it has only been extended by the Moscow "victory."

The socialist labor party must be clear regarding its tasks. Down with the constitutional illusions! The "lessons" of the two great revolutionary months (November and December) must "be collected." Everywhere where it is necessary we must know how to go over into illegality. The enormous tasks of the new action must be faced more definitely, the preparations for the same must be carried out with more perseverance and more systematically, the forces of the proletariat, exhausted by the strikes, must,

THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION OF 1905

WE are now in the days preceding the celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the Russian revolution of 1905.

The day set apart by the Communist International is Dec. 20th. On this day great mass meetings and demonstrations will be held in all parts of the world. In the Union of Soviet Republics the anniversary celebrations will be held in the humblest hamlets as well as in the greatest cities.

This anniversary must receive a fitting observance from great masses of American workers and farmers. In order to better acquaint labor in this country with the 1905 Russian revolution, the forerunner of the Bolshevik triumph of November, 1917, The DAILY WORKER will publish from time to time special articles on the 1905 struggle for power, while in December a special issue will be devoted to this historic event. Read these articles and pass them out among other workers.

The Movement for World Trade Union Unity

By TOM BELL.

This is the fifth instalment of a series of articles dealing with the question of World Trade Union Unity. This instalment deals with the Red International of Labor Unions and International Trade Union Unity. Following instalments will deal with the American Federation of Labor and Unity, the Development of Trade Union Unity, and What to do for Trade Union Unity.

The Red International of Labor Unions and World Trade Union Unity.

Since its formation, the R. I. L. U. has consistently combatted the treacherous reformistic leadership of Amsterdam, because it is this leadership that is responsible for the split in the trade union movement of the world. As long ago as November, 1922, the R. I. L. U., at its Second World Congress, expressed its viewpoint on the necessity of trade union unity in a thesis in which the following parapgraph is contained:

> "If the workers will not succeed in attacking capitalism by the united front, they will not only suffer new defeats, not only greater misery and slavery will await them, but they will even lose their organizations and remain completely disarmed."

This serves to prove that the slogan of world trade union unity is no mere diabolical plot on the part of the R. I. L. U. or the Communist International, but that this policy and this slogan flow from the fundamental conception of the R. I. L. U. as to the role of the revolutionary trade unions and adherents of the R. I. L. U. in every country.

With the growth of the revolutionary minorities within the trade unions affiliated with Amsterdam, the bureaucracies proved that they were willing even to smash the trade unions rather than allow them to fall into the hands of revolutionary leadership. The splitting of the trade union movement by the reformists has been carried so far in France and Czecho-Slovakia that the trade union movement was cleft in twain in order that the reformists could maintain their positions of leadership. These desperate measures were taken by the social-democratic leadership in order to maintain their position of close alliance with the capitalists that they had maintained thruout the period of the world war. The role of these labor leaders has been correctly stated time and again by the R. I. L. U. as that of the last bulwark of capitalism.

The capitalist offensive upon the standard of living and the organizations of the working class beginning in 1920 found its greatest allies in the leaders of Amsterdam, since they sabotaged every effort of the organized workers to defend themselves against this vicious attack and it was precisely owing to the success of this attack by the international capitalist class upon the working class that the R. I. L. U. issued the slogan of the unity of the world trade union movement in order to successfully combat this attack of the capitalists upon the standard of living and the trade unions of the working class.

At the Third World Congress of the R. I. L. U., July, 1924, the following appears in a resolution regarding the question of international trade union unity:

> "Never for a moment stopping its determined fight against all manifestations of reformism within the international labor movement, mercilessly revealing all its treacherous substance, untiringly explaining this to all workers who do not understand yet the role of reformism as a brake to the struggle of the proletariat for emancipation, the Third Congress, in the interests of a united leadership in the struggle of the workers against the economic offensive of capital and fascist reaction, considers it the most pressing task of its activity to develop a widespread campaign among the working masses in favor of the unity of the international labor union movement."

From that time on, the R. I. L. U. has not allowed this question merely to be a question of resolutions, but at the Vienna Congress of the Amsterdam International, when the British delegation led by A. A. Purcell raised the question of admittance of the Russian trade unions ino the Amsterdam International, the Central Council of the Russian trade unions telegraphed to Vienna an offer of negotiations to heal the split in the international trade union movement. At the Vienna Congress the usual kind of hypocritical resolution was passed in order to soothe the British delegation. This resolution admitted the possibility of the entry of the Russian trade unions into the Amsterdam International, but had reservations which said that this entry would be "on the basis of the existing statutes of the Amsterdam International" and that "the dignity of the Amsterdam International should be observed."

At the Sixth All-Russian Trade Union Congress there was present a delegation representing the Council of the British Trade Union Congress. At this congress, these leaders re-affirmed their desire for trade union unity. Negotiations carried on during the congress between the British delegation and the Central Council of the Russian trade unions resulted in a resolution being passed by the All-Russian Trade Union Congress calling for the formation of an Anglo-Russian Unity Committee which would work for a closer alliance between the trade unions of Russia and Great Britain and also for the unity of the world trade union mvoement

The significance of this step lies in the fact that the British trade unions form the basis of the Amsterdam International and the Russian trade unions form the basis of the R. I. L. U., and as such the traitorous leadership of the Amsterdam can only fight against the convocation of a congress for the unifying of the trade union movement at the expense of a split with the British trade unions—in other words, a split with their main support in the European labor movement.

Is unity of the trade union movement possible? The two trade union internationals, the Red International of Labor Unions and the Amsterdam International Federation of Trade Unions are separated by a deep gulf of principle and practice. On the one hand, the Amsterdamers have proven themselves to be agents of capitalism working within the labor movement, defenders of capitalism who stand for unity with the capitalist class. On the other hand, the R. I. L. U. stands for uncompromising warfare against capitalism. Amsterdam has unity with the capitalists to preserve capitalism, by sabotaging every struggle of the working class against capitalism, while the R. I. L. U. works to destroy capitalism.

In face of these fundamental differences, why is it that the R. I. L. U. issues the slogan of trade union unity? The objective of the Communists is to win the masses from the reformists for revolutionary struggle against capitalism and the unity of the trade unions will create a broader field in which the Communists will work for winning the masses to the revolutionary banner. The menace of the Dawes plan, fascism, imperialist war and the capitalist offensive on the workers' standard of living can only be combatted by a united front of all workers. For these reasons the R. I. L. U. has issued the slogan and taken practical steps towards effecting world trade union unity.

Bolshevism Against Spilts in Trade Unions.

The struggle for unity in the trade union movement flows logically from the Bolshevik attitude towards the trade unions during the entire history of the Bolshevik Party. The Bolsheviks fought to preserve trade union unity not only when they were in the majority but also when they were in the minority in the trade unions. Prior to the November revolution, when the mensheviks were in the majority in the trade unions, the Bolsheviks combatted all splitting tendencies, considering it one of their major tasks if the proletarian revolution was to be successful, to win the majority of the organized workers to the support of their policy. When the Bolsheviks won a majority in the trade unions, they likewise fought against all splits.

The Communist International and the R. I. L. U fought consistently against those misguided Communists who have from time to time raised the slogan of "Split the trade unions." The kernel of Linin's teaching on Communist work in the trade unions lies precisely in the necessity of preserving unity, fighting all secessionism and dual unionism, and working within the trade unions to win the majority for the revolutionary struggle. Unity of the trade unions is a Bolshevik method of winning the masses.

The passionate earnestness with which Lenin combatted all splitting of the trade unions in his pamphlet, "Left Wing Communism—An Infantile Sickness," shows the importance given to trade union unity by Lenin. Further, his statement that those Communists who leave the trade unions give aid to the reformist bureaucrats by so doing, adds additional emphasis to Lenin's view on the necessity of trade union unity. Lozovsky, in his pamphlet, "The Role of the Trade Unions in the Russian Revolution," states that the revolution is impossible outside of or against the will of the trade unions.

Since its organization the R. I. L. U. has raised the question of trade union unity on an international scale and in various countries has fought the Amsterdamers and their disruption of the trade union movement. An example of his occurred in 1921 when the R. I. L. U. offered as the price of unity of the French trade union movement the liquidation of the revolutionary fractions in the trade unions. This the Amsterdamers rejected, with the result that the trade unions of France were split in two. It is clear, therefore, that to the Communists trade union unity is not only necessary to preserve the standard of living and conditions of work of the working class, but is also a prerequisite for the winning of the masses for the world revolution.

Conditions for Unity.

But, it will be objected, must not the Communists impose conditions upon the Amsterdamers in order to prevent Amsterdam swallowing the Communist trade unions in the event of Amsterdam having a majority if unity is affected? It will be said that the R. I. L. U. should insist that the unified trade union international must fight against the Dawes plan, against the capitalist offensive and against imperialist war.

To put up these conditions is tantamount to rendering unity impossible, because the Amsterdamers will utterly refuse to break their alliance with capitalism. Therefore the R. I. L. U. makes only one demand: The convening of a congress representative of all trade union workers, whether belonging to Amsterdam, the R. I. L. U., or to neither, in order to found a united trade union international. The R. I. L. U. wants unity of the working class irrespective of wherther Amsterdam has the majority and will lead the new trade union international or not, knowing that unity of the working class will lay the basis for a struggle against capitalism and create a broader field in which to carry on the ideological struggle to win the workers for Communism.

Amsterdam's Objections.

On the contrary, the Amsterdamers impose conditions because they are opposed to unity of the working class and want unity with the capitalist class. For this reason the issuance of the slogan of world trade union unity by the R. I. L. U. precipitated a campaign of villification against the unity proposals. The most virulent campaign was led by the German trade union bureaucrats and the leaders of the German social-democratic party against the R. I. L. U. unity proposals. In the Berlin Vorwarts, the reformists expressed their real opposition to world trade union unity when they demanded: Will this world congress demanded by the R. I. L. U. be formed by proportional representation? Will the new trade union international allow national autonomy for the trade unions? Will the new trade union international be inde-

What's Going On in Wall Street

By Earl R. Browder

Profits Going Up; Wages Going Down; How to Change It.

WHEN the small panic occurred in Wall Street the other day, few workers realised that the goings-on there had an intimate relationship with themselves, with their wages and working conditions, and with all the struggles now going on within all their organizations. Let us see if we cannot trace the forces at work, extending from those dramatic ups and downs of the stock exchange, right down thru industry to the pay envelope and to the struggles within the labor organizations.

"Prosperity" Caused the Panic.

PROFITS are increasing with unbelievable rapidity. This is the basis for the great boom in security prices with industrial securities increasing in price every day for twenty days on Wall Street, up until November 10, when the little panic occurred. This "prosperity" was also the cause of the panic.

Every time the rate of profits increase a dollar, it is the tendency of security prices to increase from five to ten dollars. Earnings (as they are jokingly called) and prospective earnings are "capitalized"; that is, the market value is advanced to make the percentage of return "normal." Thereafter, super-human efforts must be exerted to keep profits at the new high level and prepare for new advances—otherwise the new "capitalization," the new but fictitious wealth, would vanish. But in the eager grasping for this "new wealth" created on paper, in the expectation that the increased exploitation of labor will make it real, the speculators on Wall Street overdo the thing a little. This is the natural tendency of speculation, and it also gives the opportunity to shear the "sheep" of petty speculators.

It was this last fact which operated to produce the small panic the other day. The increased "values" of the industrial securities had exceeded for a time the base in visible profits. The sudden decline was then precipitated by the mechanism of the stock market; the Boston branch of the federal reserve bank raised its rediscount rate, tightening up the available credits; some impetus was given thru the newspapers, which published a flood of "financial comment" from the money markets of the world, predicting a break in the New York market; the news of the new agrarian troubles came in the failure of several agrarian banks in Nebraska. Conditions were ideal for shearing the sheep. The sheep were therefore, sheared.

The security market will not go very low. Already, the day after the shearing, it started to recover. There is such a tremendous mass of profits squeezed out of industry this year that capitalism would not be capitalism if it did not breed a lot of new paper wealth. The market will stay high.

The Golden Flood of Industry.

IT will be interesting to take just a little glance at the flow of "earnings" that is at the bottom of Wall Street's feverish activities.

The United States Steel corporation increased its "earnings" steadily thruout 1925. The first quarter it earned $2.93 per share of common stock; the second quarter it earned $3.06 per share; and the third quarter $3.44. This is an increase of more than 17 per cent. Production is increasing steadily, being now well over 80 per cent of the tremendous capacity developed during the war, and promises to continue upward. Conditions for big profits in the future are "favorable."

Railroads are enjoying the era of greatest prosperity known. Just a few examples: The Pennsylvania railroad earned in September, $11,380,679, which is an increase over last year of almost 35 per cent. The B. & O. railroad showed a rich gain. The Western Maryland railroad gained more than 500 per cent.

Eight leading oil companies report profits for the third quarter of 1925 which are two and one-half times as great as the same period last year.

Agricultural machinery manufacturers report an increase of business of 11 per cent over last year, the greatest increase being in the profitable export trade.

Anaconda Copper, which produces one-fourth of the world's supply of that metal, earned its fixed dividend of $6.50 per share in the first six months of the year. Everything it earns in the last six months, with business on the upgrade, is "velvet."

And so the story goes in almost all the principal fields of industry.

How About the Workers?

WITH all this "prosperity," how fares the worker? The answer may be given in one sentence taken from the Magazine of Wall Street (September 26, 1925):

> "Today there is a movement toward wage cutting and several of the basic industries have been affected."

This particular issue of the Magazine of Wall Street could be read with interest and profit by every worker. The article from which we took the above sentence asks the question in its title, "Must Wages Be Lowered to Safeguard Dividends?" It then gives the answer that "the drive to cut wages is an industrial necessity," and "the future of profits requires reduced production costs."

This militant organ of capitalism then tells us something of the extent to which this wage cutting process has been carried in the past few months. Among the items of effective wage cuts it mentions the following:

Industry	Pct. of Wage-cut
Colorado Fuel and Iron Co.	29
Northern Colorado Coal Fields	35
Bates Shoe Factory	15
Alberta Coal Fields	15
Amoskeag Textile Mills	10
Farr Alpaca Mills	10
Pacific Textile Mills	10
J. & P. Coates Thread Mills	10
American Thread Company	10
Lorraine Textile Mills	10
Utica Steam Textile Mills	10
American Woolen Mills	10
Arlington Woolen Mills	10
Lukens Steel Mills	10
Merrimac Paper Co.	10
Goodyear Rubber Co.	10
British Empire Steel (Canada)	8

This is only an indication of what is going on, and not by any means a complete list. It is out of the lives of these workers in the industries that has been taken the materials for Wall Street's Roman holiday. In several of the cases cited above, the workers resisted heroically, but in each case they were defeated.

Fear of Reds Deters Wage Cuts.

IT will be asked, however, why have not these wage cuts become universal?

The Magazine of Wall Street kindly gives us an answer. Speaking as a capitalist to capitalists, the writer explains that the capitalist class wanted last year, just as eagerly as now, to cut wages. But they were restrained by fear of the "reds," of the left wing in the unions. They had to wait until the union officials had expelled most of the Communists, until they had bled the unions white by the war against the "reds," before the real wage cutting campaign could be put into effect.

The words of this contemptible capitalist sheet should be written in letters of fire on the walls of every labor union meeting place. In its eagerness to serve its masters it discloses to the working class the secret of control of wages. Here is the reason, workers, why your wages have not been cut more than they have. The Magazine of Wall Street says:

> "It is understood by keen observers that the United States Steel corporation would like to reduce wages but dare not. They fear that Foster might succeed in doing in 1926 what he almost accomplished in 1919—the unionization of the industry. Until that industrial pace-setter, the United States Steel corporation, disregarding this possibility, deflates wages, the tendency towards wage cutting will not have received its full impetus."

Is that clear enough for you, union men and workers? It is the fear of Foster, the fear of the Trade Union Educational League, the fear of the Communists, that has kept the great corporations from further reducing your wages. It was the presense of Foster and the left wing that kept your wages as high as they are. That is what the capitalists say when they are talking to one another in their official organ, the Magazine of Wall St.

It is not without some meaning that this same magazine asks "labor leaders" to contribute to its columns—provided they are "leaders" who expel Communists. It is not so very long ago that the president of the Machinists' Union, Wm. H. Johnston, who is now busy trying to expel Communists from the union, was writing articles for this "open shop" advocate, this organ of wage cutters, the Magazine of Wall Street.

Kill Foster and You Can Cut Wages.

AND while this organ of Wall Street explains that wages must be cut, it warns that it will be impossible to make a real job of it, impossible to cut right down to the bone as they wish, until Foster has been defeated. "The figure of Foster," says the Magazine of Wall Street, "still casts a sinister shadow." Foster and the left wing are "sinister" to the enemies of the working class.

If, it goes on to say, in the "major conflict going on within the unions between the 'yellow' and 'red' factions," victory goes to the "yellows," to William Green, to Sigman, to Johnston, to Lewis, and to all those who fight Foster so bitterly, then it will be possible to slash wages right down to the bone. But while Foster is a power, to attack the workers, to cut wages, "especially if accompanied by rising costs of living, would play into the hands of Foster and his following." That is what the Magazine of Wall Street says. The capitalists' fear of Foster protects the workers.

Then What Should the Workers Do?

WHAT shall we do? This is the eternal question of the workers everywhere, faced as they are with seemingly insoluble problems. From all the foregoing a few things to do are clearly indicated.

Profits are climbing higher and higher. The higher they go, the more intense becomes the drive to cut wages down. These facts are clear. They should dispose forever of that sickly school of pseudo-economics of Brookwood, of Spencer Miller and the so-called Workers' Education Bureau, of the A. F. of L. official family, of the B. & O. plan sharks—the "economists" (shades of Adam Smith and Karl Marx protect us!) who propose to "increase production in order thereby to get more wages." That poisonous theory of class collaboration has already half-wrecked the labor movement, and if not destroyed, will itself destroy the power of the working class to protect its smallest interests, not to speak of the interests of the workers' revolution.

By studying the enemy, we learn how to fight him. And by studying the Magazine of Wall Street it is possible to learn quite a few things about how to carry on the struggle that now faces the workers. A few simple conclusions present themselves from the facts cited above, which are good guides to action on our part:

Any union man who supports the officials, such as Johnston of the Machinists' Union, who are trying to expell the Communists, is thereby giving support to the enemies of the working class, support to wage cuts, support to capitalism.

Those who support the left wing, the Trade Union Educational League, who become what the Magazine of Wall Street calls "Foster's followers," help to throw fear into the hearts of the steel kings, the Wall Street magnates, and all the enemies of the working class.

Support for the left wing is support for the struggle of the working class, for higher wages, for stronger unions, for the organization of the unorganized, for a strong party of the workers, for the emancipation of the proletariat from wage slavery, for the workers' government.

Which way will you go, workers? With the Magazine of Wall Street and towards slavery, or with the left wing towards victory for the whole working class?

I.

Mary had a little frame.
A little heart,
A little brain.
Mary had a little mind but not a friend had she.

II.

Mary had some gnarled hands.
Some twisted limbs,
Some skinny hands,
Mary had a grimy face
Yet plenty wash had she.

III.

And everywhere where Mary went
Her twisted hands.
Her wrinkled face,
All of Mary dry and bent
Bad luck was sure to go.

IV.

It followed her in life some day.
Than every day.
Then all that day
It stood near her at wash.
Oi weh!
Swinging her to and fro.

V.

The only time when Mary laughed.
Or Mary grinned.
Or Mary joked,
The only time that Mary liked
Was a plain, sunny day.

VI.

"My wash is sure to dry today,
Dry today,
Dry today,
My wash is sure to dry today,"
Was all our Mary spoke.

VII.

And every cloud that Mary saw,
Mary feared,
So Mary quired.
Any cloud that Mary saw
Was sure to spoil her day.

VIII.

And every rain would make her worse,
Her pain outburst,
Would make her curse.
A day of rain would make her swear,
A God who had no sense.

IX.

So from her cradle till today,
Just till today,
Our Mary knew no hour of play.
And from her cradle
Until her grave,
She'll have no holiday.

X.

On Sunday tho to mass she went.
Her dues she paid,
Forgot her rent,
So Monday was a moving day,
Her pain was then immense.

XI.

Mary knew no politics,
She never heard of polemics,
Her priest she cursed quite everyday,
On rainy day,
On sunny day,
More on collection day.

XII.

Mary knew of Xmas day,
From windows nice,
And great display,
Mary knew of Xmas day,
By other people's say.

XIII.

She cried her eyes out all that day,
But could not pray
In any way;
So she sat in bed on Xmas day,
Her gnarled joints to rest.

XIV.

Mary with her little frame
And little head,
And little brain,
Mary lonesome just the same
On Xmas cries her best.

Wages and Profits in the Railroad Industry

By MORD WILGUS.

PART II.

Profits in the Railroad Industry.

IN order to arrive at the actual rate of profit and the total profits for any given year, it is imperative to know exactly how much capital—not watered capital but real cold capital—has been put into the enterprise. The railroad magnates claim that 22,000,000,000 dollars have been "invested." Astronomical figures of that kind may be necessary when one studies the celestial bodies but certainly when dealing in cold cash, it is a horse of another color. What do they mean by 22 billion dollars "invested"? Have these capitalists forgotten the enormous grants of 155,273,560 acres of public lands which they bribed the congress and the state legislatures to "vote" them? Have these captains of industry lost their memory about the extension of state credit to them—a direct violation of the constitution—enabling them to build the roads with the state's money as in the case of the Union Pacific which received $23,213,000 in government bonds? And have the railroad kings lost sight of the fact that whatever original "investments" were made have been repaid in interest and dividends many times over?

THE imagination is staggered when confronted by the unheard of corruption, bribery and trickery which marked the construction of the railroads. The M'Cormacks, the Macys, the Mortons, the Pullmans, whose descendants today are looked upon as "honest" and "respectable" millionaires, were directly involved in enormous embezzlements of public property.

The records of this gentry as given in detail by Gustavus Myers in his work "History of American Fortunes," are unparalleled for shameless corruption, so far as we can make out, in all history. It makes the old Roman aristocracy look like pikers in comparison.

Let us take one example. The Northern Pacific railroad was granted 200 feet of public land on each side of its tracks along the entire road in 1864. As the road was in the process of construction, numerous villages and towns grew up alongside without the slightest protest by the railroad officials. Naturally this caused the value of the land to increase many times. Suddenly in 1877, the railroad brings suit to eject all the so-called trespassers and the supreme court, faithful to the interests of the capitalists, upholds its contention. The result was that the towns and cities had to pay millions of dollars in tribute to the railroad magnates or be summarily evicted. What was this but trickery by the railroad owners to enrich themselves at the expense of the public?

ANOTHER important fact to remember is that practically all of the railroad stock now outstanding represents no capital at all. The method of financing railroad construction consisted of a public offering of bonds with stock generally given away free. According to the U. S. department of commerce, the "stock," both common and perferred, of the railroad for the year 1922 was valued at over $9,000,000,000. For this imaginary "investment" the investors received for the year 1922, $275,721,615—all velvet on fictious or watered stock. To give the reader an idea of what an enormous tribute the capitalists are forcing from the public—that is to say the working classes—we will give the dividends as paid year by year starting with 1908:

Year	Dividends Declared
June 30, 1908	$329,062,261
1909	272,043,499
1910	351,202,272
1911	403,417,363
1912	347,354,133
1913	327,967,396
1914	380,339,400
1915	264,267,107
1916	268,618,168
Total	$2,944,371,599
Dec. 31, 1916	311,876,409
1917	325,600,752
1918	279,929,286
1919	281,569,422
1920	275,348,254
1921	403,990,775
1922	275,721,615
Grand total	$5,098,408,112

THUS in the space of fifteen years the tribute paid to the capitalists is well over five billion dollars. It is a tribute because there is no pretense here of any investment even in the capitalist sense of the word. It is legalized robbery enforced by a government pledged to uphold and perpetuate this fraud at the expense of the ovewhelming mass of the population—the working class. Marx pointed out long ago that besides the "honest" profit of enterprise, fraud may also be employed by the capitalists. In the case of the railroad industry in the U. S. this fraud has been carried to its highest possible development with the aid and connivance of the government at Washington.

WE now come to the fixed charges on the railroads in the form of interest on the funded debt. From the years 1891 to 1922, the yearly interest charges for all Class 1 roads have been between $221,500,000 and $538,594,000. The total runs into billions and if original investments only be considered, they have been fully repaid many times.

Let us now place the wages and profits side by side and observe the great discrepancy between them. We will take the figures for the year 1922 as those of 1923 are not available:

Total Wages Paid by Roads
(1922)
$2,672,157,000.

Total Profits Distributed by Roads
(1922)

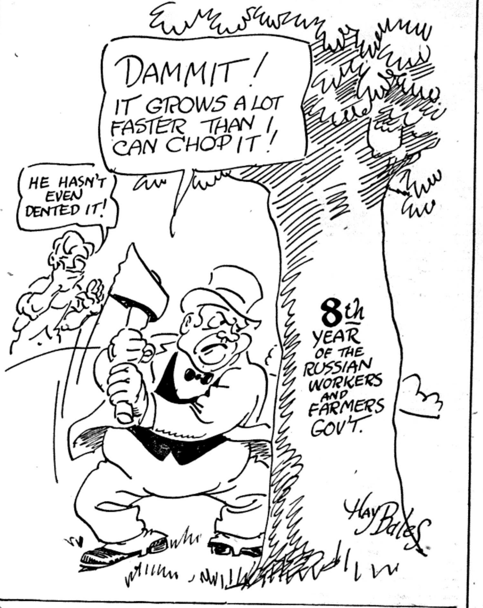
Interest	$538,594,000
Dividends	275,721,000
Profits	$814,315,000

THUS over 23% of the gross earnings of the roads (after deducting depreciation, replacements, rents, taxes, etc., and excluding profits from coal mines, etc.) was allocated to the pockets of the capitalists. Are we to seek further for the reason why a majority of the railroad workers are paid below the minimum subsistence wage? Are we to stand agasp and wonder why men working day in and day out in the glare of the sun keeping the road beds of the country in working order, are paid below $25 per week for their ardous toil? Are we to be amazed at the "inability" of the roads to pay its workers a living wage when over eight hundred million dollars and more each year are allocated to the coupon cutters of Fifth and Park avenues and their counterparts all over the country?

Criticism.

IT will not do if pondering over these facts we grow excited and lose our heads. Indignation alone will never bring capitalism to heel. It is necessary to direct our discontent in the channels of militant organization; in awakening the masses of the railroad workers to their proletarian duty. To accomplish this objective we must intensify our propaganda among the oppressed and low-paid railroad workers first. The propaganda must not deal exclusively with abstractions as in the past but must present to railroad workers actual facts and conditions in the industry. The watered stock, the enormous totals in dividends and interest paid out must be shown not only for the roads as a whole but for the individual roads in particular in order to arouse the interest of the workers on the individual roads more effectively. All around wage increases of 25% to be demanded at once!

THERE exist nominally sixteen standard railroad unions. But outside of the Big 4 they are weak both in organization and numbers. Hence our immediate task is to get the workers into the unions. "Into the unions" must be made a national slogan wherever railroaders congregate. Coupled with this, propaganda urging the amalgamation of all the sixteen railroad unions into one powerful industrial organization must be intensified. The fraud underlying the company unions and the B. & O. plans must be systematically exposed. And within the unions, agitation for a labor party to defend and extend the political power of the workers in their struggle against capitalism must be initiated on a major scale.



DAMMIT! IT GROWS A LOT FASTER THAN I CAN CHOP IT!
HE HASN'T EVEN DENTED IT!

Imperialism and the American Negro

THE following resolution on the question of imperialism was one of the resolutions passed at the American Negro Labor Congress, which held its sessions recently in Chicago, in which the congress analyzes the urge of the imperialist powers to dominate the darker races and shows that the enslavement of the darker races can only be combatted by organized action and for that purpose the congress declares itself in favor of the convening of a world race congress at which the question of combatting imperialism will be the main issue:

"Imperialism is the enslavement of the entire world by capitalist nations or groups of capitalist nations, bringing under their oppressive rule the 1,100,000,000 darker colored peoples in Asia, Africa, the Philippines, Mexico, Haiti, Porto Rico, Central and North America.

Imperialist Domination.

"From the colonies and semi-colonial regions, the imperialist nations secure immense supplies of raw materials produced at a lower labor cost by reason of the inferior social, economic and political status forced upon the darker-skinned peoples.

"In these regions also the imperialist nations find markets for the output of their factories.

"Here also they conscript recruits for the armies with which the imperialist nations wage war on one another, on Soviet Russia, on the colonial peoples themselves and on the working class.

Debauch Labor Aristocracy.

"By force, bribery and debauchery, the imperialist powers maintain division among the darker-skinned peoples, and the proceeds of the robbery practised upon them, are able in turn to bribe and debauch certain upper sections of the working class in the imperialist nations.

"Without the profits from the conquest and sweating of the darker-skinned peoples, the great imperialist nations cannot maintain themselves.

Life and Death Struggle.

"For these reasons the complete liberation of all the darker-skinned peoples of Africa, Asia, America and South America from the rule of world imperialism is of life and death importance to the whole working and farming classes—colored and white—in the imperialist nations, their colonies and spheres of influence.

"We call attention of the American Negro masses to the recent announcement of the entry of American imperialism on an immense scale in the $100,000,000 Liberian project of the Firestone Rubber company, into the African continent—hitherto the exclusive field of Great Britain, France, Belgium and Holland—and in an imperialist industry monopolized by Great Britain.

"We declare that this new rivalry arising over the question as to whether British or American imperialism shall have the power to oppress and rob millions of our race, means an added menace of imperialist war in which our race, unless awake to its danger, will be conscripted by both sets of imperialists and slaughtered by the millions.

Break Chains of Bondage.

"But there is encouraging evidence that our race, and the natives of India, China, Egypt and Morocco, are moving to break their chains of bloody bondage.

"In China, beginning with a strike of textile workers in Shanghai, the liberation movement has swept to the farthest corners of the nation, based itself upon the workers and farmers, developed a definitely anti-imperialist and a firm working class character.

"All of the Chinese masses are uniting against the imperialist robbers of America, Great Britain, Japan and France.

"In China, only Soviet Russia appears as a friend and ally of the Chinese people.

Look to Soviet Union.

"Only in the Soviet union have the darker peoples attained to full social, economic and political equality. But the workers' and peasants' government of Soviet Russia, because it hails as equals and because it aids all the oppressed darker races in their struggles for freedom from imperialism's yoke, is attacked on all sides by the imperialists, while the darker races of Africa, India, China and elsewhere are learning to look upon Soviet Russia as their best friend and ally.

"By the fury of the attacks we are enabled to understand the importance to the imperialist governments of the continued enslavement of the dark-skinned colonial and semi-colonial peoples.

"In India, where British imperialism has perpetrated the most horrible atrocities upon the masses, where mass murders like those at Amritsar are the order of the day, where workers and farmers, unable to pay the extortionate taxes, are slaughtered with machine guns and airplane bombs, where the workers slave 12 and 14 hours per day for a wage of $10 to $12 per month, and where more than 800 out of every thousand children in Bombay die before they are one year old, 150,000 textile workers are now on strike altho defeated in 1924.

"In Egypt, a strong national liberation movement exists altho its leaders have been murdered and the masses drowned in blood time and time again.

Moroccan Struggle.

"In Morocco, the combined efforts of France and Spain, aided by an American airplane squadron, have been unable to crush the heroic Riffs and to end their struggle for national liberation.

"In the Philippines can be seen the beginnings of a national liberation movement whose advance guard has been murdered and imprisoned by the Wall Street dictatorship headed by the militarist, General Leonard Wood.

"In Haiti, the American marines have suppressed every semblance of political liberty and more than 3,000 Haitians have paid with their lives for continuing the struggle for freedom.

"In Panama, American troops have broken the strike of tenants, jailing and shooting workers.

"In Mexico, the Calles government thru the intrigue of imperialists and their tools, including some misleaders, of American and Mexican labor, has been brot under the thumb of Wall Street.

"In Brazil, American army officers train the national army and ferment war between Brazil and Argentine.

"General Pershing imposes the will of American imperialism upon Chile and Peru.

"All thru South America the millions of Wall Street debauch the native governments while the natural resources pass into the hands of Wall Street's agents backed by gunboats and marines.

Cruelest Mockery of Freedom.

"In the United States, the Negro masses are given the cruelest mockery of freedom. Their social status is that of a colonial people. In the southern states our race is subjected to lynching, accompanied by bestial tortures, victimized by vicious peonage and contract labor systems, denied the franchise, segregated, deprived of anything but the most meager educational opportunities, discriminated against and oppressed in every conceivable manner.

"In the north we are denied entrance to many unions, murdered in race-wars fomented by real estate agencies and capitalist enterprises bent upon fanning race hatred and further dividing the Negro and white workers, discriminating against the Negro workers in wages and conditions of labor.

"Our grievances and our cause are those of our race brothers in Africa and the darker-skinned peoples in the colonies of world imperialism.

"Our oppression, our cause and our enemies are the same as those of hundreds of millions of workers and farmers in Asia and Africa.

"This congress declares for unity of the masses of our race in America with the masses of Africa and Asia.

"In the world struggle against imperialism, we, Negro workers are to occupy an important place.

Gained Valuable Experience.

"Cursed tho' we are with intolerable oppression, we have, thru our struggles with the rulers of the most advanced capitalist country in the world, gained valuable experience in the fields of industry, politics and organization, experience that has been denied members of our race in most other lands. In the light of the lessons we have learned from the terrible struggle we have been forced to wage, it is not too much to say that from our ranks will come the leadership of our race in its fight for liberation from imperialist oppression.

"It is with the full knowledge of our responsibilities to our race that we hail the rising liberation movements in Africa and Asia, that we welcome the long-delayed recognition of the necessity for solidarity of all oppressed, black, white and brown, as shown by the French workers in support of the Riffian struggle, the sympathetic attitude of the British workers to the Chinese and Indian independence movements, the growing unity of the working class and colonial peoples against their common enemy.

United Effort Needed.

"The white workers cannot free themselves without the aid of us dark-skinned people, and we cannot liberate ourselves unless they join with us in an assault of the world fortress of imperialism.

"We hail the workers' and farmers' government of Soviet Russia as the first to bring into being full social, political and economic equality for all peoples, white and dark-skinned. We call upon the members of our race to recognize this signal accomplishment of the first workers' and peasants' government as the sign manual of what the future holds for the toiling masses of the whole world when the workers and farmers follow its example and imperialism has been driven from the face of the earth.

"As a first step in connecting the struggles of our race in America with its world-wide struggle against imperialism, this congress of Negro workers and farmers instructs the national executive committee to convene a world congress of our race.

World Race Congress.

"It further instructs the American Negro delegates to this world congress to lay the foundation for a world organization of the workers and farmers of our race and to make this organization a leader and fighter in the liberation movements of all the darker-skinned peoples in the colonies of imperialism everywhere.

"Welcome Soviet Russia—the friend and ally of the oppressed of all races!

"Welcome to all who join with us in the fight for emancipation from imperialist slavery!"

Condemns Segregation.

The American Negro Labor Congress in the following resolution condemns the segregation of Negro workers and demands that the sale and renting of homes be taken out of the hands of private real estate concerns and placed in the hands of public agencies that will rent and sell to workers regardless of their race or color:

"The American Negro Labor Congress declares itself unalterably opposed to the segregation of our people in separate residence districts. We declare the discrimination against Negroes in regard to which part of a city they may live in and which part they may not live in, is a political question and must be dealt with just as we deal with discrimination in voting. The time has come when the living accomodations of the public, cannot be left to the private control of a few wealthy parasites who decide where the colored man may live and where he may not live, or whether he can have a house to live in at all.

Demand Protective Legislation.

"We demand legislation by which all tenements, apartment houses and homes to let, shall be subject to the claim of the first comer, regardless of race or color or the will of the landlord.

"It is common knowledge that Negroes are customarily charged rent at a rate of twenty per cent to one hundred per cent higher than is charged for the same apartments rented to white people. We demand legislation for a fixed rental for all places to be let, with heavy penalties and damages whenever a landlord charges higher rents for one race than would be charged another race for similar accomodations.

"We declare that any Negro real estate agent who connives in charging more rent to his own people than would be paid by whites, is a renegade and a traitor to his own people.

Public Renting of Houses.

"In advocating the foregoing measures of relief, we do not regard them as being permanently effective. This congress advocates taking the whole housing question out of the hands of private individuals, and advocates the taking over of all rented residences by the public, to be rented without discrimination of color to the people at a fixed low rental. We further advocate that the housing shortage in the cities and towns be relieved by the local government building modern apartment houses to be rented on the above basis.

Score "Company Houses."

"It is also a custom of large employers of colored and white labor, such as mine operators and mill owners ,to house their employees in 'company houses' and thereby to control the lives of the workers being able to throw them out of house and home whenever the bosses please and whenever there is a disagreement about wages or working conditions, we demand any legal measure that may be necessary to prevent any employer of industrial labor owing or controlling the homes rented to his employees.

"Pending legislative relief, and during the present period when the Negro's rights are ignored by governmental agencies, we call upon the residents of all Negro communities to organize colored tenants' unions so as to be able in an organized way to refuse to pay exorbitant rents, or to consent to live in inferior buildings or segregated districts."

Demand Ousting of Trust Friends in U. S. Trade Commission

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13. — Demands are being made here for the removal of three members of the federal trade commission for their refusal to prosecute the gigantic bread trust that has now been formed.

It is charged that the committee at first passed the buck to Atty. Gen. Sargent, and that the attorney general just as promptly passed it back telling the commission that it had full powers to act.

Following Sargent's refusal to investigate the case, the board by a vote of three to two decided to dismiss proceedings against the $400,000,000 bread trust.

It is also pointed out that of the 55,000,000 loaves of bread produced in the country, the bread trust, controlling 157 bakeshops, produced 31,000,000 loaves thus controlling 56 per cent of the bread production in the United States.

The three men, Van Fleet, Hunt and Humphrey, hit by the charges, are the men that Cal Coolidge appointed for those jobs, so that big business would be able to carry on its mergers with fewer obstructions from governmental bodies. It should be remembered that the campaign pledge that Coolidge was elected on was, more business in government and less government in business.

McAndrew Rating Plan for Teachers Aims at Further Subordination

The new rating plan for teachers submitted by Superintendent of Schools William McAndrew to the Principles' Club aims to whip teachers into line with the new system of larger classrooms for each teacher, and conformity to McAndrew open shop rule. The teachers disciplinarian abilities will supercede all other requirements. The plan applies to all teachers in the elementary, junior and senior high and continuation schools. Its purpose is to provide a basis for ridding the school system of those teachers considered "undesirable."

Some Impressions From the Donetz Basin

By G. ALLISON.

AT the present time the coal industry is faced with an international crisis. An abundance of evidence has been produced from authoritative sources to prove that production is far in excess of consumption. Every coal producing country has shown a productive capacity equal to pre-war days, and this fact, together with the shrinkage of consumption, due to more extensive utilization of oil and other means of motive power, has intensified competition and spread ruin and chaos in the industry.

The effects of all this on the miners in the various countries is disastrous. In Germany the introduction of a longer working day and the low wages prevailing has provided the coal owners of other countries such as Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia and the neighboring countries with an opportunity of attacking the existing standards. In America and Canada, sweeping wage reductions have taken place and assisted by the existence of large armies of unemployed, the owners are now making attempts to smash the trade unions.

IN Britain the normal effects of the crisis have been intensified by the political boycott of the U. S. S. R. and the operation of the Dawes plan. The industry has plunged into one of the most distressing periods in its whole history. Already there are no fewer than 160,000 unemployed miners, and a large percentage of the remainder are working part time. The coal owners making the most of this situation, are attacking the already low standards in the various districts, through partial reductions, etc., and further, the coal owners are developing a new offensive whereby they hope to re-introduce the eight-hour day.

In view of this situation it will be very instructive to compare the conditions prevailing in the mine fields of a highly intensified center of imperialism, like Great Britain and the workers' republic of Soviet Russia. For the purpose of contrast we can take productivity, wages, hours and general conditions prevailing in Great Britain, with those prevailing in the Donetz Basin, which district is typical of the other mine fields in the U. S. S. R. In doing so, however, we must be mindful of the different circumstances that have prevailed in the two countries during and since the war.

In Britain, for example, the mines were unmolested during the war. Since 1918 the industry has had sufficient time and opportunity to stabilise, and in addition, there has always been ready access to an abundance of the necessary modern machinery and up-to-date equipment.

IN the Donetz Basin, however, the industry was practically ruined as the result of the civil war and the organized sabotage of the mines by the counter revolutionary forces, assisted by Britain and the other imperialist powers. The work of the reactionary forces could be traced in the wilfull destruction of both the transport system and the mines. The systematic blowing up of bridges and the smashing of mining plants, done by the enemies of Soviet Russia during the civil war, are known to everyone, and testified to the tremendous tasks presented to the revolutionary forces after their final victory. Peace has only prevailed three years and even after open hostilities have ceased, reconstruction has been retarded by the systematic boycott of the U. S. S. R. by all the imperialist powers.

Nevertheless, despite the obvious differences in opportunities, it is a fact that the mining industry in Britain has failed to provide for the most elementary needs of the miners. Unemployment, as we have seen, is widespread, wages at the lowest ebb, the situation every way becoming worse and the only cure the owners can suggest is cheaper production thru the medium of longer working hours.

On the other hand in Donetz Basin there is undeniable evidence of gradual improvement. Tremendous difficulties have been overcome, enterprise abounds everywhere and slowly but surely the economic and social conditions of the miners is being improved.

Organization of Industry.

IN order to prove the assertions made in the last paragraph and to understand the factors responsible, it is necessary to deal with he various aspects of the mining industry in the two countries.

The first outstanding feature to be met with is the difference in the organization of the industry. Repeated inquiries in Britain have shown that the industry is owned and controlled by very many separate companies, and most of these companies are interlinked thru their directorates with the banks, railways, engineering and ship building industries. While it is true that this form of structure tends to reduce petty competition, it is also true that it is responsible for much needless waste of energy, transportation, etc. And in addition, it enables the coal owners to manipulate prices and camouflage real profits. Moreover, the coal mining industry in Britain is asked to yield profits on share capital which in some cases has been nearly doubled out of the profits made during the war and the years following. Finally, on top of all the foregoing, the coal industry in Britain must pay roughly a shilling per ton in the form of royalties to the landowners. Obviously such a preponderous machine must have a profound effect on the conditions of the miners.

In comparison, the Russian structure is simple. Eighty per cent of the total coal production of the Donetz Basin is mined by the Don Bas Coal Trust. The remainder is worked by similar state trusts (railway, chemical etc.), all of which consume their own production.

Through the medium of the coal trust, transportation is reduced to a minimum. Huge schemes of electrification, impossible under private enterprise, have been embarked upon, and the natural resources are exploited in the most scientific method possible. Already we can see that thru the elimination of class interests and class antagonisms, the coal industry in Don Bas has, in a comparatively short space of time, progressed further than the long established British industry.

Production and Costs.

SOME interesting facts are disclosed in analyzing the productivity of the backward Russian mines compared with the up-to-date British plants. The latest figures for Britain gave the average output at approximately 17½ hundredweight per man shift, and the cost of production approximately 18.2d per ton. For Donetz Basin the averages are 11 hundredweight per man shift and 22- per ton. These figures show only too clearly the adverse circumstances under which the Russian mines are operating. The low productivity is almost entirely due to the lack of machinery and the results of the white guards' devastations.

Here we can draw some interesting comparisons. In Britain a large percentage of the total cost of production goes towards the payment of royalties, employers' insurance, etc. In the Don Bas nine per cent of the total cost of production is set aside for social insurance, cultural funds, miners, rest homes and other mediums for bettering the lives of the miners. And it is still more interesting to note that despite the lack of machinery, low production, etc., the Don Bas hewer works a six-hour day, 18 days per month, and has one month's holiday with full pay every year. When sick or injured he receives full wages and all medical treatment free.

There is still room for another contrast being drawn. The British miner knows only too well that over-production means unemployment for many, lower wages for all, a miserable existence and no guarantee against absolute starvation for himself and his dependents. The demand for coal in Russia depends to a large extent upon the home markets and has frequently been restricted due to the backward state of the other industries and particularly the metal industry. In fact, only a short time ago the coal production of the Donetz Basin exceeded the normal demand, and it is interesting to note how the problem was dealt with. In the words of an official report, "The restriction of output was carried out not by a reduction in the number of miners, but by allowing them longer leaves."

Wages.

NOMINALLY, the average wage of a miner in Donetz Basin is approximately 50 per cent less than the present wage of a British miner. This, on the face of it, looks exceedingly bad. But again there are other factors to be considered. Here in Russia the miners pay no house rent. Coal and light are also free and in addition the first essentials in the food list, namely, bread meat, milk, eggs, etc., are on an average less than half of the British prices.

It would be a mistake, however, to say that the Don Bas miners enjoy ideal conditions or that they are satisfied with their lot. Housing conditions are very bad. Those dwelling places erected during the old regime are symbolic of the rate at which the Russian miners were exploited by British, French and Belgian capital and held in subjection by despotic czarism. But it is in this respect that the visitor meets the most inspiring feature. In almost every village housing schemes are being carried out, communal restaurants, communal houses and ordinary family homes are being erected. Those already finished are mansions compared with the hovels into which the miners of pre-war days were herded by capitalism.

The cultural side of life is being tended to by the erection of schools, proletarian theaters, clubs, and libraries. All of these developments taking place amongst the ruins of the old system are a real manifestation of the creative power of the freed proletariat. The harmonious method in which the Communist Party, the trade unions and the administrative machinery of the industry work together for the common good is a sure sign that the working class are conscious of the power they wield and that they will succeed in spite of all external opposition, in working out their own complete emancipation.

The Role of the Trade Unions.

HERE again it is necessary to have a clear understanding of the fundamental differences between the Miners' Federation of Great Britain and the Russian Miners' Union before we can hope to appreciate their different functions.

It is understood everywhere that the British working class were the pioneers for the world trade union movement, and that the miners' organization is one of the strongest sections in Britain. The mining industry, in comparison with other industries, is exceptionall free from craft and sectional barriers, and this fact has tended towards making the M. F. G. B. a powerful organization. During its life it has engaged in several heroic struggles against the employers and enjoyed a reputation as one of the foremost sections of the organized labor movement. Yet, despite its record, experience and mass character, its achievements are meager.

Beyond the loose support given to the independent working class educational movement in some districts, the miners' unions and the federations can boast of no other activities on the educational and cultural field that definitely equips its membership for the every day struggle or improves their social conditions.

Politically it has been content with affiliation to the national labor party and has almost invariably acquiesed in the policy of its reactionary leadership. Finally, the present standards, accompanied as they are by the threat of fresh attacks from the employers, are sufficient proof that the M. F. G. B. has failed to improve or even protect the economic interests of its members.

Let us compare this with the role of the Russian union, which it may be mentioned, has only been able to maintain a permanent existence and assume a mass character since political and economic power passed into the hands of the proletariat.

Naturally, the prime function is to promote the economic and social interests of its membership; but the elimination of capitalism and all forms of oppression and the subsequent elimination of class antagonisms and class interests has led to a complete change in the character of that task. The Russian union works in the closest possible collaboration with the managerial authorities in the industry. It plays a real part in the control of industry and is directly concerned in increasing the productivity of the mines, simply because every advance made and every improvement effected is directly reflected in better houses, higher wages, and more comforts for the miners. With regard to safety regulations, the union, in conjunction with the management, ensures that the lives of the miners are not unduly exposed to the dangers of their occupation. Regulations safeguarding the miner from gas and bad air, statutes insuring the safety of the traffic and traveling ways and guaranteeing an adequate supply of all kinds of timber have been worked out jointly. And the trade union pit committtees insure that they are carried out to the letter. One example will be sufficient to show the significance of the unions in this respect. In mines that are considered to be very gassy, the pit committee insists that water and compressed air are led into all the working faces and that traps are provided on all main roadways to prevent the spread of any explosion that may occur, and in the event of an accumulation of gas in any particular section of the mine, the men affected can go home without losing any part of their wages for that day.

This, however, is only one aspect of the activities of the Russian Miners' Union. As great or even greater achievements fail to be recorded in the sphere of social work. In this respect the union has taken upon itself the practical work of raising the social and cultural standards of its membership.

SCHOOLS for the elimination of illiteracy, political and technical schools for the more advanced, libraries, sport organizations, etc., have been promoted by the unions and controlled in conjunction with the state department. Not only in the centers has this been done, but in every other part of the mine field. Similar privileges are provided for the children, the youth and the women folk, and all sections from the oldest to the youngest take full advantage of the facilities now provided for them.

Still another function of the union which cannot be omitted is that of safeguarding the health of its individual members. Mansions in the Caucasus and the Crimea, previously the property of the very richest of the old Russian aristocracy have been converted into rest homes. Rest homes not reserved for the higher officials or the sick and the maimed, but for all the miners. Here, after a years' work in the mine they are provided with all possible comforts during their months vacation.

Consequently we see that in every respect the miners' union plays a real part in the political, economic and social life of Donetz Basin, compared with which the activities of the British unions are meager and insignificant.

THIS fact is reflected in the unbounded enthusiasm of the ordinary worker. The Don Bas miners realize in full that they are now controllers of their own destinies. They are confident that thru the combined strength of the proletarian army of the U. S. S. R. and in defiance of all the designs of international imperialism, their conditions of living will be permanently improved and their economic security guaranteed. Above all, the miners of Don Bas are proud that their revolution has made them the pioneers for the international working class movement, inspired by the fact that their deeds are closely followed pendent of all political parties? Will the new international be used only to better working conditions or for world revolution? And, as a last refuge, they sought to defend their alliance with the capitalists by saying that to break with the capitalists will mean that no more wage agreements could be made with the bosses, and that all co-operation with the labor bureau of the league of nations would be broken.

Lozovsky Replies.

To this the R. I. L. U. replied, thru Lozovsky in his speech at the Sixth All-Russian Trade Union Congress, that the R. I. L. U. proposed that the labor organizations be represented at the unity congress in proportion to their numbers and the R. I. L. U. would combat any attempt of the Amsterdamers to limit the representation to trade union bureaucrats appointed by the officialdoms. What the R. I. L. U. desired was the election of delegates representing the workers in the shops and factories who really desire trade union unity. On the question of national autonomy, he pointed out that under the guise of national autonomy the Amsterdamers had committed the blackest crimes against the working class, since national autonomy had been utilized to break strikes in every country thru international scabbing. Thus British and French coal was used in 1922 against the coal miners of the United States on strike, and, vice versa, United States coal had been used against the miners of Great Britain and France to break their strikes. The new international would really be a co-ordinating center to bring international unity into the struggles of the workers against the capitalists.

With an innocent air, these Amsterdamers pretend that "their" trade unions are independent of all political parties, but in thise countries in which they are not the backbone of the social-democratic and labor parties and act as the handmaidens of capitalism, they are altogeher dependent on the capitalist parties, as in the United States. But what the Communists are advocating is international trade union unity and have already declared that even though they are in the minority at the world congress, they will remain in the international, obey its discipline, and lay their program before the workers and let the working class decide whose program and tactics are right—the R. I. L. U. and the method of the class struggle, or Amsterdam and co-operation with the capitalists at the expense of the workers.

Amsterdam Wants Unity with Bosses.

The opposition of the Amsterdamers to the trade unions mobilizing the working class for the abolition of the wage system is expressed in their demand that the trade unions shall be used only to better working conditions and not for the overthrow of capitalism, but under the leadership of the Amsterdamers the trade unions have done neither one nor the other. Not only have these leaders sabotaged the struggles of the workers to preserve their standard of living and working conditions, but they have also prevented the seizure of power by the working class, as, for instance, in Central Europe in the years 1918-19 and in Italy in 1920.

That the Amsterdam leaders stoop to the futile argument that to break with the capitalists will mean that no wage agreements can be made with the bosses shows that they are desperately fighting against world trade union unity in order to preserve their unity with the capitalists. They conveniently overlook the vast difference between wage agreements forced on the bosses by the struggles of the workers and the voluntary entry of Amsterdam leaders into capitalist governments to stifle working class revolt, and sabotage of even the most elementary struggles of the working class. They desperately fight against unity since they know that world trade union unity will lay the basis for a fight against capitalism which they will be forced to oppose to defend capitalism, and thus expose themselves to the mass of the organized workers. To preserve their social standing, the alliance with the capitalist class is absolutely necessary for these leaders and they will betray every working class action to preserve it.

At the Scarborough meeting of the British Trades Union Congress the British trade unions definitely placed themselves in line with the Russian trade unions on the question of international trade union unity. Up until that time the British leaders had held the idea that the entry of the Russian unions into the Amsterdam International would secure the unity desired. But the bitter antagonism of the right wing Amsterdam leaders (Jouhaux, Merrheim, Oudegeest, etc.) against having anything to do with the movement for unity or the Russian unions, has disillusioned the British unionists regarding the possibility of securing the co-operation of Amsterdam in securing trade union unity.

Today the British unions support the program of the Russian unions on the unity question: To secure world trade union unity by an all-inclusive international federation of trade unions. This can be achieved thru an international congress of representatives of the workers from the factories, shops, mines and unions irrespective of whether they belong to Amsterdam, the R. I. L. U. or neither of them.

The Anglo-Russian Unity Committee, composed of official representatives of the British and Russian Unions is the center of the world movement for unity. The Norwegian Federation of Labor has gone on record for affiliation to the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee.

The reactionary trade union officials denounce this movement for unity, the capitalists and their press are bitterly attacking it. The agents of the bosses in the trade union movement are mobilized to maintain the divisions in the ranks of the trade unions to prevent a united resistence of the workers against the attacks of capital. Those who stand for unity are for the interests of the workers. Those who oppose unity are aiding the capitalists.

CHICAGO WORKERS' SCHOOL

Outline for Study Class in "Capital" Volume I.

Course to run thru three semesters of eight weeks each.

Instructor—Earl Browder.

Course covers Parts I, II, and III of Volume 1, beginning at page 41 and concluding at page 331.

"Commodities and Money," "The Transformation of Money into Capital" and "The Production of Absolute Surplus Value" are the three basic subjects dealt with during the course.

All students entering this course must give satisfactory evidence that they have obtained a fair grasp of the elements of Communism and Marxian economics. The course will include outside reading and the preparation of written pages for each lesson besides the regular work in the class itself.

Outline for first semester, Nov. 15 to January 15.

Part I, Chapters 1, 2, and 3; pages 41 to 146.

First Week: Organization of class. Chapter I, section 1. Pages 41-48. Commodities: The two factors of a commodity. Use value and value. The substance of value and the magnitude of value.

Second Week: Sections 2 and 3 (to sub-head 3) pages 48-63. Two-fold character of labor in commodities. Form of value or exchange value. Relative and equivalent forms. Relative form of value. Its nature and import. Quantitative determination of it.

Third Week: Section 3 (to conclusion of section) pages 64-81. The equvalent form of value. Elementary form of value as a whole. Expanded form of value. The expanded relative form. The particular equivalent form. General form of value. The altered character. Interdependent development of relative and equivalent forms. Transition from general to money form. The money form.

Fourth Week: Section 4. Pages 81-96. The Fetishism of commodities.

Fifth Week: Chapter II. Pages 96-106. Exchange.

Sixth Week: Chapter III to Section 2. Pages 106-116. Money. The measure of values.

Seventh Week: Section 2 to subsection c. Pages 116-139. The medium of circulation. Metamorphosis of commodities. The currency of money.

Eighth Week: Section 2 to conclusion of section. Pages 140-146. Coins and symbols of value. Review of semester work.

Outside and Supplementary: Assignment and recommendations to be made by instructor. Marx's Critique of Political Economy to page 162 should be studied as a earlier elaboration of material covered during this semester. His Poverty of Philosophy can also be used occasionally.

Herman Cahn's Capital Today should be referred to, since the examples given are more up-to-date and American in terminology.

Young Workers Class for Correspondents Meets on Saturday

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.— The first meeting of the correspondence course of the Young Workers' League in New York will take place Saturday, Nov. 14, at 4 p. m., at 108 E. 14th St. This will be a very interesting class as the instructor is the same one who will teach the party training course, Comrade Joe Freeman. It is important that this course be given at present as we will soon have to begin issuing factory papers, wall papers and what's more, our comrades will have to make the Young Worker a real young workers' paper by writing for it. Make sure to be on time.

by the workers in other countries and as a consequence they are ready and willing, when necessary, to make still more sacrifices in safeguarding their hard won gains and in extending a helping hand to the international working class.

The question before the British miners is, "How can we benefit from a knowledge of the past and present experiences of the Russian miners?"

LET us remember first of all that advantages similar to those enjoyed by the Russian miners are only possible after the last remnants of capitalism and exploitation have been destroyed and the proletariat have captured power. In the midst of the present crisis in Britain we have many elements, even in our own ranks that would gladly help us to forget this fundamental truth. Those elements led by Hodges and other leaders who aim at bettering the conditions of the miners by persuading the government and the coal owners to reorganize the coal industry along more scientific lines are simply aiming at perfecting the machine that is already responsible for our present deplorable conditions. Instinctively we know that the application of science to industry has meant greater profits for the owners, but more dangers and more degrading conditions for miners. Further improvements in this direction will inevitably mean more ruthless exploitation and weakening of our powers of resistance.

The message coming to us from the experiences of the Russian miners is not that we shall endeavor to patch up a decaying system. Our task lies in emulating the Russian workers and peasants in our struggle for power only after that has been gained, can we hope to apply science to industry in a manner beneficial to the producer.

IN the present crisis our duty is clear. Let us take a different stand on the principles of no longer hours and a living wage for the miners, and above all, let us make the necessary preparations to insure that our fight will be a class fight round definite class issues. Only by acting in this manner will we be able to show our appreciation. Lip service to these achievements is so much humbug, unless we are prepared first of all to follow the example set.

In our present crisis we must forsake, once and for all, the paths of class collaboration that have so often brought defeat. Let us present our demands and struggle determinedly for their attainment, refusing to countenance all attempts at side tracking. By this means and only by this means will we pay our tributes and earn the esteem of the Russian working class and their achievements.

Russian Labor's Tasks Twenty Years Ago

where possible, be preserved.

One wave is followed by another. The capital follows the provinces. The Border States are followed by the heart ofRussia, the proletariat by the town petty bourgeoisie, the town by the village. The defeat of the reactionary government is unavoidable in the face of its widely divergent tasks. Upon our preparations for the spring 1906 depends to a great extent the issue of the first phase of the great Russian revolution.

Movie Trust Freezes Out Competition

By WM. F. KRUSE

THE federal trade commission has spent many months of testimony-taking to find out whether there is such a thing as a "movie-trust." That such a trust exits is certain to the dwindling army of "independent" producers and exhibitors; that such a trust must sooner or later come into being is clear to any one who understands the laws of capitalist development. The movies have entered the stage of big business. "Famous Players" earned a profit last year of $5,350,000, more than a million increase over 1924. "Metro-Goldwyn" reported net profits of almost half a million for a three months period ending Nov. 30.

The little fellows are squirming. The Motion Picture Theatres Owners Association is complaining. The independent producers and distributors are yelling for help to Will Hays—the trust's own umpire whose chief reason for existence is his political pull with the political representatives of other big trusts.

One of the latest of these appeals is made by Murray M. Garsson, one of the most solid of the "independents," who has turned out some first class pictures. This letter states, in part:

"The unfair methods of the big companies (the motion picture trusts) are more throttling to competition today than ever before in the history of the industry, with the possible exception of the old General Film Co. As the situation exits, unless an independent producer sells his product to one of the Big Three, he is shut out of the opportunity of having his picture gross a revenue sufficient to cover the cost of production.

"This is occasioned, first, by the fact that the exhibitors are coerced into accepting block bookings of the product of the Big Three to an extent which leaves them with absolutely no open time for independent pictures of merit; second, thru their ownership of theaters thruout the country independent producers are frozen out of an opportunity to dispose of their production. And unless the exhibitor is given some relief of this same menace, the Big Three will, in a short time, drive every independent motion picture exhibitor out of business, as well as the independent producers."

Trust Admits Charges.

On the other hand the representatives of the trust are becoming more and more frank in admitting the existence of their control of the industry. In the "1925 Film Year Book," Richarch W. Saunders, comptroller for Famous Players, and formerly cashier of the National Bank of Commerce in New York City, states bluntly:

"The greatest progress, in my opinion, has been along the following lines: . . .

"2. The strengthening of certain corporations by amalgamation, and the elimination of certain weaker companies will in the end strengthen the industry . . .

"4. The greatly improved attitude of the banking and financial world towards the industry . . . One conservative bank has issued in its magazine an account of the 'stabilization' of the industry . . .

"6. . . . The benefits of production on a reasonably large scale enabling the exhibitor to contract for a good part of his product at one time, are now recognized, and the dangers minimized. For that reason, combines on the part of exhibitors for purchasing pictures, if they transgress the reasonable price return to producers, are likely to do the industry a great deal of harm.

"7. The number of new companies being organized for picture production would seem to be out of proportion. A great number are bound to fail and this brings about a reaction against the industry on the part of financial backers.

"10. Among the numerous other benefits to the industry in 1924, might be mentioned the advertising, which has gained in beauty and drawing power; the improvement in trade papers, which are more calm and judicial in their treatment of pertinent subjects; and in general thruout the industry, there has been an arrangement of the whole to the parts, an adjustment of each to suit the needs of another, that cannot but be of great permanent value.

What a Movie Trust Will Do

The first effect of trust control of any industry is the standardization of method and product. Already this is very evident in the film field where more and more pictures are cut to the pattern of the "program picture." The "improved attitude" of the banks marks the film as another playground for our dominant finance capital group, and already we see the effect in reduced production budgets. The "conservative bank" article mentioned pointedly that many pictures costing $100,000 made more profit than those costing $200,000 or more—and the bank wants profit. A third immediate effect of the trustification of an industry is its closer integration with other trustified industries thru interlocking directorates with banks and big corporations. Thus far the movie game has been run by a coterie of specialty capitalistis who became wealthy on the film and who got and had most of their money in movies and theaters only. That golden age is over, now comes the period of "amalgamation" and "elimination," of a "calm and judicial" trade press, of trust control.

The next stage will be workers' control and toward that end labor organizations are beginning the producing and showing of labor films in their own interests—financial and ideological. A list of labor films can be obtained from the International Workers' Aid, 19 S. Lincoln St., Chicago, Ill.

Workers (Communist) Party

Weinstone to Debate with Socialists at the Church Forum Sunday

NEW YORK, Nov. 13—The Church of All Nations will be the battleground of warring points of view on the subject: "Resolved that the Soviet form of government is applicable to western civilization," this Sunday evening at 8:30, when a representative of the socialist party and one from the socialist labor party will debate with William W. Weinstone, spokesman for the Workers (Communist) Party on this subject. The Church of All Nations runs a forum on New York's East Side at 9 Second Ave. As this is the heart of a working man's district, the socialist party, the socialist labor party and the Workers (Communist) Party are expected to be well represented in the audience that night. Admission is free and Workers Party members and sympathizers should be there early to be sure to gain admission and get all the best seats. No clue has as yet been given as to whom the socialist party and the socialist labor party will send, but assurance has been received that each of the parties will be rerpesented by a good speaker.

As this is the first time in a long time that the socialist party has been compelled to go on record as to what its attitude is toward the Soviet form of government, not for "oriental peoples" but for our own precious "western civilization," there is a special interest attached to this discussion. The socialist labor party also has been "up in the air" on the question of the applicability of the Soviet form of government to the United States and may be expected to declare that nothing but industrial unions will be accepted by them. Thus, the whole question of the political significance of industrial unionism will also be examined during the discussion.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED - BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

YOUNG PIONEERS BEGIN DRIVE TO REORGANIZE INTO SCHOOL NUCLEI

By CLARENCE MILLER

Along with the reorganization of the party and league our Pioneers are also in the process of reorganizing on the basis of the school. They, like the party, cannot become a real Bolshevik Pioneer organization without changing their present form of organization. Just like the party and league cannot become Bolshevik organizations without making every shop their stronghold, so the Pioneers must make every school their stronghold.

Ideological Preparation.

At present the entire district of our Pioneers are undergoing an ideological preparation for reorganization. In every group there is going on a series of discussions on "What is a Bolshevik (Pioneer)." "How did the Russian Bolsheviks act to bring about the Russian revolution," "What does a Bolshevik do to make his organization a Bolshevik organization?" The functioning of the organization," "What will the Pioneers have to do to make their organization a real Bolshevik organization?" These discussion take place at the group meetings, at City Central Committee meetings, at District Executive Committee meetings. A special city membership meeting was held Saturday, Nov. 14, where the problem of reorganization was discussed. The discussions of the District Executive Committee and City Central Committee are such as to prepare the more active members to take the initiative in the discussions.

The District Convention

This ideological campaign in our groups will culminate with the district convention to be held during the week-end of Thanksgiving. The agenda drawn up by the Pioneer District Executive Committee and City Central Committee jointly, is rather elaborate. It contains among other points a discussion on reorganization and bolshevization, school struggle and school work, child labor and the struggle against it, opposition organizations (Boy Scouts) etc. All of these topics will be introduced by a member of their district Executive Committee or City Central Committee. Plans are being made to have as many as possible out-of-town comrades be present at this convention. This convention will lay down the practical steps to be taken in the reorganization which is to follow shortly after the convention.

Recruit Members During Education Week.

Along with reorganization we are starting a membership drive. During education week, a lot of propaganda will have to be carried on to counteract the concentrated propaganda of all capitalist institutions that are being mobilized by the American legion in conjunction with the board of education. We must utilize this for gaining new members. Our Pioneers will have to show whether they are really Bolsheviks by working hard during this week to get in new members. The party and league have been mobilized for this purpose also. During this week we expect to get at least 200 new members. The juniors will also participate in the Young Workers League mass meeting and in the distribution of leaflets. Special arrangements have been made for distributions in the schools.

Other Activities.

The question of building the Young Comrade is also being considered. We will try to raise money and sell subs for the Young Comrade. We are also going to issue "wallpapers" in every section. The comrades who will edit these papers will have to attend class once or twice a month in which the question of editing these bulletins will be discussed. The comrades will then begin to contribute more to the Young Comrade. A training course for the Juniors has been decided upon. It is to start a week after the convention. American History, Fundamentals of Communism and organization work will be taken up.

A plan has also been drawn up on the formation of parents' councils during national education week. The party and league ought to get in on this and help make a success of it.

For Our Sceptics.

There are always comrades, who have what one might consider, a paternal attitude towards our children's movement. They do not consider the children capable of doing things. They will say that the above plan is good for adults but not for children. To them I want to say, come down to our meetings and judge for yourself. See the Pioneers respond to their program of work and you will agree that they are worthy comrades in the struggle, in spite of their youth.

DISTRICT EIGHT CIRCUIT SCHOOL STARTS IN GARY, NOT MILWAUKEE, MONDAY

Announcement of the circuit classes as mentioned in the Friday issue of The DAILY WORKER said that the course would begin in Milwaukee on Monday evening, Nov. 15. This was an error.

Classes will be as follows:

Gary, Ind., on Monday evening.

South Bend, Ind., on Tuesday evening.

Waukegan, Ill., on Wednesday evening.

Milwaukee, Wis., on Thursday evening.

Comrade Oliver Carlson is the instructor. The course will be in the "Elements of Communism" and will continue for eight weeks.

Unify the Party!

Resolution Adopted by the Political Committee of the Central Executive Committee in Regard to the Party Situation and for Unification of the Party's Forces.

THE political Committee of the Central Executive Committee has discussed fundamentally the question of liquidating the remnants of factionalism existing in the party, after the national convention.

The following resolution embodies the views of the party situation as agreed upon by the political committee. This resolution has been concurred in by the National Executive Committee of the Young Workers (Communist) League.

The adoption of this resolution by the political committee, expressing the co-operation of comrades in former separate groups in the party and laying the basis for a unified leadership is of the greatest significance to the whole party. The resolution should be carefully studied by all members and leading committees of the party, and energetic work begun for the unification of all the forces in the party on the basis of this resolution.

The Central Executive Committee will, in the near future, arrange meetings of the District Executive Committees in the party centers and also membership meetings, which will be addressed by Comrades Cannon and Ruthenberg for the purpose of clarifying the situation and securing the support of all comrades who are prepared to follow the lines laid down in the resolution. The District Executive Committees of the party are requested not to take action in voting on the resolution until these meetings are arranged. Other party units should at once begin the discussion and express their viewpoint in regard to this unity resolution.

The Political Committee is of the opinion that the party will welcome the political committee's taking the leadership in bringing our party together for a united fight to extend the party leadership among the masses and to draw them into revolutionary class struggle.

Resolution on the Party Situation.

1. The beginning of the process of bolshevizing our party has created a very critical situation for the party. Certain right wing elements are opposing the reorganization of the party and this attitude finds encouragement in the attack made by Lore and his followers against the Communist International and the party. Elements oustide of the party, counting on this situation, are encouraging those opposing the bolshevization to leave the party and to make a stand against the Communist International. The party for more than a year has been engaged in an inner factional struggle over the question of the correct line of policy and leadership of the party. The remnants of factionalism carried over from the pre-convention period have not yet been liquidated. This factional struggle while an expression of the growth of Communist understanding within the party, has seriously affected the party work among the broad masses of industrial workers and exploited farmers, so that there has been an actual falling off of the effectiveness of the party in mobilizing these masses for the class struggle against the capitalists. The policy followed by a section of the former majority under the leadership of Comrade Foster objectively leads away from the Communist International and thus provides a rallying point for the right wing of the party. This policy, if not changed, will do great harm to the party.

2. That section of the former majority which supported the policy of Comrades Cannon, Dunne and others was right in making an energetic and determined struggle against the policies of Comrade Foster. In openly combatting the policy of Comrade Foster they gave a warning to the party as to the direction in which this policy was leading. The struggle within the former majority group over the question of the relation of the party, and the party leaders to the Communist International has resulted in a definite and open split in the former majority group. This process is not, however, completed. Many comrades who at first followed the policy sponsored by Comrade Foster since the convention, are beginning to change their course. Continuous efforts must be made to clarify the situation in order to assist these comrades to completely adopt the platform of the Communist International and Central Executive Committee.

THE BASIS OF UNIFIED LEADERSHIP.

3. The former differences on political questions have been settled by the decisions of the Parity Commission and the national convention of the party. There is therefore no longer any reason for political groupings in the party on the basis of former differences. The decision of the party convention, the decision of the Communist International, delivered to the convention, and the events since the convention have broken down the old divisions and created new ones. The party leadership must reflect all these decisions and events and must be based upon them. It must represent a unification of all those who follow and fight for the political line of the Communist International. The party situation requires the unification of all groups within the party which stand for the line of the Communist International and for the unity of the party. The remnants of the factional struggle within the party must be quickly liquidated and the whole party drawn into the work among the masses. At the present time, when the opposition to bolshevization and reorganization is developing, when Lore and Salutsky are renewing and intensifying their attacks on the Communist International, when the socialists are gleefully speaking of the "disintegration" of the Communist movement in America, it becomes obligatory to effect the unification of the party. It would be an error to maintain old factional groupings or to form new ones. This would weaken the struggle for unity and Bolshevization and would abjectively strengthen the tendencies which are mobilizing to resist it. Under these conditions the interests of the party imperatively demand the unification of all members of the party who are for the Com-

CAPITALISTS IN ANTHRACITE COAL REGIONS FAVOR LONG STRIKE TO WEAKEN THE MINE WORKERS' UNION

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

ARTICLE III.

POTTSVILLE, Pa., Nov. 15.—John L. Lewis has had a conference with Governor Pinchot and the mining camps—Tamaqua, Mahanoy, Glendower and the score or more of other mining towns to the north and west of Pottsville—[illegible] buzzing with rumors. Little knots of miners stand around [illegible] guesses as to what their officials and the coal operators [illegible] their sleeves. Most of them want and expect a quick settlement [illegible] do the smaller business men.

But among the officials of the Reading railroad, which is the dominant capitalist group in this vicinity, and from the spokesmen of the branches of the big packing companies like Swift and Armour, and other individuals whose interests lie with the big capitalists, comes a different note.

They say that the operators would be foolish to settle now if they have to give any concessions whatever to the union as the longer the strike lasts the weaker the union is getting. According to these people the union must be smashed. More than that, they make the claim that many of the miners are willing to leave the union and go back to work the moment the operators open up their mines.

A road building contractor who has been employing a number of miners since the strike, and who talked freely on a train yesterday, said: "These anthracite miners will not fight like the bituminous men. These fellows are not going to live in tents for months and exist on strike relief and charity. They want to work and they are sick of this strike right now. This fellow Lewis and his gang of thugs are all that would keep them out of the mines if the operators open up."

There is just enough truth in the above statement to make it sound plausible and the hangers-on of the coal barons derive much consolation from repeating it, or similar statements, early and often, in places where it will do the most good or harm as the case may be.

There is no question that the least conscious elements among the strikers are tired of the strike. It could not be otherwise, with the demand for the check-off put in the foreground in a district where a closed shop already is in force and with demands for increased wages and better working conditions given secondary consideration.

Nor are the strikers in receipt of any official information from their leaders. They have to depend upon the capitalist press for their news of conferences and negotiations. It is not surprising if under these conditions there is a certain amount of distrust and discontent.

One of the most discouraging things in connection with this strike—a consequence of the class collaboration tactics of the union officials—is the pathetic confidence displayed by large numbers of the strikers in the business men and the local and state officials. A statement by Pinchot arouses a great wave of optimism; the rumor that the chamber of commerce is to call a conference heralds an early and favorable settlement; the complaint of some coal consumers' league about high prices produces a great wave of enthusiasm.

The miners for the most part do not see themselves as warriors in a class struggle; they are fighting the battle of "the American public." Their officials have told them this and they believe it.

Still more dangerous to the union is another opinion heard even among the miners which is an echo of the capitalist press propaganda to the effect that "The operators are suffer

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

CHANG TSO-LIN has ordered his mercenary troops back to Manchuria, which means that the pound sterling of the British capitalists and the dollars of Wall Street are not able to bolster up his waning power in China. Chang is now the favorite son of those imperialists who want to keep that great country divided so that they can gobble it up at their leisure. Feng, so-called "Christian general," with the support of the Soviet government and the Chinese masses, aims to unite the republic and clip the claws of the imperialists. Soviet diplomacy has recorded great victories in the Orient. The old and oily liars of the bandit powers met more than their match in the workers' representatives from Moscow. We don't say that this victory can be entirely accounted for by attributing it to superior brains on the part of the Soviet diplomats. It is more a matter of honesty on one side and the usual treachery that goes with capitalist diplomacy on the other.

THE French are busy murdering the Druse tribesmen in Syria and it is not surprising to see a great campaign of horror against this barbarity in the British press. It takes England to cop the booby prize for hypocrisy. Not so long ago General Dyer massacred a square full of Hindus because they did not immediately disperse at his command. The inhuman butcher was afterwards honored by the government that now arches its tory eyebrows in indignation over the acts of the imperialist butchers of France. What a fine collection of crooks are our capitalist rulers are!

IF any of you ever attended grand opera you might have noticed considerable applause occasionally for no apparent reason, other than that the star, if male, finished the operation of telling the prima donna that he liked the dimple in her cheek. While the operatic warrior is recuperating for the next step, applause helps out to keep the audience from going to sleep. This is where the claquers come in. They are paid for their services. It's hard work but making a living under capitalism is the main order of business and is no snap.

NOW it happens that in the city of Chicago, Samuel Insull, besides having a monopoly on the kind of gas desperate workers commit suicide with, also controls grand opera. Sam, being possessed of a "civic spirit," thinks that claquers are entirely out of place in opera. He therefore, to use a slang phrase, gives them the gas. Any star employing claquers in the future will fade from Sam's payroll just as expeditiously as an ex-soldier, who never received the price of his glory would pass from this mundane sphere after smoking a gas tube. In the future, wage slaves who attend opera may be able to take a nap in peace.

WRITING for a western labor paper of his experience in Soviet Russia, Powers Hapgood, member of the United Mine Workers of America, and relative of Norman Hapgood, well-known journalist, declares that Russia has made tremendous progress under Communist leadership. He mixed with officials as well as rank and filers. Is there free speech in Russia? Hapgood says there is, with a vengeance. Some of the workers kick and some don't. Those who admit that Russia is yet no land of milk and honey, say that it's their country anyhow, they run it, and

RED INTERNATIONAL AND MEXICAN TRADE UNIONS TO DISCUSS WORLD UNITY

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, Nov. 15.—The executive committee of the Red International of Labor Unions after receiving a report from the representatives the Mexican Trade Union Federation and the workers attaché to the Mexican embassy in Moscow, adopted a resolution in which it welcomes the establishment of direct contact between the Red International of Labor Unions and the Mexican Trade Union Federation, "Crom" (Confederacion Regional Obrera Mexicana) and accepting the invitation made thru Martines to send a delegation of the Red International of Labor Unions to the coming Mexican Trade Union Congress. The executive committee decided to inform the Mexican Trades Union Congress in written form of the point of view of the Red International Labor Union upon the establishment of international trade union unity.

LEE PERFORMS FOR BOSSES IN RICHMOND

Ku Klux Mayor Aids Scabby Bill

(By H. J. POWELL,
(Worker Correspondent.)

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 15.—W. G. Lee, national president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and a notorious labor lieutenant of capitalism was the guest of "honor" (!) at a luncheon given by the local Ladies' Auxiliary B. R. T.

"Scabby Bill" peddled the usual labor fakers' propaganda: Live up to the promises made your employers by the brotherhood.

This creature, who obviously considers the B. R. T. his personal property, said that if any of the members opposed the policies of the B. R. T. (formulated by him in the bosses' interests, he being only interested in preserving his job as a capitalist flunkey—H. J. P.) they ought to join one of those quick acting organizations which strike first and talk it over afterwards."

A Motley Crew.

A fitting gang was on hand to receive this traitor— Gov. E. Lee Trinkle, Mayor Bright of Richmond, a local idol of the petty shopkeepers, etc., in general and the "koo koos" in particular. Last, but by no means least, C. S. Lake, assistant to the president of the C. & O. railway. Lake, spokesman for the railroad officials present, lauded Lee's "work," speaking of him as "one of America's truly great men."

An appropriate finishing touch was given to this meeting by the presence of H. A. Rist, as chairman. This individual, formerly engaged in making an honest living as a railroad worker, now carries out the delectable task of attempting to instil capitalist poison into the brains of workers' children under the guise of director of a "Boys' Club," supported and dominated by the local branch of that aggregation of labor-hating morons known as the Rotary club.

If the rank and file of the B. R. T. want their organization to be something more than a dues-paying machine, they must drop their aristocratic ideology, build up a left wing, [illegible] Lee and his gang and place control where it belongs—not in the hands of any group of individuals, but the membership itself.

KAUFMAN'S TRICKS, INCLUDING FAKE TELEGRAM FROM WORKERS PARTY, FAILS TO SAVE MACHINE

By WILLIAM W. WEINSTONE.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 15.—The reactionary Morris Kaufman machine in the Furriers' International Union special convention is crawling before the power of the left wing and progressive bloc. Kaufman has employed every trick to retain a standing, including the use of a sham telegram to divide the opposition.

Kaufman succeeded Friday in his maneuvers to some extent by withdrawing the machine's report against the New York joint board, and putting thru a compromise motion, but the left wing progressives rallied their forces and defeated the machine in the Saturday session.

Counter Maneuver.

The last two days' sessions were one continuous round of excitement. The Kaufman machine was desperate in the face of the left wing progressive bloc, which rules the New York Joint Board and whose dominant influence controls the Furriers' convention, changing their tactics from one of war to one of peace in carrying out a game of diplomacy, to which weakness the Kaufman machine reacted in a last minute effort to divide the progressive forces by withdrawing the report condemning the New York board and making a peace proposal, justifying the International for "upholding the constitution" but exonerating the Joint Board from those violations which were alleged grounds for war against it by the machine.

Several of the "progressive" bloc, Winick and Woll among others, voted with the machine for this compromise, and others, among them Sorkin, abstained from voting, enabling the proposal to carry by 37 to 28, with eleven abstaining.

RUSSIAN WORKERS TO RECEIVE 10 TO 20 PCT. INCREASE IN WAGES

(Special to The Daily Worker)

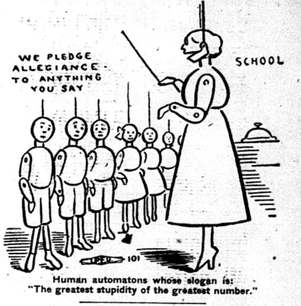
Moscow, Nov. 15—In consequence of the general betterment of the economic situation of the Soviet union, wages in almost all branches of industry will be increased by from 10 to 20 per cent. This will come into force with the new collective agreements which are at present being negotiated. Today the collective agreement of the wood workers gave them an increase of 12 per cent in wages and the agreement of the building workers an increase of 15 per cent.

Refuse to Postpone Miners' Convention

By A Worker Correspondent

DOWELL, Ill., Nov. 15.—Local miners balked efforts of the Farrington machine to postpone the district convention by voting against the resolution when it came up at this week's meeting of Local 3703, Union Mine Workers of America.

THE GOAL OF EDUCATION WEEK



WE PLEDGE ALLEGIANCE TO ANYTHING YOU SAY SCHOOL

Human automatons whose slogan is: "The greatest stupidity of the greatest number."

The Constitution and American Education Week

Today marks the beginning of "Educational Week." Each day of this week is observed in the schools, churches and other institutions for the purpose of emphasizing some particular delusion employed by the capitalist class to hold the workers in ignorance and fear. For each day of this week there have been planned thousands of new assaults upon the minds of the workers and their children by the slimy crew of pen prostitutes whose mission it is to try to make the working class believe the thoughts the ruling class wants us to believe. To express our deep resentment and utter contempt for everything revered by the capitalist class and its government we rip asunder the veil of lies and expose the class character of the governmental propaganda during this week. The first day being "Constitution Day" we expose some facts regarding that document.

• • • •

By H. M. WICKS.

IT is appropriate that the first day of educational week for the purpose of emphasizing the illusions of the capitalist class should be devoted to the United States constitution. It is the cloak beneath which the ruling class of this country perpetrates every bestiality upon the working class. It is the bulwark of class rule. Within its confines permanent benefit for the working class can ever be realized.

It is more frequently referred to in patriotic eulogy than any other document and it is less understood. Most people who revere it know nothing about it. To know the facts about the constitution and its purposes is to hold it in contempt as one of the foulest pieces of designed despotism ever concocted.

It is utilized by the capitalist class for every reactionary legislative, military or judicial act against the workers. Injunctions aimed to crush organized labor are prepared by expert constitutional lawyers. Child

FRENCH MOVE BACK BEFORE REBEL FIRE

Battle Is Raging Near Damascus

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BEIRUT, Syria, Nov. 15. — Druse tribesmen and Syrians launched a concerted offensive under cover of darkness last night, to evade the bombs from the French planes, and succeeded in routing the French forces, driving them back toward Damascus and today the battle is raging near that city, with the lines so close together that in many places hand to hand fighting ensues. Airplanes are helpless, as they fear dropping of bombs will kill their own forces.

In this sort of close fighting one rebel is superior to three Frenchmen, because of their amazing physical strength.

Rebels Hold Town.

Already Bashey, Hasba and other villages between Damascus and Sidon are in the hands of the rebels, the French forces having retreated before the fire.

As soon as the rebels approach a town or village the population endeavors to join their ranks in the struggle against the imperialist butchers.

Near-Death Helps Miners to Observe Noted "Peace" Day

(By R. M., Worker Correspondent)

WHEELING, W. Va. (By mail).—Evidently none of the capitalists in northern West Virginia deemed armistice day of sufficient importance to cease operations and give their slaves a holiday for services rendered during the last world war. All the plants, mines, etc., were in full operation.

Nothing of any consequence took place to commemorate the event. Even though the kept press did its best to print sentimental articles about the significance of the day, the workers are too wise any more to swallow this. No one took it seriously.

However, an event occurred down at Moundsville, W. Va., just 12 miles below this city, which very fittingly commemorated the day that was supposed to have brought peace to the world. A Greek miner at a 100% scab mine, the First Street Coal Mine, was seriously injured under a heavy fall of stone. The perfectly safe conditions of the scab mines are asserting themselves as usual at the workers' expense.

Gold Dust Twins Did the Work; Resulting in $987,224 Profits

The world renowned Gold Dust Twins are gold miners for the benefit of their stockholders. For the year ended Aug. 31, 1925, they turned over a profit of $987,224, representing toil on the dishwashing of a nation. This means a return of $3.73 a share or about 15% on the no-par common stock valued at about $25 a share.

Tricks Fail to Save Kaufman Machine

to work for and the attitude to be adopted toward the Sorkin progressive group.

Kaufman in Demagogic Speech.

Kaufman, who closed the debate on the report after an entire day's discussion in which the left wing continued its bombardment of the reactionary policies, delivered a demagogic speech and ended with the "exposure" of the alleged telegram.

Ben Gold of the left wing opposed the introduction of the substitute motion, well understanding the trick of the Kaufman machine and lost by only one vote, 34 to 35.

After the vote the machine rushed for adjournment, refusing to recognize Gold's motion proposing an interpretation of Kaufman's motion and declaring for co-operation with the New York Joint Board, but the chairman ruled Gold's motion out arbitrarily.

"Socialist" London on Platform.

Meyer London, who has been adviser to the machine, and who sits next to President Kaufman, was challenged to leave his place and go take his proper place in the audience, but the Kaufman machine, which brought up the Communists as the "controlling body" refused to yield to the charge of socialist interference.

As soon as the substitute proposal carried, London changed his attitude of "impartial interest" and threatened with clenched fist to strike left wing delegates. The Kaufman machine felt it had carried off the victory for the day and won the ground it lost during Thursday's battle, when the lefts came out with flying colors in the exposure of the rottenness and reaction of the machine.

Saturday's session cut short this victory. The progressives who voted with the machine on the sham proposition, and those who abstained, realized their untenable position before the membership of New York, who would regard this as a betrayal and they returned to give war to reverse entirely the action of Friday night.

The progressives introduced a resolution declaring that the New York board had cleaned out corruption, fought against suspensions and the reign of terror and had built up the union. The resolution instructed the incoming executive board to co-operate fully with the New York board.

Kaufman's machine which, in its dread of overthrowal, had built a Chinese wall of constitutional regulations making it impossible to get any change without an overwhelming majority or even unanimous approval, fell back upon every loophole to get out of the situation.

The lefts and progressives stood their ground. The appeal was not accepted despite parliamentary procedure. Gold, who led the fight was blocked by sheer high-handedness of the chairman who refused absolutely to accept the resolution, but wished only to force a vote on a motion to reconsider, which would require a two-third majority.

The lefts and progressives argued that the action Friday was illegal on the ground that the substitute was introduced as a resolution after Thursday's resolution could be introduced and which would require unanimous consent—which it did not receive because of the left wing delegate Schneider's objections.

This was the ruling of Kaufman on the new resolution which lefts argued applies also to Friday night's resolution and made it illegal.

The chairman then tried to rush the roll call, but could not proceed, delegates refusing to allow it. Gold demanded the right to appeal against the chair's ruling, but the later would not allow it, knowing he could not be supported.

Motion of delegates to adjorn was not allowed. Time for lunch recess arrived and yet he would not allow adjournment, all the time advised by London.

Finally he was forced by delegates who would not allow the railroading of their resolution.

The afternoon session opened with similar attempts to proceed and a similar attempt at railroading, but the machine could not succeed and was compelled finally to yield to an appeal made by Gold and was defeated forty to thirty. Some of Kaufman's own delegates being unwilling to stand for his autocracy.

Again, however, Kaufman attempted to put through steamroller tactics. Six o'clock was approaching when time for final adjournment of the convention was to take place. He tried to rally out of town delegates to force the lefts to yield. Every move was countered by the lefts.

Sensing the determination of the lefts and progressives Kaufman again resorted to compromise and proposed an interpretation of Friday's resolution, that it meant liquidation of the fight and cooperation with the Joint Board, no recriminations for the past struggles, etc.

The machine was beginning again to crawl. Still the lefts did not yield, proposing that both resolutions be sent to committee for immediate decision, and this the machine was compelled to do under pressure of out of town delegates who were growing impatient with Kaufman's obstructive tactics.

The committee brot in a unanimous decision declaring the Joint Board had fought against violation of democratic principles, membership suspensions, and that under chaotic conditions created in the organization by the former administration, not all constitutional interpretations had been lived up to by the lefts and progressives. It pledged support to the Joint Board and Friday's action was interpreted as liquidation of the struggle against the Joint Board conducted by the reactionaries.

In effort to take defeat gracefully, and keep up appearances, the Kaufmanites seconded the resolution and it was carried unanimously. The lefts and progressives recovered the ground. The smile of satisfaction was missing from the machine politicians' wily faces on Friday, after this day's exciting battle.

Proves Telegram Forgery.

The falsity of the fake telegram Kaufman tried to use to retain his power by splitting the left bloc was proven by the following reply to the inquiry sent the Chicago headquarters of the Workers (Communist) Party concerning the supposed telegram introduced as an "exposure." The general secretary, C. E. Ruthenberg wired as follows:

"The Workers (Communist) Party in this statement does not abandon the right to advise its members regarding policies pursued by them in shop organization, but issues its categorical denial of sending the alleged telegram, the use of which shows up the machine as the unscrupulous clique resorting to every device to maintain power."

The convention will adjourn Monday night. Sunday's session is devoted to committee meetings all day.

Coal Barons Like Long Strike

ing more than the miners in this strike." There is evident a distinct tendency in some sections to speak more bitterly of the union officials than of the operators and this is the best proof possible of the disastrous effects of the non-working class attitude adopted by the union officialdom. The strikers are confused, they are idle when they might be working, the officials have not driven home the class issues in the struggle. On the contrary, their every act and utterance in the anthracite field is a negation of the class struggle. Even the few strike meetings which have been held have been "public" meetings attended by business men and local officials as well as miners. It is the old story of a "community" undertaking which under the pressure of the big capitalists and their propaganda machine becomes a planless protest causing endless bickering and dissension among the workers themselves.

All thru the anthracite fields the Red Cross, the Salvation Army and the Y. M. C. A. are conducting financial and membership drives The union officials support these drives because they are "American." In a moving picture show last night, a union official delivered a four-minute speech in behalf of the Red Cross. The Y. M. C. A. records an increase of 350 members in a three-day drive in this little city of 20,000. This support of every one of these leach-like organizations of American capitalism is supposed to result in building up favorable "public sentiment."

So far this sentiment is not inimical to the miners but this condition is due to the fact that the business men still think that the miners will win.

But the local babbittry is getting nervous. Business is not good. The local sheet has the following comment:

> It is time for pressure to be exerted by municipalities thruout the anthracite region to bring the mining suspension to an end. We would suggest action by councils and school boards, by civic and fraternal organizations, and by the unanimous action of business men. None of these things will have the immediate effect of bringing the suspension to an end, but if all act in conjunction, WITHOUT TAKING SIDES TO AN EXTENT THAT WILL ANTAGONIZE, weight of this concerted action will be no small factor in restoring prosperity and happiness to our region. (Emphasis mine, W. F. D.)

The business element does not want to take sides as yet, but as the strike continues, the miners find that their middle class "friends" inspite of the negation of the class struggle by the officialdom, are becoming more and more critical of the union and the strikers.

The churches are beginning to demand "peace" and a cessation of the "un-christian" warfare, and in Pottsville there are 14 churches large enough to have their pictures in the Saturday edition of The Pottsville Republican with about a dozen more of lesser importance.

The churches have the check-off if the union doesn't. When the clerics need dough they solicit the miners. Those who are religiously inclined give the parson an order on the coal company and the operators obligingly check the donation off the miners' pay.

As has been said, this is an American strike in an American community altho the miners are mostly of foreign birth and descent.

Polish Politicals Go on a Hunger-Strike

MOSCOW, Nov. 15.—In the Lublin prison (so-called castle) a hunger strike broke out, as a protest on the part of 53 political prisoners against the thrashing of their comrades which occurred one of the last days. At the same time news come about a hunger strike of protest by 20 political prisoners in the Kobrin prison (near Brest-Litovsk).

Textile Workers Fight Multiple Loom System

Cannery Bosses Organized.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15. — Cannery workers should note what their employers are publishing in National Canned Foods Week, another one of America's advertising weeks. The canning bosses claim $75,000,000 invested in the industry and say they are well organized. The meat packers are heavily interested and the American Can Co., a monopoly in its field and branch of the steel trust, co-operates closely with the canners. Canneries have spread to almost every state. Cannery workers everywhere are low paid and without union organization to face these powerful business combines.

Charge Political Prisoners Poisoned.

WARSAW, Nov. 15.—The population of the Polish town Vladimir Volinski has been flung into great excitement by the news that the political prisoner Waldermar Kraiz has been poisoned in the prison hospital where he lay seriously ill. The doctors report states that a jug of milk containing a strong dose of strychnine was given to the prisoner.

When that argument begins at lunch time in your shop tomorrow—show them what the DAILY WORKER says about it.

UNION OFFICIALS USE THUGS ON SHOP WORKERS

Amalgamated Members Attacked at Meeting

Members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, representative of various shops, who were holding a conference to discuss means of resisting wage cuts now being carried out under the guise of "readjustments," were set upon Sunday morning by gangsters of the A. C. W. officialdom in the Biltmore Hall, Division and Hoyne streets, and after a terrific battle, in which many were badly beaten, those who remained in the hall were arrested by the police who opportunely could not get hands on any of the gangsters.

The meeting had not started and only some 50 workers, mostly women, were waiting the arrival of others, when about eight gangsters in a close group, ,of Local 39, an old hand at this business, entered with drawn revolvers and lined the workers up along the wall in true bandit style.

But the union gangsters were not after the few pennies in the pockets of the workers. Instead, they proceeded to attempt to beat them up with blackjacks, one by one. This of course, led to battle, the workers fighting with chairs and every available weapon, altho mostly being women, the gangsters' weapons were too much for them. Yet the hall became a fierce battleground. screams, smashing furniture and windows mingled with blows right and left and the turmoil of struggle continued for about 20 minutes.

Nor did the gangsters get away unscathed, chairs were used with telling effect by the workers who fought bravely and well with impromptu weapons against blackjacks, knucks and revolvers.

the hour of going to press.

The police, who were blind to the gangsters, arrived on the scene with three or four wagons rounded up the victims of the attack, waiting for the injured to finish first aid treatment being given by a doctor in the building, and carried all workers they could lay hands on off to the Humboldt station at Oakley and North avenue.

Fascists in Chicago.

The Italian fascists, who have just smashed the bonafide trade unions in Italy, made an American appearance in Chicago armistice day when a number in regulation black shirts attended a dance at the Auditorium Hotel. They had been with the anti-labor dictator Mussolini when he seized the city of Rome in 1922. From an address by M. Lauro it became evident that there is an organized fascist movement in Illinois of which Lauro is president.

WAR VETERANS HEAD DENOUNCES SENTENCE IMPOSED ON GITLOW

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 15—In a statement to the press today Emil Holmes, national president World War Veterans protests the sending to prison of Ben Gitlow, Communist, of New York and recent candidate for mayor. Mr. Holmes said:

"According to a law recently enacted by the fascisti of Italy it is a crime punishable by deportation or prison, to be a Mason or an Odd Fellow. Today we have seen Ben Gitlow of New York and recently a candidate for mayor of that city sent to prison for a long term because he is a Communist. This similarity of tactics by the Al. Smith-Tammany Hall organization seems sufficient cause to ask if they stand for a fascist dictatorship in America.

Mr. Gitlow was not sent to prison for crime as we usually understand that word. He is only guilty of being a candidate for office and for being an outspoken opponent of the present administration. Like the Mason or Odd Fellow over in Italy he had a different conception of what was right and wrong than the people in political power and the result here in New York City. U. S. A. is a term in prison. Veterans' organizations should write and wire protests of this American dictatorship to their members of both houses of congress as well as to President Coolidge."

Bloody Job of American Butchers in Morocco Must Arouse World's Workers

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, Vincent Sheean, the special correspondent of the North American Newspaper Alliance with the Riff armies in North Africa, appears in the list of apologists for the American aviator-adventurers who have been bombing defenseless villages, and murdering helpless old men, women and children.

Sheean claims these mercenaries, picked up in Paris, didn't know the kind of butchery they were doing; that they were attacking fortified cities. It must take a peculiarly twisted capitalist newspaper mind to pass thus on this mentally diseased viewpoint of a sordid business. Yet Sheean convicts not only himself, but the American "Hessian" aviators, thru his own reports.

This is the story of Sheshuan, a little Arab city of 12,000 to 15,000 inhabitants, nestling between two mountains. The city is famous in Morocco for the peaceful and religious character of its inhabitants. Until 1920 they had been under the heel of Spanish occupation. Later they had been won for the cause that Adb-el-Krim champions.

"But," in the admission of Sheean, "it (Sheshuan) has never had, and has not now, any other military significance," except that it is a telephone center for the Riffians. The population is non-combatant—"women, children, old men, Jews, holy men and scribes." Yes, there was also a hospital, "the only fairly decent center for the treatment of wounded in the entire kingdom of Abd-el-Krim."

Add to this the fact that the city has no garrison and as Sheean admits, "the total number of Riffians never exceeds 15 or 20 at one time." The head of the city is an aged, infirm native who never leaves his bed; while next to him in authority is an invalid, Caid Haddu, 60 years old.

To attack this unprotected city was the bloody work allotted to the "brave and courageous American," looking for adventure in this colonial war of French imperialism. In discussing the motives of these ugly spawn of an American parasite class—it is claimed they all have independent incomes—the Riffian leader, Abd-el-Krim, said:

> "You say they are young fliers looking for adventure. If they want adventure, why don't they volunteer to work the guillotine for the French? There's just as much adventure working the guillotine or hanging condemned prisoners, as in dropping bombs on defenseless villages."

• • • •

Then Sheean, who spent some time in Sheshuan, continues the revolting story:

> "On their first day they (the Americans—Major Pollock, Captain Mustain, Captain Bullen and Lieutenant Ferran—remember their names) killed two women, one Jew and one young man. In the first raid which I experienced there, they killed three women and one child.
> "When I left Sheshuan, after 10 days spent there with malarial fever, the American raids killed quite a few people—I have heard the number estimated at 150 to 200. The dead were exclusively non-combatants. . . It so happened that these raids never came when Riff troops were in Sheshuan."

• • • •

Then Sheean tells of meeting these American butchers of men and women and children in the Hotel Cecil in Tangiers. They had again bombarded Sheshuan that morning, "flying exceedingly low and releasing more than 30 bombs over the city," then proceeding to Tetuan for lunch with the Spanish officers, and later to the "international zone" in Tangier for dinner. Sheean makes this comment:

> "If they flew low enough to see the water play in the fountain in the public square—Captain Mustain did fly that low—they flew low enough to do enormous damage.
> "While they were tranquilly lunching in Tetuan as the guests of the Spanish. . . little Arab children were wandering tearfully thru the ruins of their houses, looking for their dead mothers. . . Adb-el-Krim's few officials were no doubt grimly superintending the removal of the mangled remains of women, children and peaceable old men."

It is upon such butchers as these that the American ruling class depends when it seeks officers for its "state cossacks," as in the Pennsylvania coal fields, or "leaders" for the state militia and federal troops when they are sent into strike zones. These murder scenes in Morocco may be transplanted to this country at any time, as they have been duplicated in past great industrial struggles.

That is a moderate picture of imperialism going about its bloody work. It is drawn by one of imperialism's chief apologists—the prostituted news writer. Yet it gives an inkling of why the peaceful men of Sheshuan have joined the fighting columns of Abd-el-Krim, why North Africa and the Near East flames against the profit rule of France, Spain, England, the United States and other capitalist lands. When American workers feel wet blood upon the hands of their exploiters in this country, gripping at their throats in the effort to crush and keep them in submission, they must know it is the same murder hand of profiteers that scatters death in Africa, Asia, South America and everywhere else that discontent offers resistance. Out of this common agency grows the adamant solidarity of the industrial workers and poor farmers of the great capitalist countries with the oppressed peoples in the colonies and the subject nations. It is the solidarity that will finally triumph and bring the new day into the world.

KLAN LEADER CONVICTED OF SLAYING GIRL

Jury Gives Life Sentence to Grand Dragon

NOBLESVILLE, Ind., Nov. 15.—D. C. Stephenson, grand dragon of the ku klux klan, chief adviser to Governor Jackson, and proved to be a degenerate of the lowest type (a typical klansman) was convicted here last night of the murder of Miss Madge Oberholtzer. The conviction carries a sentence of life imprisonment.

The jury was out five and a half hours and when the gong sounded indicating it had reached a decision the courtroom was immediately filled. Stephenson and his two companions, Earl Gentry and Earl Klinck were brought in. The verdict saved the life of Stephenson, finding him guilty of second degree murder and freed the other two defendants.

Revolting Crime.

The crime for which Stephenson was convicted was one of the most revolting in criminal annals. Less than a week after he met the girl whom he eventually murdered, he kidnaped her, seduced her, bruised her body with sadistic assaults and in every repulsive manner satisfied his perverted lust. The girl, to escape the fiendish torture, tried to end her life by swallowing poison. Stephenson and his companions held her prisoner in a garage for several days, then when they thought she was in a dying condition brought her to her home. She recovered from the effects of the poison, but died from infected wounds as the result of Stephenson's teeth bites upon various parts of her body.

Famous As Kluxer.

Stephenson was the most prominent member of the ku klux klan in Indiana and Ohio and played an important part in the election of Governor Ed. Jackson of that state. He organized the klan in both states which he dominated as the "grand dragon."

Thru control of the other degenerates of his type who make up the membership of the ku klux klan, this monster openly boasted that in Indiana he was the law. He maintained an establishment where nightly debauches of the most outrageous character were held. The profligacy of the klan leaders became common knowledge, but in spite of having seduced most of the young women in the vicinity of their operations, he and his gang were free from prosecution, owing to the influence of the hooded order. It was only after the foul murder of Miss Oberholtzer that action was reluctantly taken again him.

The second degree murder verdict is unquestionably due to klan influence. Had there been one possible loophole there would have been no conviction, but the evidence was so overwhelming that some sort of verdict of guilty was the only solution.

Leers at Jury.

When the verdict was read Stephenson leered at the jury and made a move toward them. It was learned that a dozen ballots were taken on Klinck and Gentry, but never was there any doubt as to Stephenson's guilt.

People here are of the opinion that the ku klux governor, Jackson, will find an excuse to pordon the degenerate before very long.

Papal Agents to Resign from Cabinet If Dutch Legation Leaves Rome

THE HAGUE, Nov. 15.—Holland faced a cabinet crisis in the resignation of four catholic ministers from Premier Colijn's cabinet, following the adoption by the second chamber of an amendment to the budget calling for the withdrawal of the Dutch legation at the vatican.

How Much Profit Did Your Boss Take from You for the Casino?

DEAUVILLE, France, Nov. 15.—Now that the Americans have returned home the Casino is counting its profits. The annual statement shows that baccarat made 32,325,107 francs for the Casino, approximately two million dollars. This is an increase of 4,913,159 over last year's profits.

LEWIS BETRAYS MINERS' DEMAND FOR NATIONALIZATION; IGNORES THE DEMAND FOR A LABOR PARTY

The following is the last of a series of articles by Alex Reid, secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee, telling of the strike of the anthracite miners and the relation of their struggle to the class struggle as a whole. The present article is a telling indictment of the administration of John L. Lewis, whose very words are used to illustrate his treachery. Reid, a miner for 39 years and thoroly acquainted with the subject, handles it in the most able manner.

By ALEX REID

Secretary Progressive Miners' Committee.

ARTICLE XII.

We come now to the progressive miners' demand for nationalization of mines with workers' control.

It is only a matter of five years ago, that the miners in their international convention indorsed the membership's demand for nationalization of mines with workers' control, and elected a committee to gather data in connection with the same, and to prepare a bill to be introduced in congress, for nationalization of the mines and further pledged themselves to launch a drive thruout the country for support.

No one at that convention will ever forget the scene of wild enhusiasm, as John L. Lewis, then acting vice-president, in Hayes' place, supported by Bill Green, Frank Farrington, and the delegates unanimously, thundered forth to the expectant determined coal diggers that:

"We declare for the nationalization and democratic management of all the coal mines in the United States."

The scene at that time in the convention was inspiring. John Lewis was playing to the gallery. He knew the miners were fighting for nationalization, and the demonstration for that program was unmistakable and unanimous.

Contrast that statement with Lewis' position now on nationalization, as shown in his book recently published, entitled The Miners' Fight for American Standards.

"We propose to allow natural economic laws free play in the production and distribution of coal. Real co-operation between the men and ownership can be attained all the more so because, they have a common interest of resisting the onslaughts of the irresponsible elements which dominate the industry in regions where labor is virtually enslaved."

Repudiation of nationalization is now the policy of the Lewis machine. The progressive miners demand nationalization of mines, and in the present anthracite strike made it a part of their program. They, the progressive miners, have received the most bitter opposition from the Lewis machine, a part of which went so far as to go into the capitalist courts in Scranton, Pennsylvania, and aid in the railroading of progressive miners to prison.

Whom Do You Mean?

We ask Lewis, who are those elements that dominate the industry and have virtually enslaved us? And who are those with whom we have a common interest?

Any man of average intelligence knows the miners are enslaved thruout the whole of the country, and the enslaving force is the same everywhere—the coal owners of the nation. The miners are in a state of semi-starvation thruout America, union and non-union fields alike and no man is more responsible for this situation than Lewis himself with his class collaboration machine.

A common interest. With whom have we a common interest? Such bunk as virtually enslaved miners having a common interest with the millionaire mine owners is ridiculous.

This common interest-class collaboration policy of Lewis' has resulted in the wrecking of the union and decreasing the miners' wages thruout America, Nova Scotia, Alberta, Washington, Colorado, Wyoming, all the states in the southwest, and most of them in the east are today working under decreases direct or indirect as a result of this "common interest" policy.

A Common Enslavement.

When this policy was breaking up the union and further reducing the virtually enslaved miners, John L. Lewis stood by and refused to call a national strike and protect the enslaved, thereby aiding the common interests in the enslavement.

Nationalization of the miners is a partial solution for the situation in the mining industry of this country and will go a long way towards remedying the evils which we have enumerated here. The present strike is not dealing with fundamental causes, and its settlement will settle practically nothing.

Private Ownership's Result.

The same conditions will prevail after its settlement, and continue as long as the mines are privately owned and operated for private interests. Other strikes of the same character will follow, with the same suffering, chaos, starvation and despair.

The progressive miners will continue to fight for nationalization with workers' control, and, will continue to fight the Lewises until victory is achieved.

The miners at that convention, and at many more since and before that convention, where they discussed nationalization of the mines, pointed out the fact that nationalization was a political question, and that it was necessary for them to use their power to establish a political party in the furtherance of nationalization.

Officials Opposed Labor Party.

Accordingly, the miners have introduced resolutions at practically all their conventions endorsing, and demanding the formation of a labor party, and instructing their officials to work for that party.

The officials of the union instead of working for a labor party, have never lost an opportunity to work against it, and in the last election we saw John L. Lewis, acting as campaign committeeman for Coolidge on the republican party, while Farrington worked for the republican party in Illinois, and Green for the Wall Street candidate, Davis, on the democratic ticket.

Cappellini Turns His Coat.

The progressive miners have continuously worked for a labor party, and in the last tri-district convention were successful in having a resolution adopted indorsing the labor party. However, we find Cappellini, president of District 1, of the United Mine Workers in Scranton, a few days ago at a meeting of the so-called constitutional educational league repudiating a labor party and all in connection with it.

The mine workers will continue to fight for a labor party, composed of labor unions and like organizations of workers, on a program of immediate concrete demands, and will eventually march to victory in spite of all the republicans, democrats, Greens, Lewises, Farringtons, and jails in America.

SCRANTON BUSINESSMEN HOT AFTER ANTHRACITE 'PEACE'—AND PROFITS

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 15.—Altho efforts of Governor Pinchot to bring about a conference between the two factions in the anthracite coal strike have apparently not yet met with immediate success, business men in the hard coal regions today continued to work for peace between the miners and operators.

A committee was instructed to do all in their power to end the strike following a meeting here of thirty representatives of business men. The strike has seriously affected business in the anthracite region, according to merchants.

MUSSOLINI RELEASES FASCIST CRIMINALS UNDER GUISE OF AMNESTY FOR JAILED WORKERS

ROME, Nov. 15.—The recent splurge in the American and European press about the release of 15,000 prisoners from Italian jails, which was heralded by many of the "liberals" as a change of heart of the fascist dictator, Mussolini, and an end to the fascist reprisals on the workers, is given the lie by the following facts and figures gathered by the Italian section of the International Red Aid:

In the whole of Italy the following sentenced workers were released:

In Piemonte, 79; Lombardia, 160; Veneto, 83; Ven. Giul., 46; Ven. Trid., 15; Liguria, 131; Emilia, 150; Toscana, 340; Marche, 73; Umbria, 47; Lazio, 53; Abruzzi, 27; Campania, 80; Puglia, 231; Basilicata, 4; Calabria, 39; Sicilia, 40; Sardegna, 8; making a total of 1,606.

Thus of the 15,000 amnestied prisoners only 1,606 were workers, who had been put to prison under some pretext because of their opposition to the fascist dictatorship. All the others amnestied were fascist thieves, incendiaries and murderers, that had been given light sentences. Very few of the amnestied workers reached their homes as fascist bands laid in wait for them, rearrested them and [illegible] to stand trial again.

FRENCH "CIVILIZATION" IN DAMASCUS

The upper scene shows how French imperialism is exerting her "civilizing" force on ancient Damascus. These ruins are the remains of buildings that were in the Moslem section. The lower picture shows a French officer and Senegalese troops behind a street barricade set up by the French to harass the natives that still remain in the city.

DICK FORD WILL FACE TRIAL FOR MURDER DEC. 1

Hostile Judge Busick to Try Case

CHICAGO—(FP)—The General Defense committee reports that Blackie Ford, the Wheatland hop fields organizer, will have to stand trial before the bitterest anti-I. W. W. judge in California. Ford was rearrested on leaving Folsom prison on parole after serving over 10 years of a life sentence for murder though he had no share in the slaying of mob leaders who carried police commissions and shot into a meeting of the strikers with their wives and children. He will be now tried for the killing of the second of the two attackers. The judge who was to have jurisdiction disqualified himself by publicly saying that Ford should have been hanged. Gov. Richardson then appointed Judge Busick of Sacramento who has distinguished himself by an injunction making it contempt of court to belong to the I. W. W. in California. The trial is set for Dec. 1.

Hebrew Printers Get a Record Wage Scale

NEW YORK—(FP)— Two weeks vacation with pay and wage increases feature the gains by the newspaper branch of Hebrew-American Typographical Union 83, affiliated with the International Typographical Union. The wage increases are spread over five years, with a dollar now, and an annual increase of $1.50 a week for the four years thereafter, bringing the weekly rate finally to $72.

Hours remain six for day work and four and a half for nights. The Hebrew-American printers have shorter work days than any printers in America. They have jurisdiction over the New York Jewish papers composing rooms.

Even Proportional Representation Is Little Aid to S. P.

CLEVELAND—(FP)—Proportional representation failed to prove the open sesame to the city council so far as Cleveland's progressive labor candidates were concerned. Five progressives failed to get any nearer the council than under the old system.

In Dayton Willard Barringer, Socialist, received 3,033 votes for council, but failing of election.

Thomas Devine, Toledo Socialist, placed third in the mayoralty contest.

Child Labor Laws Passed.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 15—Chile and the Irish Free State have ratified several of the child labor draft conventions of the international labor conference the U. S. department of labor, children's bureau, reports. Chile is the first Latin-American country to ratify. The conventions provide, among other things, that no child under 14 shall enter industry and that no child under 18 shall do industrial work at night.

SYRIAN COMMUNIST PARTY GREETS AMERICAN NEGRO LABOR CONGRESS

Among the many communications of greeting that the American Negro Labor Congress, which recently held its sessions in Chicago, received was the following from the Communist Party of Syria, which has its headquarters in Damascus, which was recently the scene of a savage assault of French troops on the Moslem section of the city where thousands of Syrians were brutally murdered:

"To the American Negro Labor Congress, Chicago.

"Dear Comrades:

"The Communist Party of Syria sends you fraternal greetings.

"The Syrian workers who are now conducting an unequal struggle against rapacious imperialism feel more than ever the necessity of a united front of all workers of the world without distinction of color or of race.

"Your congress, which will lay the basis for a world organization of tens and hundreds of thousands of Negro workers will play a great historic role in the emancipation movement of all the workers from capitalist exploitation.

"For the emancipation of the colonial slaves from the yoke of imperialism and capitalism!

"Long live the united front of the workers of all colors!

"Long live the Peasants' International (Krestintern) the world organization of the peasants for emancipation!

"Central Committee of the Communist Party of Syria."

West New York Police Arrest Strike Pickets

WEST NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—In connection with the strike in the Hillcrest Silk Mills of West New York a number of arrests have been made recently in spite of the fact that the strike proceedings have been peaceful thruout.

Yesterday two pickets were arrested and Judge Miles issued a statement saying that no picketing could be allowed anywhere near the plant.

A. Weisbord, the organizer of the united front committee of textile workers, was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct. From these facts it seems that the textile bosses of West New York are using considerable pressure in order to defeat the strikers.

News has come to this office that strikebreakers are being hired for munificent wages and with all sorts of attractions offered them in order to move them to West New York.

Only Organization of Labor Can Aid Bakers

NEW YORK—(FP)—"Investigation and congressional action will not help the bakery workers any in their fight for better conditions. Only a thorough organization of the bread trust factories and a powerful union will bring betterment to the bakery workers," says the Free Voice, of the Amalgamated Food Workers union.

A minimum wage of $30 per week for the lowest paid workers in bakeries is demanded in New York and New Jersey. Proportionate wages for more skilled workers and strict observance of the 8-hour day are other demands.

U. S. Sailors Proved They Also Resented Jailing of Workers

By ART SHIELDS.

NEW YORK—(FP)—The stone walls that enclose Mooney and Billings, Sacco and Vanzetti, Rangel and Cline, Ford and Suhr and a host of western wobblies had a chilling effect on the reception Australia gave the American fleet, says Ben Bright, an active spirit in the Australian Seamen's union, now visiting New York.

Bright was in Sydney when the fleet came and he says the Trades and Labor assembly's refusal to participate in any of the greetings and gala affairs to the visiting battleship men—because of Uncle Sam's jailings of union labor—had the effect of a huge chunk of ice. So much so that several sailors got up on union platforms and pleaded that they likewise resented the persecution of labor in their home land.

It was hard on the sailors but hard too on Australian Babbitry when worker daughters stepped away from boys in blue on the dancing floor. So newspapers came out plainly with appeals for dancing partners for the sailors and they let it be understood between the lines that they were not particular as to the kind of girls,—the main thing was the sex.

But it wasn't much of a success. Adding force to the movement and perhaps furnishing the major reason with the more conservative sections of labor was the general resentment against the warlike gesture involved in the sending of the fleet.

Australian Seamen Stand Firm Against the Pound Wage Cut

SYDNEY, Australia—(FP)—Although every effort has been made by the ship-owners to get crews for the idle British vessels in Australian ports, the ships still remain idle. Only in isolated cases are men going back to work, and those resuming are more than counter-balanced by the crews of other vessels going on strike. Only a mere handful of men have resumed work since the strike started about two months ago, and the total now out on strike number over 6,000.

Though no settlement of the dispute has been reached, it is understood that business interests in Australia are willing to find enough money to meet the demands of the seamen for the journey back to Britain so that the vessels can be taken away from Australia. The men are not likely to accept this offer unless they get a guarantee there will be no victimisation when they reach Britain.

St. Louis Tailors Steadily Winning

ST. LOUIS—(FP)—The strike of St. Louis union tailors for the 44-hour week is approaching victory. The strike originally involved 500 workers. Settlements have reduced the number to 90.

MARSHAL PETAIN CITES AMERICAN MERCENARIES FOR 'DILIGENT SERVICE'

RABAT, Morocco, Nov. 15—Marshal Petain cited the American mercenaries in Morocco massacring the Riffians, who are fighting the imperialist domination of France for their "bravery" and "diligent performance of duty."

"The airmen," Marshal Petain wrote, "daily executed difficult and hazardous missions. In six weeks they executed more than 350 errands of this nature and dropped more than forty tons of projectiles."

SEAMEN'S LAW TARGET OF THE SHIP OWNERS

Don't Want It, Even If Ineffective

WASHINGTON—(FP)—Repeal of all the essential clauses of the La Follette seamen's act except the one removing the threat of imprisonment when in a safe harbor, is proposed by the organized shipowners of the United States and endorsed by the U. S. chamber of commerce, who will hold a joint conference in Washington Nov. 16-17 to frame a bill.

Andrew Furuseth, president Intl. Seamen's Union of America and author of the seamen's act, describes the coming conference as one designed to destroy the American merchant marine in order to build up the British merchant marine. This, he adds, has been the object partially attained by the U. S. shipping board under admiral Palmer and his predecessors.

Among the chief points which the shipowners would repeal are: Requirement that 65 percent of the deck crew be skilled seamen; that the crew understand the language in which the orders are given by the officers; that payment of wages, amounting to half the sum due, shall be made by the master to the seamen on demand in any safe port (thereby enabling the seamen to quit the vessel); that firemen shall not be compelled to go on deck in wintry weather on the great lakes to work, that crews shall not be taken out on the great lakes after the close of safe navigation.

Shoe Manufacturers Assail Workers' Union

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The American Shoe Workers' Protective Union, including many shoe workers of many of the largest shops of the city, is facing a severe struggle with the shoe bosses.

The argument between the union and the shoe manufacturers' board of trade expired on November 1. Instead of making demands for better wages and better conditions for the workers, the leaders of the union allowed the manufacturers to take the offensive. The manufacturers proceeded to demand the right of "hire and fire," the right to select employes of their own choosing during slack periods, the elimination of certain legal holidays from the old agreement and the right to interfere in the organizational matters of the union. The leaders of the American union put forward a meek demand for a return to the old conditions, but the shoe workers would not tolerate such weakness. They demanded the immediate repudiation of the manufacturers' terms and all insisted upon their own demands.

A sentiment is spreading thruout the trade for the amalgamation of the American union and the protective union, for a 15 per cent increase in wages thruout the trade; for full pay for all holidays; for non-interference by the manufacturers in the internal affairs of the union.

The shoe workers are fully aroused and are determined to secure their demands.

SOVIET RUSSIA'S EXPERTS GO TO STUDY INDUSTRY

Delegates Will Visit Various Countries

MOSCOW, Nov. 15.—Soviet Russia is preparing to send a commission representing the various state manufacturing trusts to Germany, France, Czecho-Slovakia, Great Britain, Canada and the United States to study industrial development in those countries and make arrangements for purchases of machinery by Soviet Russia.

The commissions will leave Soviet Russia the moment their passports are granted by the various countries where they intend to visit. The delegations total between 150 to 200 experts, the largest ever sent by Russia, who have had long years of experience in the lines of manufacture they intend to study.

Doubt is raised as to whether a delegation will be able to visit the United States since the refusal of Secretary of State Kellogg to permit the scientist, Abraham Joffe, to enter the United States at the request of the Rockefeller institute.

To Inspect Plants.

Instead of buying machinery from specifications this extensive tour has been proposed in order to inspect plants in operation to get ideas as to the latest foreign methods of manufacture. Oil, rubber, steel, cotton, food, sugar, wool, coal, electricity and metallurgy industries.

"The commission is anxious to visit the United States, not only for the purpose of discussing possible terms for purchasing equipment but to obtain new ideas from personal study of the manufacturing plants," said a member of the delegation. "Russia is now in a position where virtually all the industrial establishments are worn out and must be re-equipped entirely. This task, which is stupendous, has just been undertaken by the government.

Need New Machines.

"With new machinery of the latest types we want to remodel the plants and erect new ones embodying the latest methods of manufacture used in the countries we purpose visiting. These methods and the machinery will be used in Russia for many years. Consequently the work of the commission means more than merely placing orders which are large in themselves. It commits the government to continued purchases for at least ten years.

Importance of Credit.

"We realize the reluctance of American manufacturers to extend credits. However, the giving of a certain amount of credit now means the installation of the manufacturers' machinery and continued orders in the future whenever the machines are worn out, in whole or in part, or additional machines are needed. American manufacturers should also realize that while American banks refuse to extend them credit to do business in Russia, the same American banks extend credit to German banks, which in turn finance German manufacturers doing business on a long-term credit basis here."

Consolidation of the Railroads Is Demanded

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Nov. 15.—Enforced consolidation of all railroads in the United States into one system "under such supervision and control of the interstate commerce commission as that body now exercises over the several lines," was requested in a resolution before the annual convention of the National Grange here.

The resolution was introduced by A. S. Goss, master of the Washington State Grange, who declared that "competition no longer governs the making of rates or establishing of service."

POLISH SECRET POLICE BRUTALLY RAID WORKERS' SECTION IN VILNA

VILNA, Nov. 15.—The working class quarters were surrounded by the military and 600 workers were arrested in the mass arrests in Vilna. The majority of the prisoners consists of Jewish and White Russian workers. The Polish secret police declare that the arrested men are members of the Communist Party of west White Russia, in actual fact, however, many of the arrested are members of the Jewish association "Poale Zion" and still others are absolutely partyless. The Jewish co-operatives were literally plundered. Many Jewish and White Russian teachers and writers, including many who have absolutely nothing to do with Communism, are amongst the arrested. The prisoners have been badly mishandled.

Arrest Trade Unionists.

In Grodno, all the leading trade unionists have been arrested. The Jewish members of parliament have raised the matter in parliament and have demanded an immediate legal inquiry into the happenings.

All the Vilna newspapers which published news of the arrests have been confiscated. [illegible]

According to the latest reports in the neighborhood of Vilna mass arrests have taken place amongst the peasantry also. In the district of Maloberestovitz alone over 30 peasants have been arrested. Several schools in Vilna and the neighborhood have been closed down as the teachers are under arrest.

Government Provocations.

From the district of [illegible] comes a report that the police agents have been provoking the peasantry by calling for the formation of guerilla bands, after which all who fall in any way for the provocation are arrested and brutally maltreated in [illegible] stations.

Unify the Party!

minst International, and their united struggle for the party and the Communist International.

• • • •

THE PARTY'S IMMEDIATE TASKS.

THE basis for the unification of the party is a common energetic struggle to carry out the following main tasks of the party:

A. ENERGETIC support of the bolshevization of the party thru (1) carrying thru the reorganization of the party on the basis of shop nuclei and street nuclei (international branches) in the shortest possible time, (2) the organization and mobilization of the membership for work in the trade unions thru a campaign to have all the members of the party become members of the trade unions and the systematic organization of active trade union fractions (3) an energetic struggle against the right wing and opportunistic deviations and as part of this struggle, the development of a systematic Marxist-Leninist education to raise the theoretical level of the party, (4) the Central Executive Committee will subject its policies and actions in all fields to constant review and criticism. This prerequisite to bolshevization has not been practiced by the party up till now.

OUR TRADE UNION ACTIVITIES.

B. The trade union policy of the party must be fundamentally revised and our work in this field reorientated accordingly to the line laid down by the Communist International and the Profintern. Vacillating tactics which oscillate between opportunism and leftism must be replaced by sure and confident Leninist tactics which combine firm principle with the greatest flexibility and adaptibility to concrete problems. The trade union work of the party must be unified with the general political work of the party. We must make the aim of our trade union work the revolutionizing of the trade unions and the drawing of the organized workers into the struggle against the capitalists as a class. The building of a firm and centralized structure of party trade union fractions must be carried on with greater energy and a clear distinction must be made between the party fractions and the general left wing movement. The party must assist the organization of the left wing in the trade unions on a broad basis and aim to combine all the progressive and opposition elements into a bloc. The official name of such a bloc is of secondary importance. The party must not hesitate at the measures necessary to prevent the narrowing down of the organized left wing movement to the Communists and their close sympathizers.

THE LABOR PARTY CAMPAIGN.

C. The struggle for a labor party must be again brought to the forefront of the party work and for this purpose the party must develop a program for 1926 election which will again mobilize the whole party for a systematic campaign to achieve this purpose. The campaign for the defense of the Soviet Union against imperialism, among the Negro workers, work among the women, must be connected with the campaign for a labor party and must serve to create the sentiment for an aid in the actual establishment of a labor party.

WORK AMONG THE MASSES.

D. The great task before the Workers (Communist) Party at the present time is to unite the party and mobilize all its forces for work in the class struggle. The energy of the party members must be thrown into mass work in all fields. Activity among the masses as a prerequisite to bolshevization must be drilled into the consciousness of every party member. The party must fight with all its power and with every necessary strategy against the attempt to isolate it and throw its energy back upon itself. The party must also conduct a resolute struggle against the tendency to construe "party work" only in the sense of inner party work as well as against the tendency to make an artificial separation between mass work and inner party work.

UNITE IN SUPPORT OF THIS PROGRAM.

4. The policy of the Central Executive Committee is to draw the entire party into the work of carrying out the decisions of the national convention and to give every member of the party the opportunity to work for the party, make it a real force among the masses, to draw the whole party into constructive work for the upbuilding of the party and wipe out all factional lines. All comrades who accept this platform must be given full and complete opportunity to participate in party work and responsibility, according to their ability and without any discrimination.

5. The Central Executive Committee welcomes the stand in favor of unity and the progress already made by the Young Workers' (Communist) League towards the liquidation of factionalism and the unification of forces. The National Executive Committee of the league now joins in the adoption of the resolution of the Central Executive Committee of the party as the basis for the continued work and for the complete unification of the league.

6. The Central Executive Committee calls upon all units of the party and the Young Workers' League to seriously study and consider this resolution and to adopt it as their platform. The adoption of this resolution on the party situation by the Central Executive Committee, the District Executive Committee, City Central Committee, and in the shop nuclei and branches should be the signal for the wiping out of all factional lines and united work of all supporters of the Communist International for the upbuilding of the party.

Binghamton Celebrates Eighth Anniversary of Soviet Revolution

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y., Nov. 15.—Hundreds of workers gathered at the Lithuanian Hall to celebrate the eighth anniversary of the Russian revolution.

Comrade Schapp of Chicago, was the main speaker. He pointed out the preparations of the capitalists for a new offensive against the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and the necessity of the workers to show a greater international solidarity in order to fight for the defênse of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

The Red Army Funeral Song was sung by the Ukraine Children's Chorus of Binghampton in honor of Comrade Mikhail Frunze, Soviet Russia's war minister, who recently died.

Other revolutionary songs were rendered by the Lithuanian and Ukrainian chorus.

A collection amounting to $45 was taken for The DAILY WORKER.

Hartford Celebrates for Russia.

(By Worker Correspodnent)

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 15—With Bertram Wolfe, head of the New York Workers School, as the principal speaker, and wiht Sam Darcy speaking for the Young Workers League of America, workers of Hartford filled the hall of the Labor Lyceum this week in celebration of the eighth anniversary of the Russian revolution.

Discussion centered around the Dawes plan ,and the Locarno Pact followed by a unanimous resolution demanding the recognition of Soviet Russia—to be sent to Washington, D. C.

Street Nucleus Two in Section Three, Chicago, Makes Excellent Start

Street Nucleus No. 2, Section 3, Chicago, held its first meeting last Tuesday. This nucleus has made a good beginning already.

The secretary, Comrade Verna Gasunas, reported on the section 3 committee meeting. After a short discussion on dues, International Labor Defense, work in unions, workers' school the question of The DAILY WORKER was taken up. Altho every member had already contributed to The DAILY WORKER before, some more than once, the comrades donated at this meeting, and also pledged contributions. A collection of $5.00 was taken up.

Our nucleus has chosen a correspondent, who is to write up the activities of the nucleus, as well as other news, for The DAILY WORKER.

One new member joined the nucleus at this meeting.

The much feared language difficulties proved to be no handicap at all. Even at the first meeting, Comrades discussed many questions intelligently.

One new member and $5. to The DAILY WORKER at its first meeting, is a good start for our nucleus.

Minneapolis Busy with Reorganizing

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 15.—Seven street nuclei and one shop nucleus will be formed immediately in Minneapolis as the result of the recent re-organization meeting for the Workers Party. What it is hoped to accomplish by the new nuclei was explained by H. Skoglund, while Matt Tenhunen of Superior, Wis., was present to translate his message to Finnish members.

Moscow Textile Union Pledge Assistance to Reichenberg Strikers

MOSCOW, Nov. 15.—The central committee of the Textile Workers' Union has sent a telegram to the Red Union of Textile Workers in Reichenberg expressing solidarity and sympathy with the strike in north Bohemia. The Reichenberg union sent a similar telegram of greetings to the conference of the textile workers which took place Moscow.

SECTION SIX (CHICAGO) SHOP NUCLEI REORGANIZATION MEETING IS ATTENDED BY NEARLY 300 COMRADES

By MARTIN ABERN.

Nearly 300 party members from the Northwest English, Irving Park English, Northwest Jewish, Karl Marx Scandinavian, Russian, Lettish, Ukrainian No. 1, Jefferson Park Slovak and Polish N. S., assembled at the Section 6, Local Chicago, Workers (Communist) Party, reorganization meeting on Thrusday, November 12, 1925, at the Workers' Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Blvd.

This was a magnificent turnout and was more than all the previous four section meetings combined, both in numbers and percentage of members represented in the old branches. The percentage was approximately 80 per cent and there is every indication that many absent comrades will come into the shop and street nuclei very soon. The both English, Jewish and Russian branches did especially well in attendance.

In Section 6 a number of shop nuclei were organized as follows:

Co-operative Restaurant, 3 members; potential shop nucleus in another restaurant; in the .... food nucleus, 3 members; in the .... clothing shop, potential nucleus; the .... clothing factory, 3 members; Chicago, Northwestern railroad shops (previously organized, 2 added, now 8 members.

From the character of the shops and factories where shop and potential shop nuclei were formed, there is no doubt that other members are working there. The Section 4 reorganization meeting will reveal those.

Shop Nuclei in other Sections Formed

A number of potential and actual shop nuclei were found at Thursday's meeting to belong to other sections. These are as follows: In Section 1, in .... Hat Co., potential nucleus; in .... Clothing Co., 4 members; in the .... department store, 3 members.

In Section 4, the .... food industry, potential nucleus; the .... Clothing Co., potential nucleus; .... Clothing Co., potential nucleus; the .... Machine Co., potential nucleus; shop nucleus, made up of group of comrades working close together, 5 members; the .... Clothing Co., potential nucleus; the .... picture frame company, potential nucleus; .... Electric Co., 7 members; the .... Clothing Co., potential nucleus; Nucleus No. 8, Clothing Co., added one, now 4 members.

In Section 5, the .... Studio Co., 4 members.

If another member is found to be working at the shops of the potential shop nuclei, as is likely, these will make up the regular shop nuclei; otherwise comrades will be attached to function with these units.

Ten street nuclei having a total of 70 members were formed. Fifty members, either working by themselves in other sections or living in other sections, will be transfered to shop or street nuclei in other sections.

It is interesting and significant to note that the vast majority of our membership are working in shops, mills, and factories by themselves. Many are in comparatively small shops and factories, but large numbers are in factories employing thousands of workers. The smallness of our party no doubt accounts in part for the above situation. A task before our Communists working alone in factories will be to develop and carry on agitation which will result in drawing in new members in the shops into the party and thus into the shop nuclei.

Nuclei Secretaries Meet Monday to Organize Section.

The attendance at the meeting was excellent; similar was the enthusiasm and interest displayed in the organization. It was not possbile on Thursday to complete all the technical details of shop and street nuclei organization. These wil be completed at a special meeting of the temporarily appointed secretaries of the shop nuclei and street nuclei of section six. Special letters have been sent to the provisional secretaries to attend the provisional section six committee meeting to be held tonight, Monday, November 16, 1925, 6 p. m., at the district party office, 19 S. Lincoln St. Secretaries are urged to come to the office immediately from work in order that the meeting may be opened promptly at 6 p. m

Of the comrades who were present 117 were members of labor unions, as follows: Amalgamated Clothing Workers, 21; International Ladies' Garment Workers, 14; Capmakers, 1; Food Industry, 7; I. W. W., —; Window Washers, 1; United Wall Paper Trades, 1; News Writers, 1; Machinists, 14; Office Workers, 5; Railroad Clerks, 1; Patternmakers, 1; Boot and Shoe Workers, 1; Moldres, 1; Bakers, 1; Sheet Metal Workers, 2; Barbers, 5; Janitors, 2; Painters, 7; Bricklayers, 1; Laborers, 1; Cement Workers, 1; Newspaper Drivers, 1; International Pressmen, 1; Butchers, 1; Electrical Workers, 1; Watchmakers, 1; Bank Employes, 1; Cigarmakers, 1; Metal Polishers, 1; Teachers' Federation, 1.

Only one more section, number four, remains to be reorganized in the party in Chicago, and then the process of integrating the nuclei, sub and section organizations will be hastened. The section four meeting, the Mid-City Industrial Area, is expected to bring out the membership as well as the section six meeting. It will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 18, 1925, 7 p. m., at Roosevelt Hall, 3437 West Roosevelt road.

Class in Capital Begins Tonight

IN the Workers' School class in Capital, which begins Monday night, November 16, 8 p. m., at 19 So Lincoln St., the method of study will be as follows:

Previous to each meeting of the class (which is every Monday night), a definite portion of Marx's first volume will be assigned the students for special study. On the basis of the sections assigned, a list of questions will be presented. Each student must present to the class a paper, written in his own words, answering these questions. The class will then spend its sessions discussing the papers, and preparing for the next lession.

The first lesson consists of Chapter 1, Section 1, of the first volume of "Capital," pages 41 to 48. The questions to be answered are:

1. What is the form of wealth in capitalist society?
2. What is a commodity?
3. What are the two factors of a commodity?
4. Distinguish between use-value and exchange value.
5. How can quantities of such different commodities as corn and iron be placed in a relation of equality?
6. What part does use-value play in the exchange of commodities?
7. What is the common characteristic or property of all commodities?
8. What is the substance that finds its expression in the exchange relations of commodities?
9. In what manner is the value of a commodity related to the labor-power used in its production?
10. Has every use-value also an exchange value? And has every exchange-value also a use-value

Rail Unions Figure 1926 Elections Will Aid Them This Year

CLEVELAND—(FP)—Railway labor chiefs, meeting here, decided to push the battle for the Howell-Barkley rail labor bill in the December session of congress. Success appears possible as the coming session will consider all measures solely with an eye to the 1926 elections. Railway labor's million votes loom large.

St. Louis Building Trades Council Gets Locals Affiliation

ST. LOUIS—(FP)—Large numbers of building trades unions are reaffiliating with the building trades council. Several unions withdrew a year ago.

Attention!

The section membership meeting of Section No. 4, which takes in the following branches: Armenian, Armenian Independent, Greek, Douglas Park English, Douglas Park Jewish, Spanish, Shop Nucleus No. 7, Shop Nucleus No. 8, Shop Nucleus No. 5 (Daily Worker), Czecho-Slovak Branches No. 1, No. 3, Brookfield, North Berwyn, Czecho-Slovak Cicero Men and Women, Italian branches: 11th Ward, 19th Ward, 31st Ward and Terra Cotta (now in the 31st Ward, Italian Cicero, Cicero English, Cicero Lithuanian No. 74, Lithuanian No. 77 and No. 2, South Slav No. 1, Bulgarian, will be held Wednesday, November 18, 7:30 p. m., at ROOSEVELT HALL, 3437 West Roosevelt Road.

Every member of the Workers (Communist) Party, attached to any one of the above-named units, in the Workers (Communist) Party, must attend this meeting, if he or she wishes to retain membership

Registration of all members will take place there. Comrades will be assigned either to shop or street nuclei.

It is of the utmost importance to the successful reorganization of the party in the city of Chicago that every member belonging to Section No. 4 attend this meeting.

Comrades! Be on time at the meeting.

Even Jail Guards in Union Drive in Colo.

DENVER—(FP)—Organization among Denver workers is taking a leap forward with new activity among the shoe repairers, teachers and jail guards. The Yellow Front shops are now 100% union with the formation of a Denver local of shoe repairers. The jail guards have joined the City Employes union and a teachers local is under way with the staff of the Denver Labor college as the nucleus from which to penetrate the public school system.

Important for Milwaukee, Wis.

Next Thursday, November 19, the party school will begin at Miller's Hall, 802 State Street, 3rd floor.

All the comrades who are willing to attend the school should be present on time. School will start at 8 p. m. sharp.

Comrade Oliver Carlson, from Chicago, will be in charge of the school. Every comrade that signed the application should be present.

SAFETY PACE FOR LABOR PRESS SET BY ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS; THIS AMOUNT MUST COME DAILY!

To meet The DAILY WORKER'S difficult financial emergency, just $1,000 came in Saturday, most of which represented proceeds from Soviet anniversary celebration meetings. If $9,000 more can be raised with similar speed, the paper's immediate safety is assured. This means, however, that there are less than two weeks left to accomplish the tremendous task.

And it means as well that an additional $10,000 is necessary before the end of the year to insure publication for 1926. To date, not quite half of the quota of $40,000 has been reached.

$19,965.36: this is the sum total to date, with the following as Saturday's list of militant helpers:

CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL INVITED TO PURCELL MEET

New York Demonstration Tuesday Night

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The trade union committee whch s organizing the Purcell meetings that will be held Tuesday evening, Nov. 17, at the Central Opera House and New Star Casino, has sent the following letter to the New York City Central Trades and Labor Council calling on the council to send representatives to these meetings on world trade union unity:

"Central Trades and Labor Council,
"287 Broadway,
"City.

"Dear Sirs and Brothers:

"When the news came to this city of the proposed visit of Albert A. Purcell, labor member of the British parliament, president of the International Federation of Trade Unions, and official representative of the British labor congress to the American Federation of Labor convention, a number of trade unions of this city organized themselves into the trade union committee to organize the Purcell meetings. This comittee now includes unions representing over 100,000 organized workers of the citiy of New York. It is arranging for a gigantic reception for Mr. Purcell at two big mass meetings at the Central Opera House and the New Star Casino to be held on Tuesday evening, November 17.

Invite Council Representative.

"Considering the fact that this is the final visit of Mr. Purcell the representative of the trade union movement of England to this city, before his departure for England, it appears to our committee that it would be altogether fitting and proper for your central body to offer some evidence of working class solidarity toward the British workers, in their struggle against British imperialism. We therefore take this opportunity to invite you to send an official representative to one or the other of the mass meetings which have been arranged.

Need for Unity.

"The message of world trade union unity which Mr. Purcell brings to this country is one of vital importance to the American labor movement. The threat of another world war, the maintenance of the eight-hour day, the fight against the wage cuts, the campaign against hte open shop, all these are vitally involved in the question of world trade union unity. Failure on the part of the central body to send official representatives of the organized labor movement of this city to participate in a project of such outstanding importance cannot be looked upon by the workers of this city without concern. We hope that your representative will be present at one or the other of the meetings mentioned so that we may have the opportunity of meeting personally Mr. Purcell, the representative of the British trade unions."

LOS ANGELES TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION DEMANDS RELEASE OF WHITNEY AND OTHER SYNDICALISM LAW VICTIMS

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 15.—At its last meeting the conservative Los Angeles Typographical Union No. 174 passed the following resolution by unanimous vote condemning the imprisonment of Anita Whitney, convicted under the California state syndicalism law, and demanding that she be immediately released as well as the other victims of that law and also demands the repeal of criminal syndicalism laws:

"Whereas, The United States supreme court has decided that it has no jurisdiction in a case recently before it, in which the so-called 'syndicalism' law enacted by the legislature of the state of California was involved, this decision, in effect, confirming the conviction of a number of persons, including Miss Anita Whitney of Alameda county, who, unless pardoned by the governor, must serve terms in prison; and,

Menace to Workers.

"Whereas, The so-called 'syndicalism' law is a menace to each and every man and woman in California, regardless of his or her status in society, who attempts to exercise to the fullest extent the right of free speech; therefore, be it

"Resolved, By Los Angeles Typographical Union No. 174, in regular meeting assembled, this 25th day of October, 1925, that it joins with all other organizations—civic, labor and religious—that have condemned this vicious measure, and hereby endorses the petition to be presented to the governor to pardon all persons convicted of violating the so-called 'syndicalism' law, and further respectfully petitions that he recommend to the state legislature the repeal of this unjust statute."

Allied Printing Trades Concur.

The resolution unanimously adopted by the Typos was also concurred in by the Los Angeles Allied Printing Trades Council.

The following excerpts are from a resolution adopted by the Central Labor Council condemning the decision of the United States supreme court which sends Anita Whitney to jail and calls upon Governor Friend W. Richardson to take steps to pardon Miss Whitney:

Condemn Supreme Court Decision.

"Resolved, By the Los Angeles Central Labor Council, that we emphatically condemn the decision of the United States supreme court in the Anita Whitney case, a veiled attack upon free speech, as well as the right of the individuals to exercise the right of affiliating with organizations, which if followed out by interests oppose to trade unions, and if allowed to pass without the exerting of every effort to counteract the effect of such decisions, will be used against the trade union movement, and be it further Demands Pardon.

"Resolved, That the Los Angeles Central Labor Council join in the effort of civic organizations, labor unions, newspapers and individuals that are making efforts to induce Governor Friend W. Richardson to issue a pardon to Miss Whitney before she begins to serve the sentence of from one to fourteen years for merely expressing her opinion on matters before the people at the time, and that this council instructs the proper officers to lend all aid and assistance to those who are exerting their efforts to secure the pardon of Miss Whitney at the earliest possible moment."

Juicy Plums Handed Out to Ward-Heelers by Office-Holders

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 15.—Politics and jobs with fat fees go hand in hand in the state of Illinois as one can easily see by the following figures taken from Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom's report:

Leslie P. Volz who served for years as private secretary at the Union Hotel headquarters of the republican machine, was appointed an appariser in the estate of Josiah H. Fahrney and for signing his name on the dotted line he was paid a fee of $1,151.62.

Hands Out Nice Plums.

Otto Cederwell was third assistant superintendent of streets until the Dever administration took over the city hall. For "experting" under Mr. Carlstrom, he was paid a fee of $282.62 in March, and $1,279.42 in August.

John Kjellander served several terms as alderman of the old Twenty-third ward and later was head of the prohibition staff in Chicago. He was paid $914.84 in five months.

W. Finucane is a brother of the late political leader of the southwest side. He was paid a fee of $511.26 in April, $21.82 in July, and $47.62 in August.

W. L. Miller and N. J. Harrington, two prominent politicians, were shown to be recipients of large fees. Millner was paid $522.30 in one case last January and $1,376.68 in another in the same month.

Harrington's fees totaled $4,029.04 in six months.

Mitchell Trial Ends in Row as Court Bars Some Vital Evidence

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The military trial of Col. William Mitchell broke up in a row this afternoon when defense counsel refused to proceed with their case until the war department has complied with their requests for hundreds of official documents.

The Mitchell defense was brot to a standstill when Colonel Sherman Moreland, judge advocate, objected to testimony of defense witnesses based upon carbon copies of official records. When the court sustained the objection, Representative Frank R. Reid, announced:

"Until these records are produced by the war department the defense will have no further testimony to offer."

COMPANY TOWNS NOT WHAT THEY ARE SAID TO BE

Feudal Paradise Made of Sunny South

By ART SHIELDS.

NEW YORK—(FP)— Alluring descriptions of the company housing which southern textile mills furnish are broadcasted in literature that the Dixie industrialists are scattering through northern textile centers for attracting skilled labor and investors. But after sifting away the rosy phrases of the press agent the hard fact remains that it is company housing and in company-owned villages. Any textile workers who follow the job to southern mills may expect to find their new bosses, landlords and often the civil government as well combined in the same corporation.

A sample of this literature is put out by the Florida Textile Corporation which advertises a coming company city of 10,000 souls at Daytona Beach, Fla. All this population will be housed in the company city, presumably with a company mayor, and its working population will make men's clothing, overalls, jumpers, shirts, mattresses, children's playsuits and automobile covers.

Industrial Georgia, a new blue boarded volume of the cotton manufacturers of that fourth leading cotton manufacturing state, says that 90 percent of the Georgia mills own their own villages and that 49 percent own their own schools, with a smaller ratio supplying the general stores for their communities.

The manufacturers' literature would have us believe that this company system is benevolent but in their appeal to investors and to northern mill owners we read of low wages, lack of labor legislation and child labor. Highest wages for boys under 14½ in the cotton mills in 1922 are given as $5 to $10 a week, with lowest wages at $3 a week. For girls the figures were $5 to $9 and $3 a week.

Average weekly pay for cottonmills in Georgia is listed as follows: laborers, $9; finishers, $9.75; sewers $9.20; examiners, $9.50; knitters, $13.80; loopers, $15; spinners, $12.18; boarders, $12.80; dyers, $12.26; carders, $12.80; firemen, $10; engineers, $18; machinists, $24.60; electricians, $35; foremen, $28; superindents, $45 a week.

An openshop, low-wage, company-housing, feudal paradise for employers.

Cotton Workers Force Bosses to Increase Wages After Strike

JOHN OWENS.

(Worker Correspondent)

RIPLEY, Cal., Nov. 15.—I am picking cotton on a large ranch or hacienda south of Ripley, California. Negroes, Mexicans and Chinese laborers are employed here. It is the custom in California to play off Mexicans, Chinese and Japanese against poor Negroes and poor whites.

Poor Wages.

We were being paid $1.80 per hundred pounds for picking cotton. The cotton here is much lighter in weight than cotton grown in the South. This is desert country; the air is warm and lacks moisture, and quickly dries out the cotton.

At $1.80 per hundred pounds a good picker could possibly make scant wages (from $2.50 to $3 per day is considered wages here for a day of nine to ten hours; ordinary pickers could hardly make board. There was much muttering and dissatisfaction, but no concerted action. I immediately explained to the workers the advantages of mass action. I enjoyed their confidences to a considerable degree because I was actually one of them, doing the same work, and receiving the same fare.

Strike 100% Effective.

I called a strike. They struck to a man and called their women out of the field. The strike was one hundred per cent perfect. Previous to this a few individuals has asked the planter for more money and had been discharged. We forced the boss to accede to our demands for a raise in price to $2.00 per hundred pounds.

Class interest is the "tie that binds." Mass action is the "open sesame" to liberty for the wage slave. May the day be not far distant when black, brown, yellow and white —the exploited of every land, join hands around the globe, from the rising to the setting sun, and shake forever from their manacled wrists the shackles of slavery.

Truck Kills and Wounds Students.

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 15.—Two died out of the 37 Harrison, O. high school students injured when a truck ran over an embankment into a creek near Westwood, O.

GERMAN COMMUNIST PARTY MAKES GAINS IN MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS IN BERLIN WHILE SOCIALISTS LOSE

By KARL REEVE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN, Germany.—(By Mail.)—The official returns of the Berlin municipal elections show that the Communist Party of Germany remarkably increased its strength, while the other large parties, including the social-democratic party, lost ground.

Communist Vote Increases.

The vote for the Communist Party was 347,382, almost 100,000 votes more than were cast for the Communist Party in the presidential election in April, 1925, when Ernst Thaelmann received 251,742 votes.

The petty bourgeoisie bloc, comprising the socialists, the democratic party, and the central party, which last April combined on the candidacy of Marx lost 432,279 votes. The three parties polled a total of 1,272,209 for Marx in the presidential elections, where as in the muncipal elections on October 25, their combined vote was only 839,930, with the socialists polling 604,704, the democrats 171,961, and the centrists 63,265 votes.

Hindenberg Bloc Loses Votes.

The Hindenburg, monarchist bloc received 229,161 less votes in the municipal election than in the presidential election. In April, Hindenburg, supported by the German national, the peoples, the Voelkische, the Wirtschafts and the German social parties, received 869,078 votes in Berlin. The combined votes of these parties, together with the Gemeinschaftsbund, which also supported Hindenburg, total only 639,917 in the recent election.

When the vote in the recent election is compared to the vote cast in Berlin at the Reichstag elections of December 7, 1924, the gain of the Communists is also emphasized. Altho the total vote cast in the municipal election was 18 per cent less than in the 1924 Reichstag election, the vote for the Communist Party was only 7.3 per cent less than in the Reichstag election.

Losses of Bourgeois Parties.

The vote for the socialists on the other hand was 13.66 per cent less in the recent election than a year ago. The vote for the German national party was 30 per cent less, for the democrats 30.66 per cent less, the central 50 per cent less, and the Volks party 25.24 per cent less.

In other words, the Communist Party, altho receiving a smaller actual number of votes than in the December, 1924, Reichstag elections, when a greater total vote was polled, was affected by, the falling off in the total vote this year less than any oother large party of Germany and was the only party that increased its vote over that cast in the April presidential election.

Navy Yard Wages Not to Go Up; Capitalist Gov't. Snubs Unions

WASHINGTON—(FP) — Employes of the Washington navy yard are deeply disappointed in the report of the local wage board to secretary Wilbur. They asked for an increase of 10c an hour. For machinists, who now get 82c the local board recommends no change. Raises of from 2 to 10c for small groups of employes are recommemded. The gardeners at the yard win the 10c raise.

N. P. Alifas, president of District 44 of the Intl. Assn. of Machinists, spokesman for navy yard workers, said the local report makes more difficult the fight he will conduct before the general wage board, beginning Nov. 20. For New York yard employes entitled to $1 an hour, the board there recommended only that their 87c be raised to 90c an hour.

Rail Telegraphers Still Holding Out

WASHINGTON — (FP) — Twelve hundred railroad telegraphers and towermen on the Atlantic Coast Line are standing firm in their strike, and shipments of freight are almost solidly tied up, according to reports from points along the system.

COL. FORBES AND JOHN THOMPSON, MILLIONAIRE, APPEAL FOR REVERSAL

Col. Charles R. Forbes, former veteran's bureau head, and John W. Thompson, millionaire Chicago and St. Louis contractor, both convicted of defrauding the veteran's bureau of many thousands and were sentenced to two years in jail and given a $10,000 fine are now before Federal Judges Evan A. Evans, George T. Page and A. B. Anderson seeking a reversal of the sentence and fine on a writ of error.

"Might Is Right," Says Von Tirpitz in Blast Against Locarno Pacts

BERLIN, Nov. 15. — Admiral von Tirpitz today made his first public utterance since the election of Marshall Von Hindenberg, in a sensational first page leader in Der Deutsche Tag, he vigorously attacks the Locarno pact and warns the German people against the danger of making treaties safeguarded only by mental reservations.

The admiral adds that the Locarno agreements dictate a decidedly anti-Russian policy. He dismisses the utility of the arbitration treaties saying "Might goes before right always."

SUPER-TRUSTS IN U. S. SHOW TERND OF DEVELOPMENT

67 Firms Have Seven Billion Capital

By LELAND OLDS.

The overshadowing importance of the supercorporations in American industrial life is shown in the capital stock tax returns to the U. S. commissioner of internal revenue. The report covers 326,100 corporations in 1921 with common stock of $56,607,362,000 and preferred stock of $13,623,115,000 par value, a total of $70,230,477,000. The fair value of this enormous capitalization, according to treasury experts, was $75,406,625,000.

The 67 largest corporations, each reporting more than $90,000,000 capital stock, had a combined capitalization of $7,589,420,000 at par with a fair value according to treasury experts of $12,383,197,00. Thus 1/5000 of all the corporations of the country have one sixth of the total capital stock value. The average capital stock of these 67 giants was over $180,000,000.

There were 864 corporations each with a capital stock of more than $10,000,000. These were the basis of $22,274,000,000 of the total stock at par and $30,827,000,000 of the total fair value. Although only 1/400 of all the corporations, this group represented nearly one-third of the capital stock at par and over two-fifths of the capital stock rated at its fair value.

The host of smaller corporations are survivals of a previous industrial order in which competition of thousands of independent business men was the rule. They will probably continue to appear in industrial statistics, allowed to survive to give the impression that the old order still exists. But the supertrust is the real order of the day and belongs in an entirely different category. It represents the development of state capitalism.

Negro Children Upset Wealthy Snob Circle

CLEVELAND—(FP)—In Shaker Heights, Cleveland's millionaire suburb, Negroes, Jews and other "undesirables" are barred under restrictions which will be maintained until after 2,000 A. D.

But 20 little colored children are clamoring for admission to the Heights' million dollar schools and the entire village has been thrown into an uproar hardly compatible with the dignity of bankers, brokers, corporation lawyers and other members of the high bourgeoisie. The Shaker Heights board of education has a contract with a small neighboring village to educate its children at so much a head in the Shaker schools. And now Negroes are settling in the neighboring village and demanding their rights under the terms of the contract. The courts have ordered that the colored children be admitted.

BUILDING A NEW SOCIETY

Industrial Revival in Soviet Russia
by
A. A. Heller

To workers interested in the development of Soviet Russia there is much of great interest in this book.

Here is in detail, for the first time, the practical result of the "NEP" (New Economic Policy), introduced by Lenin in the spring of 1921.

To those who would learn of the first years on the road that led to today's successes, this book will prove of real value.

Reconstruction in Soviet Russia

War Fable Explodes

When Sir Phillip Gibbs sat down to pen his story "Now It Can Be Told," he did not tell all. He could not, within the confines of one volume or one hundred. Bit by bit there is coming to light the secret details of the late war. The motives that impelled the nations into the mighty struggle are now matters of recorded history. The economic struggles, the frantic building of armaments, the diplomatic intrigues and the final grim impact of the armies, are known.

But in addition to the deadly roar of cannen, the inferno of liquid fire, the bursting of shells, the whirring of bullets, the poison gas, the airplane projectiles, there were propaganda bombardments against the home population that were relied upon effectively to crush opposition within. The most extravagant fiction, the most appalling bare-faced lies were told about the viciousness of the enemy. It was a period wherein the most vile, the lowest and meanest criminals, half-idiots and perjurers rose to places of eminence. Whole staffs of propagandists were hired to concoct tales of frightfulness. In the United States we had as chief liar George Creel, a cheap Denver, Colorado, scribbler, who attained previous eminence when he became the kept man of an actress, Miss Blanche Bates, who took pity on him and married him. No dope fiend ever dreamed more ghastly tales than Mr. Creel put forth as authentic fact.

Those who believe all the calumny of the protsituted publicity agents of Wall Street and religiously repeated and amplified it were patriots. Those who doubted and dared voice their opinions were pro-German spies and traitors.

One particularly obnoxious tale, on the face of it a lie, dealt with the German armies shipping back bodies of their war dead to place them in vats, boil them down so that fat for fertilizer and munitions might be obtained from them.

Now comes the confession of the real story by the Creel of England, one Brig.-Gen. John V. Chartiers, who bore the euphonious title: chief of the intelligence service of the British army.

The story was invented because England was worried over the attitude of the Chinese during the war. Some foul piece of designed mendacity had to be concocted in order to arouse the Chinese against the central powers. Chartiers was entrusted with the task. For a time he was puzzled. But one day his spies sent him photographs of two cars enroute from the German lines to the German interior. One of them contained dead horses, labelled "cadaver," the other dead soldiers who were returned for burial. The astute Chartiers simply transferred the label "cadaver" from the dead horse car to the one containing human corpses, making photos of this falsification and sending it to China, to influence the inhabitants who have a superstitious reverence for their ancestors and dead people generally.

Chartiers, himself, at a recent banquet in New York, recited this contemptible infamy as a joke.

The workers of all countries who were hounded to prison for daring to doubt the outrageous lies do not consider it a joke. The speech will be useful for us in the next war, when other Creels and other Chartiers spew forth their venom.

Missionary Defense of Zankov

A slimy christian missionary calling himself D. N. Furnajieff, writing in a stupid religous weekly called Chrsitian Work airs his views on Bulgaria in a recent issue. This apostle of ignorance and superstition polluting the minds of Bulgarian people with the obscene filth of the so-called holy bible and incidentally serving the imperialist interests subsidizing Zankov, the monstrous butcher of the working class of that country, tells his version of the cathedral bombing at Sofia. Like the other capitalist hirelings this clergyman accuses the Communists of the plot to assassinate the king. He says:

> The conspiracy intended to bury all these (cabinet members, the king and prominent government functionaries) in the ruins of the cathedral church, after which they could take possession and control of the country and government. Unfortunately for them and fortunately for the country, providence intervened and almost miraculously saved the life of the king.
> As we should (sic) expect, the arrests were made on a wholesale basis.
> Under the ruins of the cathedral church scores of people lay buried. The record of the number of lives lost has now reached two hundred.

Then ensues a melange of drivel about desecration of "the house of god." He deplores the fact that "a number of leaders of Communism, instigators and promoters of the plot, escaped arrest and found themselves over the frontier of the country."

His report reveals the habitual truckling to capitalist savagery of christians. It also exposes the workings of their disordered minds. His "divine providence" saved the life of the degenerate spawn of royalty who sits upon the throne, but permitted two hundred others to be killed. In the eyes of a missionary what are the lives of two hundred ordinary mortals compared to god's chosen king? If the christian god is so all-powerful why did he permit his temple to be destroyed? If god had the power to prevent the destruction of the king, he unquestionably had the power to prevent the explosion of the bomb. It requires no profound logic to reach the conclusion that it was not the people who bombed the cathedral who are responsible, but the god who permitted the bomb to explode. Hence the god of the Rev. Furnajieff is proved by his own representative to be a dastardly murderer. Instead of assailing the representatives of the battered and bleeding working class of Bulgaria he should launch a drive to dethrone god, who, instead of striking dead the bomb plotters chose to permit the murder of others.

The only extennating circumstance must be that god is so busy protecting the rulers of Europe that he has no time to protect the people.

The Communists of Bulgaria, like those of the rest of the world, are determined to dispense with missionaries, kings and their god. We will put the former to work and dispense with the latter thru loud and irreverent laughter.

The Constitution and American Education Week

labor is perpetrated in all its ghastly forms because the constitution upholds it. Bullets of militarism mow down women and children and soldiers in national guard uniforms burn them alive because the constitution protects them. Upon the authority of that document the outstanding figures in the vanguard of the labor movement are jailed for expressions of opinion. There is no nefarious conspiracy against labor that does not rest upon the constitution for its justification.

Liberal Deception.

One of the functions of the liberals in preserving capitalism is always to hark back to the constitution; to insist upon its provisions for the exercise of "pure democracy," being preserved. As Lenin so well said, the very concept of anything being "pure" is a bourgeois delusion, an unscientfic term that has nothing whatsover to do with dialectics. Under class rule there can be no such thing as impartial democratic privileges for all. When considering democracy we must view it as the democracy of a class—today either as proletarian democracy or capitalist democracy.

Not only liberals, but socialists (who are semi-liberals) also suffer from the illusion of bourgeois democracy and actually proclaim the possibility of a gradual growth into socialism within the confines of the constitution.

Far from upholding any semblance of democracy the one impelling motive of those who created the constitution was a hostile distrust of the ability of the people within the thirteen colonies to govern themselves. It was so constructed that the government was organized upon the principle of a system of checks and balances that would prevent the "mob" effectively achieving any benefits thru legal channels. Provision was made for a triplicate form of government, comprising the legislative, executive and judicial.

How It Works.

In the first division of the government two houses of congress were created known as the lower house and the upper house. The house of representatives is supposed to be composed of one representative for each 30,000 population within the states, while the senate is created on the basis of two senators from each state regardless of population. Bills originating in the house must pass the senate before they can be referred to the executive (president) and become law. Here is the first check. The senate can override the house.

The next division is the executive. The president must sign all bills, and if, for any reason, he does not desire to accept them he simply vetoes them and sends them back to the house or senate (depending upon their origin) and after the objections are considered the bill may again be voted upon, but cannot become a law unless a two-thirds majority of both houses vote for it. Thus 33 senators, representing 16½ states and a total population of 8,502,572, can prevent legislation favored by representatives of the other 100,000,000 population of the country. In other words representatives in the senate of less than one-tenth of the population can defeat the desires of representatives of the other nine-tenths. Yet this is the country whose government boasts that it will not recognize Russia because its government is not democratic, in spite of the known fact that the Soviet system is a thousand times more democratic than our own much vaunted system.

The third division is the gem of the whole thing. That is the United States supreme court. Nine judges, appointed for life by the president of the United States, have the power to declare illegal any law that may be able to get over the barriers existing in the two other divisions. When, for reasons of political expediency and in response to popular clamor, both houses pass a law and the president signs it, the supreme court can with impunity declare it unconstitutional. From its decision there is absolutely no appeal.

This brief outline, only gives some suggestion of how the system of checks and balances works, not to furnish political expression to the inhabitants of the country, but actually in order to prevent elected representatives passing laws that might serve the majority of the inhabitants of the country.

Constitution Changes.

When efforts are made to change the constitution we again meet with the most flagrant travesty upon democracy. Changes may be initiated by a two-thirds vote of both houses, but before they become effective they must be ratified by a two-thirds vote of three-fourths of the states of the union. That means that the 13 smallest states with a population of 5,535,742, could defeat a constitutional amendment that might be endorsed by the other 35 states representing more than 100,000,000. When we divide that by the fraction over one-third which would result in defeating the amendment in the given states we find that action preventing ratification can be achieved by legislators representing less than 2,000,000 population. So, in the final analysis we have the spectacle of representatives of a population similar to the city of Chicago or less than one-fiftieth of the population, defeating the will of the representatives of all the rest of the 110,000,000 population of this country.

Perhaps the socialist apologists of democracy and constitutional methods of achieving the liberation of the working class will explain to us how long they expect to wait to achieve anything worth while by constitutional means. The whole thing becomes still more absurd when one considers the fact that the so-called elected representatives are, almost totally, selected by sets of spoils politicians and that the mass of people who vote for them have absolutely no choice in their nomination.

To start with, our democratic prerogative is exercised only in voting for candidates chosen by the political machines of the master class. Then, if they are forced, in order to maintain democratic illusions among their canstituency, to vote in the legislative halls for a bill obnoxious to the capitalist class, the system of checks and balances comes into full play to destroy the bill.

Why It Originated.

The origin of the United States constitution is not to be sought for in the realms of miracles. It did not descend from on high, nor were the men who drafted it impelled by any benevolent motives. The thing was concocted for the immediate purpose of endeavoring to overcome the endless tariff and other antagonisms existing between the thirteen original states. The economic situation was such, with the interests of the slave owners of Virginia, Georgia and the Carolinas clashing with the manufacturers of the northern states, that no dominant economic class yet existed, so the constitutional convention, held in secrecy, was at best a compromise between the various groups.

The draft was adopted by the constitutional convention on September 17, 1787, but it encountered the most determined opposition from every state, with the exception of Delaware, New Jersey and Georgia. These three states adopted it unanimously, but their legislatures were small in number and were mere cliques, not at all representative of the population. In all other states, where the legislative bodies were larger, it required bribery, intimidation and violence to get the required number of votes. For instance Massachusetts adopted it by the narrow margin of 187 to 168; Virginia, 89 to 70; New York, 30 to 27. In every state there ensued fierce conflicts. Rhode Island was the last state to adopt it, after more than two years determined resistance by a vote of 34 to 32. It was literally bludgeoned down the throats of most states.

The Bill of Rights.

So obnoxious was the constitution when first drafted that at the first session of congress ten amendments were introduced known as the bill of rights. These amendments, besides the first which is supposed to guarantee free speech, free press and free assemblage, were calculated to grant state autonomy to a considerable degree.

Most people point to the bill of rights as a guarantee for the exercise of free speech, etc. But everyone knows with what viciousness every semblance of free speech is stifled if it endangers the ruling class. The present situation in the anthracite region of Pennsylvania gives the lie to the free speech illusion. The miners there do not even enjoy the nominal free speech which exists elsewhere. As to the masses having an equal opportunity with the ruling class for spreading their ideas a moment's consideration will dispel any such notion. The capitalist class controls the powerful press and utterances of workers protetsing against their miserable conditions are distorted in the most shameful manner in its columns. The best and most centrally located public auditoriums are closed to the workers. We are permitted to exercise our nominal right of free speech in dingy halls available in obscure neighborhoods and at exhorbitant prices.

Free assemblage is stifled whenever there is a crisis that might result in the workers being rallied to determined struggle to remedy their conditions. In every manner and in every part of the United States the first article of the bill of rights, which is the first amendment to the constitution, is a jest as far as workers are concerned.

The same thing applies to article 4, which guarantees the "right of the people" to be secure in their persons and homes from unreasonable search and seizure. How many times, within our own experience, have wholesale raids been made upon workers' homes thruout the country, without the slightest pretext of legality? Not merely do the police, the courts, and if necessary, the army, invade and terrorize the homes of the workers, but let the workers dare utilize their alleged right to defend themselves against the vandals of the capitalist class and they are mercilessly crushed. The ruling class may appeal to the constitution when their own interests are endangered, but let the worker, defending his home, shoot down the uniformed thugs of capitalism and he soon learns that the inviolability of the home clause in the "basic document of our republic" is not meant for him.

Smash the Illusion.

Reverence for the constitution only exists in the minds of the dolts in the ranks of the working class who still suffer from the mental asphyxiation administered by the perverters of history in the public schools, the churches and the kept newspapers. The constitution, wherever it might have been interpreted in the service of the workers, has been torn to shreds by the capitalist courts, trying to conceal the diseased blotches upon the body of the national hag, symbolized by the Goddess of Liberty. To appeal to it only evokes boisterous and irreverant laughter from the camp of the legitimate offspring of the seducers of the national goddess. It is as effective as a savage invoking the aid of his savage god Mumbo Jumbo.

On the day set aside by the capitalist government to dwell upon the virtues of the constitution we expose it to the workers as the basic document upon which rests the government that functions exclusively as the instrument of oppression in the hands of the capitalist class in order to keep the working class in subjection. Furthermore that governmental power can never be wrested from the hands of the capitalist class within the confines of the constitution.

Where Socialists Fail.

The oustanding characteristic of the opportunism of the yellow socialists is that they ignore the nature of the capitalist state (government). Their aims are confined to the limits set by the ruling class. That is one reason why they must remain impotent in the class struggle.

The revolutionist must first of all consider the character of the capitalist state, its means of perpetuating itself, and also understand its basic documents. To understand the constitution of the United States is to realize that no revolution is possible that does not shatter the constitution and the government which is based upon it.

The bourgeois constitutional government with its parliamentary apparatus, which functions against the will of the majority of the working class must give way to a unified system of administration of government, which will ensure the immediate, direct participation of the masses in the political life of the country. Instead of the system of checks and balances, with legislative, executive and judicial counterbalancing each other in order to perpetuate the rule of the capitalist class, the government of the workers must be one that combines the legislative and executive powers under one head. Instead of political units being based upon territorial divisions, the only system that effectively can function for the working class must be political divisions based upon the principle of production, thus connecting the working masses directly with the governmental apparatus.

In other words, it is the Soviet system of government only that can function as a means of emancipation of the working class.

Instead of the empty bombast of the capitalist apologists for the constitution on this day, we expose it as a class intrument, and at the same time raise the call to overthrow the rule of the capitalists maintained by the constitution and establish a workers' and farmers' government as in Russia.

We pledge ourselves to utilize our political power to: Free the class war prisoners, in jail under the constitution. Smash the fake justice and equality of the capitalist class! Crush the rule of the bosses!

It is only the Workers (Communist) Party that conducts the struggle against the illusions of the capitalists and their servants, the yellow opportunists, therefore intelligent workers should join the Workers Party.

The younger elements among the workers should join the Young Workers League, which carries out the struggle for defense of the youth. The children of the workers should be sent to the Young Pioneers of America where their minds may be cleared of the illusions fostered in the public schools.

whatever progress is made in wealth production is theirs. They point to this fact, and also to the lowering of the standard of living in other countries where capitalism rules from cellar to garret.

THE mayor of Rock Island, Illinois, got terribly excited last week when he discovered that a Communist group exists in that city. The mayor heard that they were connected with Moscow. He promised to rid the city of them or die in the attempt. We do not know what kind of squirrel refreshment this executive imbibes, but if he reads the papers he might know that Soviet Russia has 62 missions in various countries studying industrial efficiency methods, in order to apply any improvements they notice to Soviet industry. If they hit Rock Island, it is quite likely that the babbittarian mayor will be on the receiving line with his hand extended right palm up.

POLAND'S cabinet has resigned. That government changes cabinets in a year oftener than the average citizen changes his underwear. The latest flip-flop was related to the deplorable condition of the Polish zloty. There was something in a name from the moment Grabski, former premier was baptized. His fingers itch for everything that is not his. He wanted to use the funds of the Bank of Poland to bolster up the exchange. That functionary refused. Perhaps he is in some other political group. Those of you who remember how saucy Poland was to Soviet Russia, can tell the next dumbbell who says the Bolshevik government is a failure, to look around him and see what he can see. Practically every capitalist government in Europe has time for nothing else but passing the hat. Soviet Russia is not playing the role of beggar.

LAST but not least, a few words about The DAILY WORKER. Our paper is not perfect by any means, but it is the only daily workers' paper published in this country in the American language. Its deficiencies will be gradually corrected—provided it lives. Communists criticize themselves as well as others. In spite of all our shortcomings, The DAILY WORKER is first in line when it comes to defending the workers' against the common enemy and is ever pointing the way towards the goal of all class-conscious workers—the overthrow of capitalism.

THE DAILY WORKER is up against it. We know that every weasel-brained renegade in the labor movement and outside of it will chortle with glee when they read our tale of woe. But those who laugh last laugh longest. The salvation of The DAILY WORKER is in the hands of its readers. If the workers are convinced that it is serving a useful purpose they will not let it die. We are of the opinion that they will not. We are convinced that they will answer the premature chortles of the enemies of labor by coming to the rescue of their paper.

AMALGAMATED MEMBERS GIVE OFFICIALS COLD SHOULDER AT CHICAGO VICTORY CELEBRATION

On Friday night, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of Chicago, called a general mass meeting for the celebration of the victory in the strike against the International Tailoring Co. and also to consider the recommendation of the joint board to levy a tax of $25 on each member as a reserve fund.

About 3,500 members were present. The stage was decorated with flowers and the officials tried their utmost to have a holiday spirit prevail to prepare the members' minds to accept this proposition. It was an artificial atmosphere.

The officials of Chicago and New York, included President Sidney Hillman, were the speakers of the evening. Yet none was received with any great enthusiasm. Manager Sam Levin opened the meeting.

Levin Deplores Strike.

Speaking of the strike and the co-operation he received from the Chicago membership, Levin deplored the fact that the union had a strike, saying that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers is a peaceful organization, settling its differences with the bosses thru negotiation for the past six years. It had thot that it had succeeded in convincing the employers that labor is a part of the industry and that—"We did not wish upon ourselves or on the employers, such a conflict."

Later on he stated the union had to prepare for war in order to have peace, and the preparation for war is—money.

Tries to Discredit Strikers.

Sidney Rissman, assistant manager of Chicago Joint Board followed. He also spoke about the strike in Chicago and the work done in New York giving very little credit to either the strikers or the membership as a whole for the victory. He tried to imply that money, and not the membership, won the strike.

Rissman also spoke upon the matter of the levy of $25, and pointed out that—"Those fools and disrupters who ask where the money goes to, ought to have the answer by this time."

William A. Cunnea, attorney for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers addressed the meeting. His speech was pretty much contrary to the speeches by Rissman and Levin, for he pointed out that it was the solidarity of the membership and the iron will of the strikers which were the major factors that brot about the victory. His speech was received with enthusiasm.

Steamroller Motion Thru.

Levin then came forth with the proposal that the joint board was recommending to the meeting that a tax of $25 be levied on each member for reserve fund.

Immediately, from a distant corner, someone moved its adoption. One of the members in the center of the hall got up and in a loud tone, stated he had an amendment to make. Levin refused to recognize him and immediately put the tax proposal to a vote, not permitting any questions or discussions.

Meeting Gets Levin's Goat.

There was a stir of dissent among the members and when the vote was taken, it appeared that the majority were not in favor of the proposal. Levin became very excited, flew into a rage, hammered on the table and declared in stentorian voice that the motion was "passed, and there will be no disruption of this meeting." He declared that "The tax will be paid."

There is no doubt but that the officials knew the pulse of membership prior to the meeting, and there is no doubt that they were cautious in organizing their forces. Because at once after the dissendent member had risen to introduce an amendment, this organized force were immediately on the job, pointing him out and ready to "square the matter with him."

From what was learned later, the member did not intend to oppose the building of a reserve fund, but merely wished to amend the motion. But the officials seemed to fear any expression at all from the membership.

The finis of the proposal being thus arrived at, President Hillman addressed the meeting. This closed the victory's celebration.

Strong Arm Squads Busy.

But this did not end the matter. The organized group which were there to strong-arm any opposition did not fail in their "duty." Meyer Berson, an active member of Local 39, who had devoted himself to the strike, on the picket line morning and evening, who as chop chairman, was instrumental in bringing down his shop for the mass picketing and who has been removed from that position and lost his job because he fought for the workers, was met at the door of the hall by the strong-arm gang.

With Berson was B. Goldstein, also of Local 39. Blows came from all sides, and they were not struck with naked fists. Dodging did no good, as there were too many. The assaulted men tried to run back into the hall. But the gang had locked the doors. They tried to catch a street car passing, but blows were showered upon them. One of the victims received large wounds on his head. Another's face was bruised and bleeding.

Women were screaming and men shouting to stop the gang. The outnumbered victims rushed into the street and were nearly struck by an automobile, which however, also checked the assault on the escaping members. Many more were hurt whose names were not ascertained. One member got a beating from the gang because he was sitting next to the one trying to make an amendment.

Rissman Directs Gang.

The end of the skirmish found Sidney Rissman on the scene directing the gang to scatter and not to see anything, hear anything or know anything about the incident.

INTERNATIONAL ORACLE, LIKE ANCIENT DELPHI, AMBIGUOUS AS USUAL

SOFIA, Nov. 15.— The report of the league of nations commission, investigating the recent Greco-Bulgarian frontier incident, will be most cautious, according to unofficial forecasts here.

The commission will report that the Greek invasion of Bulgarian soil and the attempt to occupy Petrich was unwarranted, it is stated, but it will state that it is impossible to state which side fired the first shot in the original incident.

Klan Head After Bribes.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Nov. 15.—Harry McNamara, ku klux klan organizer and advocate of prohibition, who conducted a number of federal rum aids here, was arrested on the charge of accepting a $250 bribe from a federal defendant. McNamara's arrest came after several of the federal law defendants had appealed to police for assistance, alleging that the "special federal agent" responsible for their arrest had endeavored to secure money from them by a "bribe" plot.

To "Punish" Anti-Fascists.

ROME, Nov. 15.—Premier Mussolini's bill for the punishment of anti-fascist Italians living abroad was approved by his cabinet. It is understood that the bill would cancel the citizenship of such Italians and provide for confiscation of their property in Italy.

Fight Against Wage Cuts! Down with Gangster Rule!

The National Committee of the Trade Union Educational League has issued a statement concerning the meaning of the reign of terror against the members begun by the officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. The statement points out the means the workers should adopt to struggle against this preparation for a surrender of their shop conditions. It reads as follows:

* * * *

A STATEMENT TO THE MEMBERS OF THE AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA, BY THE TRADE UNION EDUCATIONAL LEAGUE.

WORKERS in the men's clothing industry are faced with the necessity of a serious struggle against wage-cuts. And at this very moment, a murderous assault has been delivered against militant and progressive members of the union, who are proposing a struggle against the employers to defeat the wage-cuts. This assault has come, not from the employers, but has been delivered by officials and agents of the high officials of the union itself.

Members of the A. C. W. of A. were slugged and beaten up at the general membership meeting of the union in Chicago on Friday, November 13. The same thing happened in New York City on the same night, at the meeting of the Pantsmakers' Local, which is engaged in a struggle with the bosses.

These assaults at regular meetings of the union were followed on Sunday by a raid upon a private gathering of progressive members from various shops, which had met at Biltmore Hall, Chicago, to discuss ways and means of fighting against wage-cuts, where gangsters entered with guns in their hands, lined up the workers present against the wall, and then proceeded to beat them up and to wreck the hall.

Many workers were seriously injured by the murderous assaults; several were severely beaten over the head with blunt instruments; one man is reported to be losing an eye as the result of the terrific beating administered.

This disgraceful reign of terror occurred during the presence in Chicago of President Sidney Hillman. If it was not carried out under his orders, he surely knew at least what was going on. It must have had his consent. It can hardly be passed aside as the result of some local quarrel. It has every appearance of being a definite national, official policy of the administration of the union.

Workers! We call to your attention that it was exactly this same kind of tactics that were used by Morris Kaufman of the Furriers' Union two years ago, when the workers in that industry wanted a struggle against the employers.

It was this kind of tactics that were used by Morris Sigman of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, when the workers wanted to fight against the loss of their conditions and Sigman wanted to hand their interests over to the governor's commission.

It is exactly the kind of tactics used by union officials everywhere when they are preparing to surrender to the employers. In order to carry out the surrender, they first prepare the ground by slugging and terrorizing those whom they fear will demand a fight against the employers.

The officials cannot escape the responsibility for these assaults. Those who committed them are hired by the officials, and one of the thugs was himself a business agent. Their names are known, and will be furnished upon demand to any committee properly authorized by the union. They cannot escape, either, from the meaning of these assault, the meaning that they can only be a preparation for putting over more wage cuts on the already suffering workers in the clothing industry.

Workers in the men's clothing industry, such events as these in your union require an immediate protest and action to remove such conditions.

Demand the struggle against all wage-cuts!

Demand the cessation of thuggery against the members!

Demand the punishment by the union of those who committed these assaults!

Demand the removal of all offiicials who are implicated in these pogroms!

D. C. Stephenson, former grand dragon of the Indiana ku klux klan, was found guilty of the death of a young girl and sentenced to life imprisonment. He raped the girl prior to her death. This makes the ten thousandth kluxer who was found guilty of a crime having its origin in sexual irregularity. Yet the K. K. K. was organized to protect American womanhood from the assaults of non-Nordic races who evidently are not acquainted with the fine art of seduction as practiced by the sadists and evangelists who infest the ku klux klan

THIS man Stephenson was once a great power in Indiana politics. Morons have votes and the grand dragon had the morons eating out of his hand. During the last international convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Indianapolis, I was reporting the sessions for The DAILY WORKER. A meeting of the ku klux klan was announced for the purpose of stating the klan's position toward the miners' union. I attended that meeting in the company of a native-born American of English descent and a Jewish writer, whether born here or not, I do not know. The Jew and myself were out of luck, so I thot, but I passed as a native of Belfast and my Hebrew companion had a nice little beard that looked for all the world like the one worn by miniature editions of Jesus. DELEGATES TO C. F. OF L. FIGHT SAKLATVALA BAN

Fight Non-Concurrence After Delay

By ARNE SWABECK

In the Chicago Federation of Labor meeting held last Sunday once more an effective protest was voiced against the barring of the British Communist Shapurji Saklatvala, member of parliament from the Battersea district, London, denied admittance to the United States by Secretary of State Kellogg where he intended to participate in the congress of the interparliamentary union.

The protest grew in volume as the delegates one after another put themselves on record emphatically opposing the action of the executive board turning down a resolution of protest against this exclusion which had been referred to it.

Fitz Attacks Communists

The board members under the leadership of President Fitzpatrick tried to justify their reactionary stand by launching an attack upon Communist delegates and the Workers (Communist) Party.

While a glance at the background of this clash will reveal that the methods of the present trade union bureaucracy is everywhere the same, it also shows how deep is the conflict between these methods and the class interests of the rank and file workers.

TERRORISM IN A. C. W. PART OF CAMPAIGN

See Effort to Stop Fight on Cuts

The members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union whose meeting at the Biltmore Hall at Division St. and Hoyne Ave. was raided by gangsters of the Hillman machine on Sunday morning, and who were arrested by the police after the unionists and gangsters had engaged in a battle royal when the gangsters tried to beat up the workers, were released by the police shortly after arrest, when the police were convinced that the gangsters and not the workers were the aggressors.

Talk among the members shows their conviction that the slugging, beginning both here and in New York on the same day, Friday, and in Chicago at a meeting where Hillman spoke, is the start of a war of gangsterism to terrorize the membership's initiative and prevent any resistance to the wage cuts being put over under the pleasanter name of "readjustments."

Also in New York.

Last Friday's meeting of the Amalgamated membership in New York was also a scene of official disruption with workers slugged by gangsters.

In New York the trial of the officials' gangster, who beat up Isadore Auerbach at a union meeting in the Forward Hall on Friday, took place in Essex Market court.

At the trial the lawyer for the A. C. W. Bushel, tried to make a charge against the beaten up union member and asked the judge to set the gangster free!

Evidence Too Strong.

The beaten up member, however, had strong evidences on his person, such as black eyes and bruised face, and the judge realized that the unionist was the victim and the gangster the aggressor.

The judge fined the gangster $10 and set the victim of his attack free. Attention is called to the fact that the gangster is a member of the control committee of the Pantsmakers' Union.

SEAT ANOTHER I.W.W. DELEGATE AT CONVENTION

Cascaden Visits Meet; Discuss Anarchists

The 17th general convention of the Industrial Workers of the World has enlarged itself by seating an alternate to the designated delegate along with the latter, Schultes of the Marine Transport Workers Industrial Union, being seated with Roger Francezon, the regular delegate, thus making twelve delegates in all.

International relations entered the discussion yesterday morning when a letter from Mangano, editor of the I. W. W. paper in the Italian language, Il Proletario, was read, stating that a meeting of 22 Italian I. W. W. in the east proposed to the convention that the I. W. W. affiliate to the Berlin International Workingmen's Association known as the anarchist international, providing, however, that the anarchist international would expel from it the emergency program split from the I. W. W. which recently affiliated to the Berlin group.

Berlin Not Popular.

Discussion of the letter was not at all favorable to such action, but was cut off by a rule that the convention entertain no motions from individuals.

Gordon Cascaden an "old timer" in the I. W. W. and a delegate in 1921 to the first congress of the Red International from the Lumber Workers Industrial Union of Canada, whose bitterly antagonist report given out on his return was used as the chief basis for all attacks on the Red International and expulsion of its supporters, visited the convention yesterday morning.

Cascaden was reported to have distributed copies of a report to the delegates and to the I. W. W. press, the nature of which was only hinted at as being quite significant to the question of international relations. The DAILY WORKER unfortunately could not obtain a copy at the hour of going to press, but hopes to get one for publication.

The reporter was likewise unsuccessful in the effort to obtain from the chairman a copy of a resolution proposed by a branch of the I. W. W. in Canada.

Considerable of the time Monday was spent in discussion over constitutional changes and grievances

NEW YORK TRADE UNION COMMITTEE FAVORS SENDING DELEGATION TO STUDY ACHIEVEMENTS OF RUSSIA

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The trade union committee to organize the Purcell meetings at a conference in Beethoven Hall, Sunday afternoon, unanimously went on record favoring the formation of an American trade union delegation to Russia and also voted that the committee continue to work for this project. Next conference will be held December 20. Committee has decided to present to the Purcell mass meeting on Tuesday evening the committee's resolution favoring a delegation to Russia. This resolution will be sent to all labor bodies represented on the committee and to all labor conventions.

Delegates at the conference represented 183,000 trade unionists of New York City.

A third hall is being held in reserve to accomodate the expected crowd at Tuesday's mass meetings.

HORTHY STARTS DEATH TRIAL OF MATHIAS RAKOSI

World's Workers Try to Halt Hangman's Hand

The court martial trial of Mathias Rakosi, people's commissar in the Hungarian Soviet government, and over one hundred members of the Independent Socialist Party began yesterday, according to a cable from Berlin received by the national office of the International Labor Defense.

The fascist dictator, Horthy, known as the "hangman of Hungary" promised that executions of Rakosi and the most prominent of those arrested would follow a few hours after the death sentences were handed down by the court martial.

Under pressure from labor organizations and sympathizers all over the world, Horthy had postponed the trials for a time, but evidently he is now of the opinion that there is a sufficient lull in the campaign to save Rakosi to enable him go ahead with his bloody plan, unhindered.

Rakosi is thirty-six years old and has been active in the labor movement in Hungary since early manhood. He played a prominent part in the Hungarian revolution which followed the defeat of the central powers. After the Soviet government of Hungary was crushed with the aid of the funds of the Hoover relief expedition, Rakosi was arrested and only saved from execution by the action of the Soviet government of Russia in securing his release in exchange for Hungarian white guards in the hands of the red army.

Rakosi returned recently to Hungary to reorganize the workers who have been persecuted and demoralized since Horthy seized power. He was arrested almost immediately after he entered Hungary. Court martial trials were immediately arranged and speedy executions promised.

So great was the storm of protest aroused by Horthy's bloody program that he postponed its execution. Floods of cablegrams poured in on him from every part of the world. Even the Prussian diet, refused to receive the Hungarian minister of education until the proceedings against the former people's commissar, Rakosi, were stopped. The motion to this effect was passed with the votes of socialists, Communists, democrats and centrists.

In the United States a vigorous campaign under the direction of the International Labor Defense was carried on. A committee of liberals headed by Upton Sinclair and Roger Baldwin, sent a cablegram to the Horthy government, demanding the cancellation of the proposed death sentences, and civil trials, instead of court martial. Mass meetings, demonstrations were held in the large cities. The Hungarian legation in Washington and the consulates in New York and Chicago were picketed. This stopped Horthy's bloody hand for a while but evidently he has not yet given up his intention to murder his political opponents.

The British trade union movement and the labor party protested against the threatened execution of Rakosi, yet despite this, Ramsay MacDonald leader of the labor party paid a complimentary visit to Horthy a few weeks ago and banqueted with his foreign minister. This act was construed by the European trade unionists as an endorsement by MacDonald of Horthy's persecutions of the workers.

The International Labor Defense declares that it will renew its campaign to save Rakosi with redoubled energy.

MEXICAN LAND LAW DISTURBS U. S. INVESTORS

Imperialists Want to Dominate Mexico

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 16—The Mexican house has passed almost unanimously the bill of the Calles administration concerning the limitations put upon foreign property holdings in Mexico. It now goes to the senate.

The bill which is to be a part of Article 27 of the constitution is disturbing the great corporations holding oil and mining properties, as well as agricultural holdings.

It provides that foreign property rights shall continue until the death of the owners, providing the owners accept the obligations of Mexican citizens so far as the property is concerned.

Hits Big Interests.

The bill also provides that more than fifty per cent of corporation stock shall be held by Mexican citizens, and it is this phase of the bill which is causing a flurry among the big American companies, the capital of which runs into many millions.

Agents of these companies are arguing that there is not enuf capital in Mexico to allow citizens to purchase fifty or more per cent of the stock now held by thousands of coupon clippers all over the United States and other countries, and that the stock in Mexico industry owned in foreign countries will be depreciated on the market.

Ambassador Sheffield is playing a watching game of silence.

Points to U. S. Hypocrisy.

Leading Mexican newspapers are pointing out how autocratic the United States has been in its treatment of Mexico, citing the letter of Secretary Kellogg to the Mexican government last June 12, threatening intervention to Mexico because of alleged "violations of international obligation and failure to protect American citizens in Mexico."

This threat against the sovereignty of Mexico was followed by long significant silence by the U. S. in spite of wide protest by Mexicans at the imperialist domineering attitude of the U. S. government.

Leading Mexican papers point out that there has been no especial change in the treatment of American citizens, and that if the U. S. government thot it had a case in June it still has the same complaint, so it asks Sheffield to speak up. His silence will be taken to mean that he has no case now, nor in June.

Race Line Drawn in Prize-Fighting by Safety Decree

By A Worker Correspondent

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 16.—Safety Director Barry, the eminent preserver of order in this city, who recently got into trouble by arresting all the Chinese residents of this city, and upon protest by the Chinese ambassador at Washington, had to apologize for his ridciulous action, has made a new decree.

A white boy will not be allowed to batter the face of a Negro boy—or vice versa. A Chinese boy will not be allowed to knock in the face of a white boy in a prize fight—or vice versa. No, siree, not in the saintly city of Cleveland.

If Chinese or Negro prize fighters insist upon trying out their prowess, they must do it with members of their own race. White prize fighters must be preserved from the infamy of getting beaten by a black or yellow boy. Let the whites, blacks and yellows batter the faces of members of their own race. Racial pride demands that the white race be preserved from the indignity of black eyes, bleeding noses, and knockouts administered by a member of a "lower" race! And that's that, as the safety director stated.

FOREIGN-BORN WORKERS IN THE ANTHRACITE VICTIMIZED BY ALL; NO STRIKE RELIEF TO AID THEM

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

(Article IV.)

MAHANOY CITY, Nov. 16.—This little city of 15,000 population is a typical anthracite mining community and here can be seen a cross section of the anthracite strike.

The overwhelming majority of the population are Lithuanians, Poles and Slavonians. But the local authorities are Americans—or Irish, which for all practical purposes offers the best advantages in the anthracite.

God Grants No Credit.

There are 26 churches here. It is a matter of public knowledge that a miner who does not attend and contribute to one of the holy 26 has a hard time getting credit at the stores when he needs it. These miners who are bold enough to refrain from public worship in any of the forms practiced here are looked upon with suspicion and are unwelcome guests even in the boarding houses.

But numerous as are the brethren of Christ, they are outnumbered by the bootleggers. Almost every other door in the business section seems to be a saloon. This does not include the "speak-easys" whose proprietors appear to be of a somewhat lower caste than the owners of the open saloons.

Study the Bootleggers' Caste System.

The reason for this caste distinction I was not able to discover, but it probably springs from the fact that most of the latter are crippled miners who have taken up this method of getting a living and are therefore not of the legitimate rank of the high priests of Bacchus.

The distinction between the American elements in the local unions and the foreign-born is quite clear here. The foreigners are supposed to pay their dues and keep their mouths shut. Their applications for strike relief are given scant consideration.

In common with the prevailing opinion thruout the United States among the native-born and more privileged workers, it is said in Mahanoy City that "all these foreigners have got money."

Strike relief regulations are very strict—for the foreign-born miners. If one has a victrola, a radio or a piano this is considered as evidence that he and his family need no relief.

From Bums to "Big Strike Boss."

A committee composed of three Americans who receive $2.75 per hour for their labors, conducts investigations of all requests for relief three times per week in one of the local unions. Said one foreign-born miner: "Before strike these committeemen just bums, standing round street corner, hanging out in saloon, never work. Now they big strike boss."

This is the strike relief apparatus of two of the biggest locals in this section where about 20,000 miners are normally employed.

Foreign Workers Victimized.

The manner in which the financial affairs of the unions here are handled is evidence of the general looseness of the whole organization. It should be understood that local union meetings, attended by any considerable number of the rank and file, are few and far between at any time. The local, district and national officialdom make the meetings unpleasant for the foreign-born miners so that the more delicate internal matters can be handled without unpleasant interruptions by the membership. By reason of this state of affairs strange things occur. The following is one told me by a miner who has worked here for 11 years:

Local 1333, having about two thousand members, had accumulated in its treasury a sum in excess of the amount local unions are allowed to keep. Some of the surplus had to be disposed of or it would be requisitioned by the district officials. Three trustees were appointed and $22,000 turned over to them.

MONTREAL HAS ENTHUSIASTIC PURCELL MEET

Workers Cheer World Trade Union Unity

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MONTREAL, Nov. 16.—Albert A. Purcell, president of the Amsterdam International Federation of Trade Unions and fraternal delegate to the American Federation of Labor convention at Atlantic City from the British Trade Union Congress, was enthusiastically received by the French and English workers that attended his meeting here.

Purcell's plea for unity on the trade union field was loudly approved by the assembled workers. The necessity for trade union unity was strongly felt by the French and English workers as their forces in Montreal are scattered and weak. The existence of catholic unions further divides the trade unionists besides the craft unionism of the A. F. of L. unions.

At the end of Purcell's speech, all of these workers rose as one man and loudly cheered Purcell and world trade union unity.

When Purcell spoke of the achievements of Russian workers, a demonstration ensued which lasted for several minutes.

The meeting was arranged under the auspices of the Montreal Trades and Labor Council and John Foster, its president, acted as chairman of the meeting. James Simpson(vice president of the Canadian Trade Union Congress and leader of the Canadian labor party made a brief address in which he praised Purcell and the mission which he is performing in the United States and Canada thru his series of meetings on world trade union unity.

PARLIAMENT IN SESSION; IRAK QUESTION IS UP

Locarno Pacts to Be Ratified

LONDON, Nov. 16—Parliament reassembled today after a three months' recess, to take up discussions of vital international affairs. The principal problem to be discussed is the question of the extenion of the British mandate over Irak. (Mesopotamia) which expires soon.. Colonial Secretary Amery will propose, that, the house of commons approve Great Britain's extending its mandate over Irak for a period of 25 years. The present mandate was of only four years' duration.

The question of Mosul oil is involved in this mandate and becomes of great significance in view of the recent withdrawal of the American trust, Standard Oil, from the Mosul group because Britain promised Germany twenty per cent of the oil production of this area.

Locarno Comes Up.

Altho a separate order, the ratification of the Locarno pacts cannot be separated in the field of international diplomacy from the mandate of Irak, because it was thru the Locarno pact which provided for Germany's entrance into the league of nations that the oil deal was made as a bribe to Germany for her support in the league council, where she will receive a permanent seat and vote in the interest of Britain.

It is not expected that there will be any serious difficulty in ratifying the pacts, tho some opposition will be encountered from the laborites of the Clyde.

Lady Astor was present, waiting for the doors of parliament to open so she could get a prominent seat well up in front in order to continue her favorite pastime, basking in the limelight. People are speculating on the attitude of this American born nabob when the break comes between Britain and the United States.

the trustees are dead and the third, with the $22,000 still in his possession, and for which no accounting is made, is a bartender at the Moose club.

The miners wonder ocassionally if and when they will get their money back but no one has the temerity to put the question in view of the known consequence of such an act.

The surviving "trustee" continues to dispense liquor to the patrons of the Moose club, drives a big car and is a highly respected citizen whose support is much sought after by ambitious politicians around election time.

The 26 churches of Mahanoy City have been mentioned. They are of various denominations but the catholic church is dominant. Its influence is everywhere but the ku klux klan has its followers as well. So omnipresent is the religious atmosphere and activity that it overshadows the class issues to a large extent. It is in this little valley where the cross is on so many buildings that the reaction of workers against the methods and aims of its followers which brings them to sympathy with or toleraance of the equally vicious klan can be understood.

Cross and Double Cross.

A Russian miner whose sympathies are with the left wing told me that "My two buddies are klansmen and I don't see so much bad in their fight on catholic church. That church ver' bad. . . . Priest tell boss everything he hear 'bout miner."

As in Scranton, the lack of all working class education in the unions and the suppression of all class issues in time of peace and strike by the union officialdom seems to be preparing in the whole anthracite territory a religious war which will further divide the workers.

FURRIERS' LOCAL FINDS OUT WAY TO GET RESULTS

Gives Left Wingers a Free Hand

The left wing furriers of Local 45 are pleased at the success they have with aiding the union when the business agent, Millstein, is out of the way.

This worthy, while absent at the convention allowed the left wingers to do a good job with the Lewitz shop on the south side, where 40 workers had been working overtime for no extra pay for some three years.

Millstein could never get around to the Lewitz shop, and even when the matter was supposed to be placed in his hands, he was much too busy playing politics. And then, besides, Mr. Lewitz is the uncle of the labor editor of the Forward. So why should one reactionary bother another one?

But the left wingers took advantage of Millstein's abselce to do something. And what they did was this. They made Mr. Lewitz pay $530 back pay for the overtime he had made the workers put in, and the shop is all in good shape now, thanks both to the left wingers of Local 45 and and the absence of Business Agent Millstein.

THE meeting got under way and the local kleagle introduced a lecturer—he went by some weird name—who told of his exploits in a New Jersey city, which was infested by Jewish pawnbrokers, Irish policemen and Roman catholic priests. He cleaned them out after a hard tussle and was then looking for more worlds to conquer.

NEEDLESS to say the rogue was lying. Priests, policemen and pawnbrokers will be eating steak and onions, this side of Communism. After the lecturer finished, the local kleagle read a letter from this same Stephenson, who is now sentenced to life imprisonment. It was addressed to the members of the klan in the United Mine workers' Union. The miners were instructed to co-operate with the employers and to take a determined attitude against strikes, and to form mine committees for the prevention of strikes. Stephenson was at that time a large mine owner.

WITH the aid of the K. K. K. machine Stephenson was able to dominate politics. He amassed wealth. He built himself a yacht that was reported to have cost $250,000. His home in Indianapolis was a palace and his cellar would make the teeth of the driest prohibition agent water. It was stocked with the rarest of wines and the choicest of liquors. Stephenson was an ardent prohibitionist, a fiend for law and order and a determined crusader for the sanctity of the home. But alas, poor Stephenson! Perhaps the devil tempted him once too often. Perhaps the pope of Rome wove one of his spells around him. Whatever the trouble was, this hundred per cent American tired of the pleasant paths of seduction and wandered into more dangerous fields. He is in the toils. But if anybody thinks that his present condition will convince a kluxer that their former dragon is not beloved of the lord, they simply don't know the first thing about the mechanism of a moron's mind.

THE Chicago klan held an organization meeting recently in a hall near Kedzie and North avenue. An "alien" found his way in by invitation. The local organizer—who gets three dollars per head for every new member—made an eloquent speech and then called for applications. During his speech he praised the mothers of the race to the skies and deprecated anybody who would take any step without consulting his mother. When he called for joiners all those not already in the bed sheet order arose except the undesirable alien. The kleagle asked him why he refused to join. He answered: "After listening to your eulogy of the mothers of the race, I have been convinced that I should not make application to join even your noble order without my mother's consent."

THE kleagle's eyes filled with tears and his voice trembled with emotion as he patted the "alien" on the back and said: "Oh god, I wish there were millions like you." "So do I," murmured the alien fervently. Everybody else in the hall who was not already enrolled paid ten dollars for the privilege of mouthing some idiotic phrases, wearing bed clothes in the open air, cursing the pope, the Jews and the Negroes. This is the klan and former grand dragon Stephenson is a worthy representative of it.

IF a free-born Italian subject takes the liberty of calling Premier Mussolini a dumbell, he may receive thirty months in prison. This is the latest decree of the gentleman whose debt mission received so much consideration a few days ago at the hands of our republican administration. The latest flare-up in Italy, over the alleged attempt to assassinate the assassin, was nothing else but a dodge to cover up the murder of the socialist deputy Matteotti by Mussolini's cutthroats. With the loan which Mussolini expects to get from the House of Morgan, backed by the United States government, the fascist chief will be able to maintain his power for some time to come.

THE American government refuses recognition to Soviet Russia because ninety per cent of the population have imposed a dictatorship on about the ten per cent that formerly owned the country and all its wealth. But towards Italy where the dictatorship is of the many by the few, our government extends the hand of friendship filled with dollars. After all it is not a question of dictatorship that prevents our capitalist government from recognizing the workers' and peasants' government. It is the kind of dictatorship

'LET THE MINERS BREAK THEIR OWN STRIKE,' IS VIEW OF CAL COOLIDGE

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 16—It is not at all a secret, in fact it is being the boast of the Coolidge administration that it has no reason for interfering in the anthracite coal strike so long as the miners' union scabs on itself by mining bituminous coal.

A nationally known press service of the capitalist newspapers in sending out the following frank admission of this aid given to the operators by the union in the following words:

"With the bituminous mines working full blast, and thus fore-stalling anything approaching a national fuel crisis, President Coolidge and his advisers this year determined to be spectators instead of principals."

ENGLISH MARINE UNION SUPPORTS UNITY MOVEMENT

Workers Greet Purcell Meet in New York

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.— Albert A. Purcell, president of the International Federation of the Trade Unions, received the following message from Joseph Cotter, general president of the Amalgamated Marine Workers of England, in regard to the campaign for world trade union unity:

Strive for Unity.

"I am of the opinion, after the seven years' experience of international trade unionism since the war, that there is still a certain percentage of blind international war prejudice still rampant in the international trade union movement. Individual opinions are being printed and published deliberately with the object of trying to influence the workers internationally, that the opinion is the national or international opinion of the rank and file. Whilst such conduct is allowed to continue. International trade union unity will not only be difficult, but almost impossible to obtain. The move of the British Trades Union Congress to try and deal with this great problem must commend itself to every genuine trade unionist no matter what his nationality may be.

"The British trade union movement is the parent of the great international movement, and it must not allow itself to be put out of the house by one or two very naughty and recalcitrant children. Since 1918 it has done its duty to its offspring both loyally and generously, and all that it is asking is for unity, loyalty and comradeship in return.—I, therefore, wish your effort every success, and will certainly do my bit to bring about international unity amongst all countries."

Escaped Youth Leader Describes Zankov Terror

MOSCOW, Nov. 15.—After his escape from the persecutions of the Zankov police, Comrade Rossin, the secretary of the central committee of the Young Communist League of Bulgaria, has arrived in Moscow. On the question about the terror and the spirit of the masses, he said the following:

"The first period of the most bloody terror which humanity has, known has not yet ended. Zankov prepares a new bloody campaign and we know that our arrested comrades are threatened by death without trial. Zankov said in parliament that the terror must root out the Communist movement completely. Zankov will continue to maintain the atmosphere of murder, because the situation of the working class and the peasantry is terrible. The wages are ridiculously small, the prices terribly high and almost in all workers' families the persecutions had robbed them of one of their bread earners."

DELEGATES TO C. F. OF L. FIGHT SAKLATVALA BAN

Subsequent to the barring of Saklatvala, the resolution of protest was introduced in the Chicago Federation of Labor signed by delegate Andrew Overgaard, the speeches made by many delegates supporting the resolution at that time showed that they clearly perceived the dangers to the working class in the collaboration of Mr. Joynson Hicks, the representative of British imperialism, and Secretary Kellogg representing American imperialism.

To them proof had been furnished that, despite the gathering war clouds on the world horizon, in opposing the interests of the workers, the various national capitalist groups are quite capable of acting unitedly.

A Workers' Representative

Saklatvala, an avowed Communist had announced the purpose of his coming to United States as one of making propaganda for the interest of his class and these delegates accepted the proposal of refering the resolution of protest to the executive board with the understanding it would be sure of being endorsed, tho perhaps revamped and reformulated.

After several weeks' delay, the executive board, however, recommended nonconcurrence.

Last Sunday, Anton Johannsen, delegate of Carpenters' Local No. 1367 protested this action, stating that he did not want to become a party to the joint designs of the representatives of the British and American imperialism, that the issue involved was primarily one of free speech which the Chicago Federation of Labor must at all times fight for.

Delegate McCabe, of Painters' Local No. 180, joined his protest together with Delegate Walt of Structural Iron Workers, No. 1 and others who all stated that they had been led to believe that the intention in proposing to refer the resolution to the executive board would mean favorable action with perhaps some changes in phraseology.

The writer also spoke stating that international working class solidarity demands that the Chicago Federation of Labor puts itself on record opposed to the high-handed exclusion of Secretary Kellogg and the endeavors of Wall Street to unite world capitalism against the working class and its representatives.

Delegate McVey, of the Lathers' Union, while trying to defend the executive board still believed the action had been unwise and even admitted that Chicago Federation of Labor was going backward, particularly on the labor party issue.

Some of the members of the executive board spoke, others rallied to their support. For instance Delegate Flora and Ben Feris who made no effort whatever to defend the board action but merely indulged in attacks on Communists.

Peak of Reaction

The peak of reaction, however, was reached in the speech made by President Fitzpatrick. From start to finish a tirade against the Communists, with no explanations of why Chicago Federation of Labor should become a tool of world imperialism by rejecting the protest resolution against the barring of the British working class representative, Saklatvala.

"These Communists," said Fitzpatrick, "while bringing resolutions here seemingly for the workers are using this hall and this audience for their propaganda and are using all means to destroy us."

This is the stuff usually peddled by labor fakers from the very highest ranks who assume that they are the trade unions and that criticism of them or their wrong policies is an attack upon the unions.

What They Do.

The Communist Party and its members in trade unions or in delegate bodies has definitely declared its intention to fight relentlessly against all the so-called trade union leaders who by their actions collaborate with the bosses and directly oppose the interests of the rank and file members of the unions.

President Fitzpatrick by his stand against this protest resolution has once more taken a step against international working class solidarity.

Can't Fool Them Forever

The sentiment in the Chicago Federation of Labor clearly demonstrated that it is becoming increasingly difficult to fool the workers by the statements that a good proposal coming from the Communists thereby becomes a bad proposal.

It is precisely the complete failure of the present trade union leadership to voice the needs of the organized workers, to bring forward a concrete program for the strengthening of their ranks for more effective fight against capitalism and the growing exploitation which necessitates that the Communists stand up and fight against this failure and propose the measures which are needed. The measures which will not only serve as a means to gain temporary relief, but will increasingly strengthen the working class and lead it to ever greater struggle.

Democratic Differences Must Help Build Labor's Class Political Action

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, new political alignments are threatened in the democratic party as a result of renewed efforts by Tammany Hall in New York City to fasten its grip nationally upon the party organization and win the 1928 convention. It is the duty of the workers and farmers to take every possible advantage of the divisions that may arise to break new masses of labor away from this political wing of Wall Street and to win them for independent political action.

• • • •

Tammany Hall is in a dominant position in the democratic party thru its recent overwhelming victory in New York City. Tammany's recognized leader, Al Smith, presidential timber, was not slow to act. He immediately sent his newly elected mayor, "Jimmy" Walker, on a holiday into "the Solid South." The reception and entertainment provided at Atlanta, Georgia, under official democratic auspices, was beyond expectations. John S. Cohen, the democratic national committeeman, did the honors successfully, adding to the occasion with an editorial in his own "Atlanta Constitution," one of the chief capitalist newspapers of the South. The editorial states the Tammany hopes when it urges southern democrats to turn their backs on the radical democrats of the west and throw in their lot with the conservative democrats of the north and east.

This is an ambitious program. The Tammany Hall outfit, with its following in New England, the Taggart machine in Indiana, and the Brennan organization in Illinois, present a wet, Catholic front, while the southern democracy is dry and pro-klan. These would look like insurmountable differences. But evidently some basis of operation has been found. No doubt the common conservatism of the democrats in both sections, aided by the industrialization of the south, with a resultant influx of foreign-born. It is certainly to the interests of Tammany Hall's ambitions to straddle both the liquor and religious issues nationally, thus overcoming this obstacle. What it may do locally is an entirely different story.

This north-east-south coalition leaves the "radical west" out in the cold. The triumph of the former in a national convention must mean the splitting away of elements in the west; workers and farmers who have struggled to develop their independent political power on various occasions in the past. This is the west that helped build the agricultural bloc in congress, but some of the states, like Colorado and Montana, have a considerable industrial population, workers who have fought militant struggles. This is also true of Washington and California.

It is not an accident that William Bouck, president of the Western Progressive Farmers of the State of Washington, for instance, is now planning a tour of Montana. Evidently Montana has had its fill of Senator Walsh, chairman of last year's democratic national convention in Madison Square Garden, in New York City. The same for Senator Wheeler, who tried to break up the farmer-labor movement in Montana as part of his duties as vice-presidential candidate on the LaFollette ticket. But the Montana farmer-labor movement proved stronger than the LaFollette-Wheeler combination. The Ford myth has also evaporated in the west, another aid toward the clearing of the political skies. Thus a farmer-labor conference has been held in Oklahoma, while others are planned for Arkansas and Texas.

Even the north-east-south alliance of democrats cannot prove a stable proposition. Tammany Hall, Taggart, Brennan build their power on the foreign-born vote and middle class support thru a pretense to "radicalism." Al Smith and Hylan in New York, like Mayor Dever, of Chicago, always parade as "progressives," even as "friends of labor." The alliance with the former slave-holding aristocracy of the south must unmask this double-dealing aggregation that has its Wall Street connections just as surely as the republican party, only in lesser degree.

New political alignments are pending. Class conscious workers and farmers must see to it that every possible advantage is taken of all developments to build for independent political action of the oppressed thru the formation of a labor party, and the alliance of the growing bloc of exploited farmers with it.

Oregon Senator Wants Ship Board to Protect Pacific Coast Swindle

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.— Senator McNary of Oregon, registered a vigorous protest to President Coolidge today against abolishing the shipping board. McNary, speaking for the ship yard owners of Portland and the Pacific coast wants to retain the present regional members because he thinks one-man control might work to the detriment of the coast. In reality, he and the interests he serves imagine they can get more "contracts" out of the government with thir own men on the board than with control in the hands of one man representing the shippers as a whole.

BOSTON LABOR JAMS HALL AT PURCELL MEET

Trades Unionists Want World Unity

Arthur Henderson, was jammed to the doors on Sunday by workers, mostly trade unionists, who accorded Albert A. Purcell, president of the International Federation of Trade Unions, the best ovation of his American tour. The great difference between the two speeches and meetings became a topic of common observation.

Professor Harry Dana, who attended both meetings, remarked that Purcell had twice as many people who had ten times the enthusiasm as a Henderson elite gathering.

"The working class everywhere should be bound together by such ties of solidarity and common interest that any section of it in any part of the world moving forward should have the complete support of our class as a whole," declared Purcell. "This applies now to Russia, and equally to China and India." This declaration brought a storm of applause excelled only by the demonstrations given the speaker when he closed a ringing appeal to the workers of this country to join the ranks of the world movement and to stand by Soviet Russia.

Sylvester McBride, chairman for both Henderson and Purcell, closed the meeting with a fine tribute to Pucell and his mission here.

Purcell asked the workers of Boston to aid in the sending of a labor delegation to Russia

SOCIETY DAME DRUNK; TAKES SHOE POLISH

Capitalist Morality as It Is

One of the society ladies from the South, a Mrs. Florence Manley Hood, of Birmingham, Ala., died in Chicago yesterday in a local hospital, after swallowing a quantity of liquid shoe polish.. The lady, escorted by a bachelor, John Cashion,. connected. with the Pullmen Couch Co., had registered at the Plaza Hotel, it is charged, under the husband's name as "Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hood."

The pair had proceeded to the Plaza Hotel, after an alleged drinking party in Cashion's rooms at the Ambassador Hotel. The gentleman said he had criticized the lady for "drinking too much" and threatened "to send her home" if she did not stop it.

Another Party.

It seems that Cashion spent his time in a continuous round of parties. After the "party" at his rooms, he took the lady about midnight to the Plaza where they had a second "party" then after that hour he left for the fashionable Drake Hotel where he was scheduled for a "party" with the members of the Olympia Fields Golf Club.

At three o'clock in the morning the gentleman telephoned to the Plaza to learn how his drinking companion of the early evening was holding up under the strain, when he was informed she was dying.

The gentleman arrived at the hotel and was arrested. The lady with $10,00 worth of jewelry was taken to the hospital where she died.

Family Noncommittal.

Mr. Walter Hood, the husband from Birmingham, has arrived in Chicago. Hood is attorney for various corporations, including the Alabama Power company, and is wealthy. His relatives had nothing to say other than the couple "seemed to be getting on all right."

Cashin said he was a friend of the family and that he registered with Mrs. Hood, as matter of "convenience" so he could visit her without interference. The explanation was superflous.

It is only the few instances of this sort that come to light that enables the working class to get a glimpse of the dissolute lives of the parasitic bourgeoisie.

Worker Escapes Burning to Death When Tank of Molten Glass Explodes

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 16.—One man narrowly escaped death and $200,000 damage was caused thru the breaking of a tank of molten glass at the factory of the Technical Glass company. Fire followed the blast and destroyed the plant. A. L. Andrews, an electrician, was burned but not fatally.

Its Purpose is to Strengthen the Labor Unions by Amalgamation of Existing Unions, Organization of the Unorganized, and by Replacing Reactionary and Class Collaboration Policies with a Unified Program for the Transformation of the Unions into Organs of Revolutionary Class Struggle for the Overthrowal of Capitalism and the Establishment of a Workers' and Farmers' Government.

RED INTERNATIONAL LAUDS FRENCH SECTION FOR STRIKE AGAINST WAR IN NORTHERN AFRICA AND SYRIA

MOSCOW, Nov. 16.—The following telegram sent by the executive bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions to the French C. G. T. U. praises the French workers for their strike against the wars in Morocco and Syria and bitterly condemns the strikebreaking role of the C. G. T. of France, a section of the Amsterdam International Federation of Trade Unions:

"The executive bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions sends its warmest greetings to all French workers who took part in the protest strike against the wars in Morocco and in Syria. This protest strike was an earnest warning to the ruling class in France and in all other countries. It means that the year 1914 has gone forever. With the aid of the Communist Party and the unitarian trade unions, the broad masses of the French proletariat have grasped the significance of the military undertakings of the third republic. On the 18th October they declared this publicly in ringing tones. This protest strike which met with the bitter resistance of all bourgeois sections, represents great progress in the French working class movement.

Unmask Bourgeois "Democracy."

"During this strike the bourgeois 'democracy' showed its real national fascist face and gave those workers who still believed in the left bloc and in the bourgeois democracy a necessary and inevitable lesson. The socialist part and the reformist C. G. L. T. played a particularly disgusting role in the strike. They acted as open unashamed strikebreakers. It is difficult to say whether the fascists or the reformists have acted most shamefully in their attacks upon the workers. It is however clear that the Communist Party and the unitarian trade unions were faced with a united front of the bourgeoisie from the monarchist Leon Daudet to the reformist Leon Jouhaux. Strikebreaking is always mean and shameful treachery. The strikebreakers know this and carried on their business in the dark, pocketing their 30 pieces of silver the while, they did not dare to do their work openly and tried to make a principle out of their strikebreaking.

Reformists Play Strikebreakers.

"But the French reformists under the leadership of Leon Jouhaux, the vice-president of the Amsterdam International have altered all this. They offered themselves publicly as strikebreakers and sabotaged the strike side by side with the police and fascists. In their descent, the reformists have sunk to the level of strikebreakers and play their role openly. Despite the wild campaign of calumny carried on by the bourgeois, fascist and reformist press, despite the organized efforts to break the strike, hundreds of thousands of workers have had the courage to defy the bourgeois fascist-reformist bloc and to fling their protest and scorn into the faces of their enemies.

"Let the French bourgeoisie rage, let the French reformists discredit themselves completely, let them lie about you, nothing can hide the fact that it was the Communist Party and the unitarian unions alone which raised themselves in protest against the robber colonial war, and that honest workers in the reformist organizations took part in the strike, despite the direct orders of their leaders.

Workers Did Duty.

"The French section of the Red International of Labor Unions has done its duty in accordance with the principles of the international. And the C. G. T. has also acted according to the principles of its international by strikebreaking.

"It would be interesting to learn the opinions of the International Federations of Trade Union in Amsterdam upon the attitude of its French section to the wars in Morocco and Syria.

"Long live the heroic strikers!

"Down with the strikebreakers!"

OHIO MINE LOCALS IN SUPPORT OF STRIKERS IN THE ANTHRACITE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEFFS, O., Nov. 16.—The United Mine Workers' Locals No. 1840 of Shadyside, Ohio, and No. 2526 of Neffs, Ohio, have passed a resolution in support of the anthracite strikers and against the intervention of either the federal or state government. Financial support was also pledged. These locals have 500 members and 300 members respectively.

I. W. W. COMBINES SMALL UNIONS IN RECRUITING BODY

Change to Go Upon a Referendum Ballot

The 17th general convention of the Industrial Workers of the World has, in the opinion of many members, taken a backward step toward the old "mixed locals" and away from the industrial form of organization, in the adoption of a resolution turning the smaller industrial unions into what is called a "general recruiting union."

This action was taken despite a strong sentiment existing in the convention itself against "mass unionism" as was shown by the argument upon another resolution of similar tendency but less definite, which aimed to abolish the office of branch secretary in favor of the setting up of joint secretaryships, such secretaries to be credentialed direct from general headquarters.

Vote Down Joint Secretary Proposal.

The resolution proposing this joint secretary provision, was voted down by the delegates. In the debate upon it most of the delegates stated that it would tend to create a sort of mass unionism and take the attention off the creation of industrial unionism and would, in effect, make the I. W. W. a sort of political organization. Some held it would disrupt the industrial unions entirely.

Despite this clear view of the tendency against industrial unionism coming from the direction of joint secretarial proposal, the delegates nevertheless failed to realize the same tendency in more definite form coming from the direction of the proposal for recruiting unions.

The counter proposal before the convention was for the affiliation of local industrial unions direct to the general headquarters, and, of course, the leaving of the small industrial unions as at present in a department under the supervision of the general headquarters.

The Recruiting Union Proposal.

The resolution as adopted by the convention, subject to referendum, reads as follows:

"1. All industrial unions now in the department of the small industrial unions shall be merged together into one recruiting union, which shall be known as the general recruiting union of the I. W. W.

"2. The recruiting union shall be composed of recruiting branches, industrial branches and members at large.

"3. Industrial union branches shall consist of fifty or more members engaged in any particular industry, in a certain locality.

"4. General recruiting union branches shall consist of twenty or more members in any certain locality employed in those industries not under the jurisdiction of a chartered industrial union.

"5. Members at large shall be those members who are now or who in the future shall care to become members of the I. W. W. and who are not in the vicinity of a chartered industrial union branch or a G. R. U. branch.

"6. The members of the G. R. U. shall elect their own secretary-treasurer and except as otherwise stated, shall have the same rights as any chartered industrial union.

"8. The R. U. shall elect their own member to the G. E. B. of the I. W. W.

"9. Membership records shall be kept in the G. R. U. headquarters as usual filed according to industries, that the exact membership in all industries shall be known at all times.

"10. Whenever a degree of organization of seven or more branches and at least 3,000 members attained in any industry, a convention shall be called and they shall be issued an industrial union charter."

Red Internationalist Viewpoint.

The above proposal originated in the conference of small industrial unions held November 1, where against it and the alternate proposal of local industrial unions, Harrison George, took the point of view of the Red International of Labor Unions.

This views holds that in the industries where the I. W. W. is really a propaganda group among workers already organized, such I. W. W. should ally themselves with the revolutionary left wing of the unions organised around the Trade Union Educational League, winning the confidence of the workers by constructive work in and for the existing union, while simultaneously leading them on to industrial unionism and to the goal of proletarian revolution.

This view did not contend that the small industrial unions should be liquidated as entities, nor did it require that their members give up their I. W. W. cards, but that, as propaganda bodies, they should become constructive factors in uniting the workers, ceasing dualist attacks upon existing unions, which antagonized the whole labor movement and should, instead, seek the realistic road to the goal of attaining one union in each industry, completely organized and revolutionary in action.

Would Injure Industrial Unions.

The recruiting union, it was pointed out in the small industrial union convention, would tend not only to become a political body, but would act as a pirate upon the real industrial unions. It would have no genuine economic base in industry and would tend to absorb members into it who actually belonged in functioning industrial union branches.

This view, however, had no spokesman among the delegates of the present general convention.

NEW YORK UNITED TEXTILE UNION PROTESTS POLICE INTERFERENCE IN HILLCREST SILK MILL STRIKE

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The Knitted Garment Workers' Union, Local 55, United Textile Workers, of New York City protests the interference of the police in the strike of the Hillcrest silk mill workers and the fining of Weisbord, organizer of the United Front Textile Committees of West New York, in the following resolution addressed to the mayor of the city of West New York, N. J.:

"Dear Sir:

"The following resolution has been passed by this organization:

"Whereas we have been informed that two pickets, textile workers of the Hillcrest Silk Mills of West New York have been arrested for picketing the Hillcrest Silk Mills, thus denying the right of labor to peacefully picket a plant on strike, and

"Whereas we have been further informed that violence has been used by the police of West New York against the workers and against the organizer of the United Front Committee of Textile Workers, and

"Whereas Brother Weisbord, the organizer of the United Front Committee of Textile Workers of West New York has been arested on a trumped-up charge of disorderly conduct in connection with the activity in the strike, be it

"Resolved by Local 55 of the United Textile Workers that we protest against these actions against organized labor, and be it further

"Resolved that copies of these resolutions be sent to the press and to the mayor of West New York."

1917 WAGE CUT SCALE FOLLOWS STARVATION CURE

But Militant Miners Follow T. U. E. L.

By TOM RAY

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 16.—With conditions growing worse in the Pittsburgh district, the Pittsburgh Coal company has opened up two more mines under the 1917 scale, the Bells mine at Carnegie, and the one known as "No. 10" at Library, Pa., which is the largest coal mine owned by this outfit.

Reports are numerous that something unusual has happened to the fakers leading the U. M. W. of A. These come from miners who have always supported the treacherous policies of John L. Lewis by swinging to the right instead of the left, supporting the policies of the chamber of commerce—the 1917 scale movement, led by the renegades E. S. McCollough and Mike Halapy.

Of course, the miners have made a good fight, but when we consider seriously, six months is a long time to fight against starvation. Many miners have become discouraged over the long road to victory.

With the results of the A. F. of L. convention and nothing done on behalf of the miners by the most ungrateful fakers in all history, the proceedings of that convention proves conclusively that there is no hope under their rule for the workers of America.

William Green says we are not an industrial nation and that the time is not opportune for any changes in the A. F. of L., while the operators are tearing the guts out of the U. M. of A., the backbone of the A. F. of L. and nearly every other union suffering the attacks of the capitalist class.

But the militant minority goes forward, tho small in numbers, under the leadership of Foster which will some day lay Green on the scrap pile, along with his fatter brothers who have to be wheeled around Atlantic City's scab hotels by colored workers receiving the magnificant sum or 20 cents an hour.

Green, the miners thank the leadership of the T. U. E. L. for their splendid work, while they have nothing but contempt for you and your kind, who serve the bosses while the miners live in despair.

Machine and Speed Up Disemploys Workers and Lowers the Wage

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 16.—That the advance of machinery and the speed-up systems are putting workers in the unemployed army while working those remaining on the job at life-wrecking speed, is shown by the testimony of employers of non-union shops in this city.

Seven hundred men in a nut and bolt factory are doing as much work as 1,250 men did in 1920. Other bosses report the same trend. Wages, however, are about the same or less than five years ago.

Maintenance and Power Workers Organize

By PATRICK J. McCLELLAN

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 16—A well attended mass meeting of building maintenance and power plant workers was held at Labor Temple, at which Chester W. Bixby of the United Labor Council of Greater New York, P. P. Cosgrove of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union, Thomas Barker formerly of the Australian Transport Workers and J. O. Bentall, were the principle speakers. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Amalgamated Public Service Workers' Union, which announces that other meetings will follow in various sections of the city.

Plans have been laid to organized the unorganized workers who constitute the big majority of the workers in the industry, and amalgamate the existing unions in the industry into one industrial union, covering all workers in light, heat and power plants thruout Greater New York.

In addition to the mass meetings in different sections of the city special educational meetings for the members of the union will be held every two weeks at the union headquarters at 350 East 81 St., the office for the drive is open daily at 350 East 81 St. Announcement for the second mass meeting will be made in a few days.

Attempt to Unionize Negro Laundry Workers

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—A campaign to organize the Negro laundry workers into the union has started in Harlem, where thousands of Negro workers work 10, 11 and 12 hours a day for a small wage.

The trade union committee for organising Negro workers, as a first step in its campaign to unionize the industry, has started to agitate for the union in the fraternal societies and churches. It is also using a moving picture film to bring home to the Negro workers the necessity of organization.

The laundry bosses have taken away the Saturday half-holiday that the laundry workers at one time enjoyed in Harlem, which the union promises to restore.

The committee plans to organize the Negro teamsters and chauffeurs in Harlem and also the painters that decorate and redecorate homes and stores, after the drive on the laundry workers.

PAINTERS AMONG THE FEW UNIONS GETTING RAISE

And Then Living Costs Are Going Up Too

By LELAND OLDS.

Union painters have continued to advance their wages thru 1925, according to the report of the U. S. department of labor on union wages and hours. In 18 of the 40 cities covered by the report union rates for painters May 1, 1925, were materially higher than in 1924. In not a single city did the Bro. of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers take a cut.

Extending the comparison back to 1920 we find the painter's minimum hourly rate raised in 27 of the 40 cities while 4 cities show lower wages than in 1920. Some of the increases were considerable including a gain of 31.8c per hour in Pittsburgh and 30c in Cincinnati. In general the union has materially improved the living standards of its members the last 5 years.

Painters have the 44-hour week or better in every city except Richmond where 48 hours is still the rule. They lead the other crafts with a 40-hour week in Boston, Newark, New York, Portland, Scranton and Seattle. Since 1913 hours have been reduced in 19 cities.

Chicago tops the list in painter wages with a minimum of $1.50 an hour. Pittsburgh follows with $1.468 and New York with $1.313. Chicago has a gain of 20% over 1920 and 131% over 1913, Pittsburgh 28% and 162%. The lowest painter scale is 55c in Charleston, S. C.

Minimum hourly rates for union painters in 15 cities in 1913, 1920 and 1925 were:

Baltimore	$0.875	$0.90	$1.00
Boston	.50	1.00	1.10
Chicago	.65	1.25	1.50
Cleveland	.50	1.125	1.25
Denver	.50	1.00	1.375
Detroit	.45	1.00	1.125
Kansas City	.60	1.00	1.25
Los Angeles	.438	.875	1.00
Minneapolis	.50	1.00	1.00
New Orleans	.40	.75	.85
New York	.50	1.125	1.313
Philadelphia	.425	1.00	1.00
St. Louis	.57	1.00	1.30
San Francisco	.563	1.063	[illegible]
Seattle	.563	1.00	1.125

Union painters secured increases since 1924 in Baltimore, Birmingham, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Denver, Kansas City, Little Rock, Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Scranton, Seattle and Washington. Their rates of pay are materially below the average in Atlanta, Charleston, Fall River, Jacksonville, Manchester, New Orleans, Richmond and St. Paul. All except the last are either in the south or in low wage textile centers in the north and the rates are 90c or less per hour.

The average of the 40 cities was $1.048 May 1, 1925, compared with $1.013 in 1924, 93.9c in 1920 and 48.7c in 1923. The present rate is 3½% over 1924, 11.6% over 1920 and 114.4% over 1913.

The Two French Trade Union Congresses

Report by Comrade Lozovsky to the Executive Bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions.

THE present state of the French trade union movement is due to the general economic and political conditions in France as a whole. The outstanding features of the present situation are the sharpening of the financial crisis and the political struggle in consequence of the colonial war. A general drive to the right is still going on.

All in all French industry is making ends meet: there is no unemployment in France; the stream of foreign workers, now amounting to nearly three millions, flows on, allowing the industrialists to extend and cut down industry as the need arises without complications. On the other hand, however, this immigration of foreigners is reducing wages and lowering the economic standards of the French working class, and this is a question that is beginning to play a big role in the French workers' struggle to better their position and is now attracting serious attention.

WHAT are the basic features in France's position to-day? The most surprising thing is that there is not that confidence there was in her after-war prosperity. The masses are in a rather anxious frame of mind, lack faith in the government, and there is a feeling that the lesser wars, the little colonial disputes in Morocco, Syria, and elsewhere, may possibly drag France into bigger conflicts and so directly affect the existence of the masses. Such a feeling of disquiet is making for an ideological crisis inside the right wing of the labor movement, both socialist and trade union.

The French socialist party and the French General Confederation of Labor form the organic basis of the "left block" which is at the moment, conducting a war which has never been popular while the reformists of the socialist fraternity are supporting the government in this war. This official support of the French government's war policy is abhorent to the masses and as a result some interesting phenomena have lately made their appearance in the French labor movement. Numerous congresses of workers and peasants have been held in France during the past three months, meeting in the Paris district, in Bordeaux, in the north and in the south.

THESE congresses have been representative of wide sections of the workers, including not only workers under the influence of the unitary and socialist unions, but non-party workers as well. It is difficult to state exactly how many workers were represented, but there was one thing these congresses did do and that was to attract fresh strata of the workers to participation in political life who had never hitherto taken any active part therein.

This series of congresses amply proves that there is a decidedly forward move taking place in the French labor movement, set going by the sharpening of the struggle of ideas going on inside the reformist organizations. Left socialist tendencies have appeared within the socialist parties, while a left wing opposition has been formed in the reformist Confederation of Labor, and which despite its unformed character, does reflect the dissatisfaction with the policy of the reformist trade union leaders to be seen in working class circles.

Corelation of Forces in the Trade Union Movement.

OUT of the twelve million workers and employees in France only one million are in the ranks of the two confederations of labor; in other words, only one-tenth of the workers of France are in any way organized in unions. The old historical traditions of the French labor movement are to blame for this state of affairs, there never having been big organizations or a trade union movement counting its members by the million. This is to be explained by the specific structure of the unions, their peculiar line of policy and by the fact that they have preferably organized only the active sections of the working class. The broad non-party masses with their passive attitude to political questions still continue on the whole to stand apart from the trade union movement.

As far as membership goes, both confederations had much about the same numbers at their last congresses. For some few months prior to its congress our Unitary Confederation was by far the stronger, but before their congress the reformists did their utmost to get all reformist elements over to their side and on the eve of the congress the National Teachers' Union with 70,000 members joined the reformist Confederation of Labor, an event which had a great political effect.

IT must be noted that generally speaking our Unitary Confederation is steadily growing and becoming increasingly working class in character, whereas the reformist C. G. T. is being increased by the enrolment of the civil service elements and clerks. The more C. G. T. moves to the right the more it attracts the conservative and reactionary elements in the labor movement.

The Unitary C. G. T. has some 500,000 members and the reformist C. G. T. about the same number. During the past year C. G. T. U. has not grown to any great extent numerically for many reasons: firstly, because our tactic is not to cause a break away of either individuals or whole organizations desirous of joining our Confederation of Labor from the reformist trade union movement. We advise them, instead, to stick to the reformist confederation and carry out our tactics inside.

Again, the slow numerical growth of the C. G. T. U. is in a certain measures due to the fact that the French trade unions provide nothing in the way of strike or sickness benefits. The slow development of the C. G. T. U. is, however, compensated for by the growth of the left wing inside the reformist confederation.

The Two Congresses.

BOTH congresses were opened on the same day. And thereby hangs a tale. It was decided to hold the congress of the Unitary Confederation of Labor in Bordeaux. But when the reformist Confederation of Labor announced that its congress would be held in Paris in September our comrades resolved to transfer their congress to Paris likewise hold it in September in order to have both congresses sitting simultaneously for the purpose of establishing contact and setting up a united front.

Thereupon the arrangements commission of the reformist confederation fixed on August 26th as their congress date so as not to have the other congress meeting alongside theirs. Determined to have both congresses sitting at the same time, the C. G. T. U. again altered its congress date. This put the reformists in a very awkward position since they would have had to change their congress date again, which would have shown that they were clearly afraid of the Unitary Confederation, so they decided to open their congress on the day appointed in spite of the fact that the C. G. T. U. was going to meet in congress on the same day.

THUS both congresses were opened in Paris on August 26th in different parts of the town. Our comrades had previously proposed to the reformists that the two congresses be held in the same building but in different halls so as to have a sort of fraternization, as it were, but the reformists declined to consider the proposal.

A general idea of the two congresses is to be gained from the reports of a contributor to the more than moderate paper, "Le Temps," who attended both. This is what he says:

> "The Congress of the Unitary Confederation of Labor gives one the impression of a pre-war congress of the General Confederation of Labor. There are the same proletarian persons, the same speeches about revolution, the same talk of the overthrow of capitalism, exactly as if nothing had changed. With the reformist congress it was quite different. There it was to be seen that statesmen were in session, men for whom the interests of the community play a very great role."

This opinion of the bourgeois writer on such a reactionary paper sufficiently characterises the fundamental features of the two congresses.

THE first act of the C. G. T. U. congress was to write the other congress proposing that a joint session be held to go into the question of unity, failing which it was proposed that a mixed commission be appointed for this purpose. It was further proposed that the reformists should hear a delegation from the unitary congress.

This proposal caused an uproar at the reformist congress and a battle began around the question of whether the delegation ought to be heard or not. Although the leaders were most decidedly against any such thing, the congress majority was in favor of giving the delegation a hearing.

When this was made known to the C. G. T. U. congress our comrades (a proof of the ardent French temperament), rose as one man and sang the Internationale. They thought that since the reformists had decided to give them a hearing the majority were in favor of unity. But it is one thing to listen to proposals on unity and quite a different thing to adopt them.

THIS letter of the C. G. T. U. to the reformists was the start of a struggle of ideas at the congress of the reformist Confederation of Labor. The question of unity was not on their agenda as a separate question, but all the same out of the six days' proceedings three days were devoted to this burning question.

Unity can be left out of an agenda, but to pass the question over in silence is impossible.

All efforts to set up the united front in France have failed, in so far as its consolidation has had to depend on the leading lights in the reformist movement. It would be wrong, however, to say that the attempts to establish the united front have produced no results as far as the masses are concerned.

THE workers' congresses, the creation of the central committee of action, the opposition to the war, the struggle against Caillaux' financial plans, they have all helped to make of the Communist Party and the Unitary Confederation a rallying point for the dissident elements inside the reformist movement.

What was the strength of the opposition at the reformist congress? When the votes were taken it was found that ten per cent of the unions represented voted for unity. If, however, the clever pre-congress preparations be taken into consideration, the way it was ideologically worked over by the leaders, the organisational wire-pulling, and all the specific peculiarities of French congresses where it is extremely difficult to determine the number of workers represented and the acual relative strength of the various groupings during the vote taking, it will be realised that the ten per cent, that voted for unity represents the will of a far bigger percentage in the subsidiary organizations of the reformist confederation.

The second and final article dealing with the two congresses of the French trade union movement will be given in tomorrow's issue. Watch for it.

All workers' children must attend this meeting. The meeting is held under the auspices of the Junior section of the Y. W. L. of Philadelphia.

An attractive program has been prepared by the Juniors.

Young Workers League as well as Junior speakers will address the meeting.

All workers must send their children to this meeting. Admission free.

A good book on Communism will make you a better Communist.

What Is Bolshevization?

By HERTZ BOURGIN.

Bolshevize your ranks!

Such is the mandate of the Communist International to the Workers Party of America.

Bolshevization has thus been definitely placed on the agenda of our party. And the reorganization of the Workers Party on a shop nuclei basis is, practically, the first step toward the realization of the Comintern's mandate.

Bolshevization of the party means, of course, the inoculation of its membership with Bolshevism. And a question arises:

Is not our Workers Party a Communist one? Are not Communists Bolsheviki?

We come thus to the question: What is Bolshevism? Who is, by right, a Bolshevik?

There is a confusion in the minds of the general public as to the meaning of Bolshevism. And not only of the general public. There is enough of confusion in our ranks, too.

Many a comrade consider the essence of Bolshevism in devotion to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. This is, truly, a wrong conception of Bolshevism. That devotion to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is an inseparable attribute of a Bolshevik, nobody will deny. But an attribute is not the substance of a thing. The substance of Bolshevism had existed prior to the very formation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Besides, one may be a devoted friend of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics not necessarily sharing the doctrines of Bolshevism.

There are other comrades, who locate the essence of Bolshevism in the centralized form of a Bolshevist party mechanism and in strict party discipline. We have here a case of mistaking the outward, tho indispensible form of a Bolshevist organization for the very soul of Bolshevism.

Still other comrades define Bolshevism as a capability of application of past revolutionary experience to present conditions. But even this conception is hardly satisfactory. Capability can be required from a leader, not from each and every Bolshevik. It is, in general, impossible to inocculate somebody with capabilities. They are inborn, not acquired by conviction or revolutionary ardor. Besides, no Bolshevik claims infallability in the appreciation of a situation. As a human being, the most illustrious Bolshevik has his limitations, and is not, consequently, immune against errors in the application of past revolutionary experience to a new situation.

What are really the essential traits of a Bolshevik?

It goes without saying that a Bolshevik adheres to Marxian teachings and acts accordingly. Unlike the menshevik, who contents himself with talking revolution, class struggle, etc., a Bolshevik strives to materialize these precepts of Marx, Engels and Lenin.

In the second place a Bolshevik is always with the masses, participating in their everyday struggles. The Bolsheviki ultimately triumphed in Russia, altho not being in a majority, solely because of their close contact with the masses. The tremendous influence exhibited by the British Communists at Scarborough was gained by having had penetrated the workers' organizations.

Thirdly, a Bolshevik while penetrating the thick of the masses, does not, nevertheless, level himself down to their standard. On the contrary, he goes to the masses with the purpose to elevate them up to his own revolutionary standard. While participating in the daily struggles of the working class, he does not fail to inject into them revolutionary issues.

For—and this is another characteristic of a Bolshevik—a Bolshevik thinks only in terms of the proletarian revolution. He does not let himself to be swayed from his path of activity by any consideration of bourgeois democracy, comfort, kinship, career and the like.

And the last—but by far not the least—characteristic of a Bolshevik is action. An inactive Bolshevik is a misnomer. The moment a Bolshevik ceases to be active, he forfeits his Bolshevist birthright.

The enumerated requirements and qualifications are the acid test of a Bolshevik. How many of us will stand the test?

Hence the urgent necessity of the bolshevization of the party.

And if I were to define bolshevization, I would say:

Bolshevization is adoption of the party, thru a Marxian education and constant activity within the working masses, to its task of leading them to the proletarian revolution.

In short: Bolshevization aims at the conversion of the Workers Party into a party of professional proletarian revolutionists.

This conversion ought to be performed long ago. It must at least be done now. The sooner the better.

The party strife wrought havoc to the morale of our ranks. It has torn asunder every party branch in two hostile camps. The existing branches ceased to serve the purpose. They became obsolete and clog the way to bolshevization.

Luckily, with the reorganization just started, the Workers Party gets its way cleared for its rejuvenation and conversion into a true Bolshevist party, worthy of the name of:

"The American section of the Comintern."

MILWAUKEE CELEBRATES THE EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY OF BOLSHEVIK VICTORY

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 16.—An enthusiastic meeting of several hundred workers celebrated the eighth anniversary of the Russian revolution in Milwaukee last Sunday evening. The audience was thoroly proletarian in character and viewed the celebration as an inspiration for the struggle against American imperialism. The program was opened by the singing of the International by the Freiheit Singing Society, which has developed into one of the best choirs in the city.

Comrade G. S. Shklar, speaking for the party, brought out the significance of the Russian revolution, pointing out that the Russian revolution stands today as a monument to the correcteness of the Communist principles and the bankruptcy of social-democracy.

Plechanov and Lenin.

"In 1905 Plechonov stated that the Russian workers should not take up arms but Comrade Lenin, in the face of reaction and temporary defeat, set out to draw the essential lessons of this revolution, pointing out that the Soviets were born from the revolutionary struggles and will become the historic form of proletarian class power." Comrade Shklar then led up to the 1917 revolution, when the Bolsheviks mobilized their forces and struggle the death blow not only to Czarism but also to the rule of the land owners and capitalism.

The speaker further outlined the development of Soviet Russia in the past eight years and spoke of the tremendous strides on the economic field and in the socialization of the industries and agriculture.

Trade Union Unity.

He also spoke of the revolutionary situation in England, Europe and the colonial countries, citing the movement for world trade union unity, and other manifestations of growing class consciousness of the workers of the world. The speaker pointed out the necessity of the American workers to rally to the support of the struggle against imperialism. The party in Wisconsin must carry on a fight against the treacherous middle class LaFollette movement and the S. P. and for the slogan of a united laor party. The importance of drawing the Negro workers, the most exploited of the working class, into the ranks of the revolutionary movement was emphasized and the American Negro Labor Congress cited as an example of a beginning towards this.

Against Loreism.

In closing Comrade Shklar spoke of the bolshevization of the party pointing out that while the enemies of the movement rejoice at the ideological struggle within the party and think that the party has become weakened by it, that quite to the contrary it has grown stronger, having purged elements led by Lore and his followers of the right wing.

Sylvia Selendich spoke for the Junior groups of Milwaukee, and pointed out that Leninism still lives today stronger than ever before in the powerful movement to overthrow the capitalist system and called upon the workers to send their children to the Junior groups.

Comarde Edwards, in speaking for the Young Workers League related his experiences in Soviet Russia and the wonderful achievement of Russian workers in building up their army, and their industries and administering them for the benefit of the toiling masses.

The Russian-Ukrainian choir sang revolutionary songs and the Funeral March in honor of Comrade Frunze, the former Red Army commander, and other revolutionary fighters who died in the struggle.

SECOND ISSUE OF 'LIVING' NEWSPAPER OUT SAT., NOV. 21

The second issue of the living newspaper "published" by the worker correspondents of the Novy Mir, will be out next Saturday, Nov. 21, at 8 p. m., at the Workers' House, 1902 W. Division St. The first issue mett with enthusiastic approval of the Russian workers of the city. Many new worker correspondents joined the Chicago group of the Novy Mir. About twenty authors will participate in the second issue. Admission is only 15 cents. If you understand the Russian language, come over. If not, tell some Russian friend about it.

Ukrainian and Polish Workers Hold Eighth Anniversary Meeting

The Ukrainian and Polish workers of Chicago held an enthusiastic celebration of the 8th anniversary of the Russian revolution at the Ukrainian Workers' Hall, at 1532 West Chicago avenue.

Comrade Kowalski, who spoke in Polish, outlined the situation of the Communist movement thruout the world in general and in Poland in particular. He described how the Grabski government tortures Ukrainian, Russian and Polish class conscious workers.

He then appealed to the assembled workers to be more active in the party and carry on educational work among the masses. He also urged Workers (Communist) Party to join those who were not members of the the organization.

He was followed by Comrade Waranisia, who spoke in Ukrainian.

Following the talks by the two comrades a small play was presented called "A Picture From Life." The play depicted a scene in a Polish prison and urged unity of all workers

NEWARK GENERAL MEMBERSHIP MEETING MARKS PROGRESS IN REORGANIZATION OF PARTY

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 16.—The first general membership meeting of the Newark District to consider the problem of reorganization and bolshevization was held on Wednesday, Nov. 11, at the Labor Lyceum, 704 So. 14th St., Newark. Bert Wolfe was invited to address the meeting on bolshevization and reorganization and explain the plans of the Central Executive Committee and the New York District Executive Committee in these matters.

The speaker took up the present party situation and the steps most urgently necessary for the bolshevization of the party. He dwelt particularly on the changes in function, structures and ideology necessary before the party would be really on the road toward becoming a Bolshevik party. He described the last crisis within the party as a bolshevization crisis and pointed out that it had not yet been entirely liquidated but merely changed its form and lost its acuteness.

The structural differences and the difference in function between the old territorial branches and the new shop nuclei were than taken up in detail and all the problems of specific industries and categories of workers, of housewives, and professionals, of building trades workers and unemployed, etc., were gone into.

Misunderstood Work.

The general discussion revealed that the City Central Committee of Newark had entirely misunderstood the nature of reorganization and had planned to reorganize the whole district into one big international branch, the only change would therefore have been the partial removal of federation lines, but the territorial basis would have been kept. Comrade Wolfe entered into this matter in detail and showed that the big factories in and around Newark made it an ideal industrial region for shop nucleus organization, and the other plan was then rejected by the speakers who had sponsored it.

To Intensify Activity.

In the name of the District Executive Committee of District No. 2, Comrade Wolfe described the plans being laid for intensifying the activities of the Newark section by creating a sub-district there, by the District Executive Committee's paying more attention to this sub-committee, by sending special comrades from time to time, and drawing in comrades from Newark to observe the higher party units in New York City.

The next general membership meeting of Newark will take place some time in December. A more complete mobilization of the membership will be sought for and registrations will be taken and shop nuclei and working area sections will be formed at that meeting. When that meeting is called, it is imperative that every member of the party in Newark (there are about 200) be present if they do not want to run the danger of losing their party membership and being lost to the party. Special plans were suggested for a more complete mobilization at that meeting.

Hundreds Turned Away at New York American Education Week Meet

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 16.—The meeting arranged here by the Young Workers League against American Education Week was a great success. Hundreds of workers had to be turned away from the hall because of the big turnout.

In order to rally those workers who were turned away from the first meeting the Young Workers League is arranging another anti-American educational week meeting to take place on Sunday, Nov. 22 at 1347 Boston Road, Bronx, N. Y. There will be prominent speakers to address the meeting and all workers are invited.

Juniors of Los Angeles Plan Excellent Concert

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 16.—What promises to be one of the most interesting entertainment of the year in Los Angeles, is a concert arranged by the Junior Section of the Young Workers League of Los Angeles. The first performance will take place on Saturday Nov. 21st 2:30 p. m. at the Cooperative Center, Brooklyn & Mott Sts. This will be especially for Juniors and their friends. Admission will be free.

On Sunday night, Nov. 22nd, 8:15 p. m. in the same hall, adults will pay 50 cents admission. The program is worth many times that amount. More than 50 Juniors will participate. "The Goosling," a ballet, the "Goosestep" a military march, "School Spirit" a play in two acts, "A Day in a Factory" operetta, and "The Rose Bush" a playlet, are some of the outstanding numbers.

The Juniors reflect in their concert the struggles against the capitalist public school system of America, which they are carrying on daily.

In the previous concerts the Juniors of Los Angeles have set a record for unusual merit.

Karakhan Returns to China.

MOSCOW, Nov. 16.—L. Karakhan, the Soviet ambassador to China, has left for Peking after a stay of two months in Moscow.

HORTHY HANGMEN BRUTALLY BEAT AND TORTURE ARRESTED WORKERS

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Nov. 16.—(I. R. A.)—In contradiction to the affirmations of the Hungarian government that in the police prison of Budapest no prisoners had been maltreated or tortured, the organ of the Hungarian social-democrats, Nepszava, reports on October 7 under the title "The prisoners were seriously maltreated and tortured," the following about the fate of the arrested Communists, left socialists and Comrade Rakosi:

Gives Lie to Horthy.

"For days the police has stated in a propaganda-like manner that not one of the suspected Communist prisoners had been maltreated, and that they were treated excellently. In contradiction to that we have received reliable information that the officials of the state police who are working in the Budapest police presidum have not changed their character! The majority of the arrested have been tortured, beaten, trodden upon in the most revolting and inhuman fashion. The arrested engineer Josef Weiss was beaten mercilessly. If the lawyer of Josef Weiss would be allowed to enter the prison and speak with his client, he would see on his face the red spots caused by the beating. He would then see on the forehead of the secretary of the Vagi-group, Josef Mitterer, a long swollen bruise. One cannot explain away with any paragraph of the penal code why the neck of the arrested Bela Mahler is covered with the traces of strangling. Also the arrested Josef Papa was very seriously maltreated. These maltreatments were led by the notorious detective Nyiri who threw him to the floor, trod upon him, and, standing on his stomach, turned himself round on his heel. The arrested Nicolaus Petri was boxed on his ears for six times. The arrested George Toth is charged with nothing but being the brother of the arrested socialist woman, Hamann When he protested against this treatment, he was taken to a special cell and returned the next morning to his former cell in a terribly beaten state. On his wrists and hands there were traces of terrible blows.

"Stefan Frisch, the son of a well-to-do factory owner, was terribly beaten, altho there was not the least suspicion against him. Paul Vandor was beaten on his face and body. His screams were heard by a number of other prisoners. Ludwig Stemmel washed off traces of blood in the prison toilet. In a similar way the prisoners, Oeri, Goegoes, Zeinert, Josef Winkler and Paul Juhasz were treated. The arrested Lucacs was hanged up by his feet and terribly beaten by the detectives. A brother of the arrested socialist woman, Hamann, who is seriously ill and suffers from inflammation of the kidney, was taken to the police station out of bed, brutally treated, only because he refused to give information about the role played by his sister.

What British Mission Saw.

"And after all these doubtlessly very insufficient reports, there is a finale. The prisoners were driven together in one room and were confronted with a society, led by the vice-police-president, Hetenyi. They declared that this was the British mission. The gentlemen entered the room and before the open door stood detectives and policemen, whose fists, sticks and rubber clubs the prisoners knew already. The vice-police-president pointed to the prisoners with a great move and said: 'None of you has been maltreated, isn't it so? None of you has been beaten, isn't it so? If anything has happened to anybody, he should say so now.'

"None of the arrested moved. With a fixed glance they looked at the door where the detectives and policemen were standing. The society looked for a moment at the sad figures and then left them with a kind good-bye To these witnessess the police refers now and asks them to state that the prisoners have not been maltreated.'

Bourgeois Paper Confirms Story.

The bourgeois organ Vilag also confirms that the prisoners are being tortured. The minister of the interior is suing the paper for libel.

OAKLAND UNIONS DEMAND REPEAL OF C, S. GAG LAW

Building Trades Ask Only Whitney Pardon

OAKLAND, Calif., Nov. 16.—The Oakland Central Labor Council and the Carpenters' Local No. 892 have unanimously passed a resolution asserting their support of Anita Whitney, who faces prison as a result of the recent decision of the U. S. supreme court, under a verdict based on the California "criminal syndicalism" law.

The resolution cites the reason for this support as recognition of the services of Miss Whitney in fighting for the workers in industrial disputes and besides petitioning the governor for her immediate and unconditional pardon demands of the state legislature that it speedily repeal the criminal syndicalist law.

The Building Trades Council passed the same resolution, with the exception that it cut out the demand for repeal of the law, thus making their action only a personal appeal for Miss Whitney.

The complete resolution has been adopted by Viking Lodge No. 59 of Good Templars, also.

Arrest Four Hundred Workers and Peasants in Dalmatian Raids

BELGRADE, (IRA) Nov. 16.—Over four hundred workers and peasants in Dalmatia were placed under arrest and accused of membership to the Communist Party, which is illegal in Jugo-Slavia. Fifty persons will be tried for high treason and for infringment of the law on the safety of the state, according to which membership in organizations hostile to the state is punished with twenty years of hard labor or with death.

The arrests took place a few days before the expected visit of the Jugo-Slavian king in Dalmatia.

Biedenkapp to Speak in Yorkville, Nov. 29

Schedule of Courses at New York Workers' School

The Workers' School aims to prepare working men and women for more capable activity on behalf of their class in the unions, the Workers Party and other proletarian organizations. While workers of every description are admitted to most of the courses, the school is not "non-partisan." Its curriculum is based on the assumption that Marx and Lenin in their works and deeds have given the proletariat a science of understanding, organization and action which directs it along its march towards power and emancipation. To turn out "Marxist-Leninists" for leadership in the working class movement—that is the fundamental aim of the school.

All courses mentioned below are open to any worker qualified to take them, with the exception of courses marked "for selected students only." Additional courses will be offered later where there is sufficient demand for them. The Workers' School will also undertake to establish branch schools in each important quarter of the city and in nearby cities where a course in the fundamentals of Communism and a course in English will be the basic courses offered.

Party Training Course.

This course is for party functionaries, active trade unionists and leading party workers generally. To gain admission members must prove activity and sufficient previous preparation to qualify them for taking the course. Those in doubt about eligibility can confer with the director of the Workers' School. The training course will be given one night a week for a period of six months. It is limited to one night so that the most active workers can attend. It will consist of two groups of 25 workers each as follows:

Group I.—First three months. Marxism and Party History and Problems. Second three months. Leninism and Work in the Trade Unions.

Group II.—First three months. Marxism and Our Work in the Trade Unions. Second three months. Leninism and Party History and Problems. Fee for the course: $4.00 every three months.

Marxism—Leninism — Instructor, Bertram D. Wolfe. Two three-months, once a week courses. Tuesday or Wednesday evening.

Party History and Problems—Instructor, Wm. W. Weinstone. Three months, once a week. Tuesday evening.

Our Work in the Trade Unions—Instructor, Bert Miller. Three months, once a week. Wednesday evening.

Group I. Begins November 17 at 7:30 to 10:30 p. m.

Group II. Begins November 18, at 6:30 to 9:30 p. m.

Shop Nuclei Training Course.

The Workers' School will train one worker of each shop nucleus, preferably the organizer, to lead political discussions in his shop nucleus, in the form of a course in the "Fundamentals of Leninism" in which the theory and practice of Leninism is their concrete application to the American party in general and the needs and problems of the shop nucleus in particular. The course in the central school will both deal with the matter taught in every shop nucleus and the manner of teaching it or leading the discussion. The shop nucleus will select the comrade to take the training course, exact attendance from him and pay his fee.

Shop Nucleus Training Course—Begins November 18, Instructor, Jack Stachel. Two courses given every other week for a period of six months. One will take this course on alternate Wednesday evenings, the other group on alternate Friday evenings. Fee $2.50 every three months, paid by the shop nucleus.

Party Training Course.

The party training course consists of three courses: Marxism and Leninism — Party History and Problems — Our Work in the Trade Unions. Brief outline of each course is given below:

Marxism and Leninism.

Part I. Marxism. This course will deal with the origin and the philosophical and economic aspects of Marxism. How Marx out of utopian socialism, metaphysical materialism and Hegelian dialetics welded a scientific basis for socialism, his participation in the revolution of 1848 and the lessons he derived therefrom, his activities in the first international and his conflicts with the anarchists and La Sallean social-democrats, the fundamental economic concepts of Marxism leading up to the accumulation of capital as a basis for understanding monopoly and imperialism, the revisionist and opportunist attacks on, and distortion of Marxism, and finally, a study of "Lenin as a Marxist," in which the roots of present day Communist theory and practice will be shown to be imbedded in Marxism—these are the basic elements of the course.

Part II. Leninism. Following directly from the study of "Lenin as a Marxist" in Part I, and from the study of capitalist accumulation, Part II, will begin with a study of the economics and politics of the era of trusts, monopoly, export of capital, imperialism, and the polemic with Kautsky concerning "super-imperialism." This will be followed by a study of class divisions and class struggles in the imperialist epoch: the colonial peoples, the peasantry and the petty-bourgeoisie; and then a detailed study of the proletariat, the aristocracy of labor, opportunism, revisionism, and the break of Lenin with the Second International. The proletarian revolution, its basis in objective and subjective conditions, the relation between workers and bourgeois revolutions, the revolution as a problem of power, Bonapartism, Luxembourgism, Trotskyism will also be taken up and after consideration of the Russian revolution and the Communist International as "products" of Leninism, the final subject will be "A Party of Lenin."

Party History and Problems

The aim of this course is highly political: to orientate leading comrades for a solution of future problems thru a study of present and past ones.

This course will seek to familiarize the membership with the origins of the Communist movement; its socialist background; the left wing struggles in the socialist movement, which are the roots of the ideology prevailing in the American movement. It will deal with the various groupings which existed within the movement; their contributions toward the movement and how they affect party attitude today; the ideological struggles and the causes for them, such as, the split in the left wing, the struggle between the C. P. and C. L. P.—the C. P. and U. C. P. the Workers' Council group and the Communist Party and struggles to date—treating these struggles from the Marxist-Leninist standpoint. The course will aim to show the development of the party toward a Bolshevist Party and will treat of the obstacles leading toward it and how to overcome them.

In each period of the party history, the problems will be taken up and discussed from the viewpoint of the Communist International. Effort will be made to relate the Communist International viewpoint at the various congresses with the party attitude toward such problems as the party organizational structure and the federation, the legal and illegal organization; the united front and labor party; trade union work; agrarian and Negro work and imperialism. No one can understand the task of bolshevization of our party without a knowledge of the party history and problems.

Our Work in the Trade Unions.

—(1.) The American trade union movement, its growth and structure. (2) Organization of the unorganized, the difficulties involved and the methods to be employed. (3.) Amalgamation, why it is necessary, the difficulties involved, campaigns and methods employed. (4.) Shop committees, the need for the shop committee, its functions and its growth in industry. (5.) Class collaboration. What it is? Manifestations in the American labor movement. How to fight it. (6.) Strike strategy—a round table discussion led by some of our leading trade unionists, whose names will be announced later. (7.) The technique of wage and price negotiations, agreements—Alexander Trachtenberg, formerly statistician for the I. L. G. W. U., and Harry Wander. (8.) Labor and the law. A study of legislation and court decisions affecting labor. (9.) Politics in the labor movement. The various political tendencies in the American labor movement. (10.) The fight against reaction and reformism. The phases of the struggle and the methods employed. (11.) The world trade union movement. (12.) Our program of activity in the trade union movement.

"IT'S OURS," SAY RUSSIAN WORKERS OF THEIR SHOP

Nearing Finds Out Why Soviets Stick

By SCOTT NEARING

VLADIKAVKAZ, Caucasus—(FP)—There has been some difference of opinion as to whether the soviet republic is stable. Many of these opinions came from Vienna or Helsingfors. Others were written in Moscow.

Let me answer the question from the circumference of the soviet republic—Vladikavkaz, a city in the Caucasus, more than a thousand miles from the soviet capital. Workers in Vladikavkaz and peasants of the countryside had an excellent chance to choose between the forces of Denikine, Wrangel and the other "whites" who were attacking the soviet government from the south—and the "reds" who finally defeated the white armies.

Vladikavkaz still bears many signs of the conflict. More than one building stands roofless and yawning. Along the railroad are the wrecks of hundreds of burned freight cars. The cement wall surrounding the railroad shops is loop-holed every few feet. It was behind this wall that the workers fought their battles.

Workers and peasants with whom I talked all preferred the "red" army to the white. First, because it was well disciplined. The white soldiers plundered and burned indiscriminately. Second, because the landlords and capitalists came with the whites, while the red army symbolized working class control of the factories and more land for the peasants.

Peasants in the neighborhood of Vladikavkaz have nearly twice as much land as before the revolution.

Workers have not gained so much. They are earning only as good a living as in prewar days. But the factories and shops are "ours." They say this with pride as they show you about, introducing you to foremen and superintendents who only a short time ago were workers at the bench, and who are trained like the other workmen and are "comrade" to all. They take you into the 12 reading rooms scattered through the railroad shops and into the splendidly equipped workers club.

Cooperatives abound in Vladikavkaz—bakeries, diningrooms, stores and the like. Again they are "ours" with a phrase of contempt for the private stores along the same street.

Living quarters have been redistricted in the city. The big private houses of the old days are either used for public purposes or house people in proportion to the number of folks in the family.

A visitor to Vladikavkaz has only one possible impression of the new social system: It is there to stay. The former owners are gone, leaving a noisome trail behind them. The new owners feel an intense pride in their property. Their economic and social interests compel them to defend it, not because Moscow says so, but because it is "ours."

NEW YORK HOUSING COMMITTEE HEARS TESTIMONY OF WOMEN'S COUNCIL ON MISERABLE CONDITIONS OF WORKERS

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The Thursday session of the aldermanic housing committee received a thrilling jar when the big banner carried by the representatives of the United Council of Working Class Women was unfurled before an audience that crowded the aldermanic chamber, carrying the inscription:

Working Women! Join the United Council of Working Class Women in Their Demand That the City Build Homes and Rent Them at Cost. Down with High Rents! We Refuse to Be Herded Into Firetraps and Unsanitary Death Holes for the Profit of the Landlord!

When Kate Gitlow finished her testimony by saying that "We only demand decent houses at a rental that the workers can pay, houses with light and air, houses that are clean and decent, and we are going to have them if we are compelled to fight for them," the whole house broke into applause which the chairman declared was entirely out of place and must be omitted.

Assail Landlords.

That the housing condition in New York City is worse than the city fathers had expected to find out was emphasized by every witness called before the committee now investigating this subject. It has been the hope of the landlords to convince the city council that the law now supposed to protect the tenants enacted as an emergency measure during the war must be repealed and in the meantime be made inoperative.

To make sure that public sentiment would not run too high against the officials if this were done, the committee is calling various heads of associations and clubs to sound the pulse of those who are in touch with the poor in their everyday life.

Untermeyers Economics.

Every witness declared that housing conditions were very bad. Mr Untermeyer admitted as much. But he said that the other workers should buy their own houses. Pay down a thousand or two and then pay "like rent" and after the houses were clear rent them and make a lot of money. When all the workers had done that they would be able to be landlords themselves. But he did not intimate who would rent from them if all owned houses, a singular omission not fully explained.

A priest followed and he got up his ire to a considerable degree as he denounced the "landlords who suck the blood from the poor by criminally high rents and rotten sanitary conditions." His description of the hells the workers have to live in was worthy of a Bolshevik. But he had not the slightest remedy to offer.

Unfit for Cattle.

It leaked out in uncomfortable torrents that hundreds of thousands in the city of New York live in houses that are a disgrace and that are not fit for cattle to live in. "They should be vazed to the ground," cried one of the witnesses.

In most of the cases it was shown that rents had gone up and in many cases more than doubled, in spite of the emergency law, that is still supposed to be in force. Witnesses from different clubs wearing fine silks and costly fur coats spilled tears over the poverty of the poor, but none except the representatives of the workers themselves could suggest a remedy.

It leaked out in considerable and unexpected ways that wages paid to girls working in the Grand Central were $2.98 per day and that railroad workers paid over 45% of their earnings for rent.

One well-dressed woman deplored that the landlords are not entirely in favor of the law that is hampering them in their skin game, and cited a meeting of landlords where language against the law and the government was "many times worse than anything ever uttered by Ben Gitlow who is now serving time in Atlanta." The kind lady did not even know where Ben is.

Comrade Unjus cited cases where there were several families in one house and where sanitary conditions were so horrible that inspectors can not stand the stench and so miss reporting them. "Houses built by the city for the workers and rented at cost, is what we want," said Comrade Unjus, representing the Workers Party in the United Council of Workingclass Women.

The investigation has aroused the people of New York and the demand made by the workers is taking hold. The daily press has carried a number of reports, usually colored in faver of the landlords.

FORMER BRTISH OWNERS GET CONCESSION ON LENA GOLD FIELDS IN SIBERIA

MOSCOK, Nov. 16.—The Lena gold fields have been restored to their former owners under a concession signed by the M. Djerzinsky and M. Litvinoff, for the supreme council of national economy and the foreign office, respectively, and Major Frederick Davis Gwynn, for the former British owners of the Lena company.

The concession covers more than 200 miles of gold bearing land along the River Lena in Siberia; a million and a half acres of iron and copper deposits, with blast furnaces and big industrial plants, known as the Sissert property, on the western edge of the Urals, and three quarters of a million acres of Altai property in South Siberia, whose deposits of gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc are yet impossible to estimate.

The Lena and Sissert properties have already been turned over to the British concern, which has considerable American backing for developing.

Religious Bigots to Teach Adam and Eve Myth on School Time

SAULTE STE. MARIE, Mich., Nov. 16—Religious bigots here have succeeded in getting the board of education to agree to allow students to leave school on Wednesday afternoon following recess time to attend churches of their own choosing to listen to bible talks. The students are to be given special credits for attendance at these bible school meetings by the public school officials.

To Figure Evolution.

A mass meeting is being called of all parents by the board at which the ministers will try to get parents enthused over the prospect that the doctrine of evolution will not "corrupt" the "morals" of their young children

Switchmen's Union to Call Wage Conference

Thomas C. Cashen, international president of the Switchmen's Union of America, announced that a meeting of the union's chairmen has been called to revise wage scales and working conditions. He did not announce the date.

While the switchmen's organization is independent, it is believed that it will co-operate with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen in seeking a wage advance.

Taxi Strikers Get Benefit.

BOSTON—(FP)—Nov. 16. — Eight hundred striking Checker taxi cab drivers are receiving their second strike benefit from the Taxi Drivers' Union. Committees from the union are canvassing all local unions affiliated with the Boston Central Labor Union for financial aid.

HAVE A VISIT WITH WORKERS OF CAUCASUS

Private Palace Now a Workers' Club

By SCOTT NEARING

VLADIKAVKAZ, Caucasus—(FP)—Traveling across the northern Caucasus in a railroad compartment with three peasants, a couple of carshop workers, a mechanic, two teachers and so on, the talk turned on the city to which we were going, Vladikavkaz.

"You will stay there only one day?" a carshop worker demanded, "surely you must see what we are doing there!"

Some talk followed and the matter was arranged. The train was getting into town about seven in the evening and there was little time to lose.

We went first to the workers club—along the main street to a great building that had once been a private house before it was wrecked during the occupation of the town by Denikin's forces. Now it is remodeled. There is a fine auditorium seating 800; a well equipped library with a large reading room; a cafe and dining room; offices; committee and class rooms and a day nursery. Behind the clubhouse is a big flower garden and an open air theater that has been in use all summer for concerts and plays. The whole clubhouse is electrically lighted, freshly decorated, well appointed and spotlessly clean.

"We did the whole job ourselves," one of the railroad workers said. "It has taken us two years. We have a sport club and gymnasium just around the corner. You must step in and see that, too."

There are more pretentious clubhouses in the United States, but few better adapted to educational and social purposes. I have seen these clubs. They belong to business men, bankers, lawyers and doctors. My conductor in this club was a woodworker in a railroad carshop.

Of course he spoke no English and we had some difficulty talking. To bridge the gap we had picked up a tall unshaven peasant—one of our fellow voyagers. From 1912 to 1916 this man had been a shingle weaver in the lumber mills of Oregon, Washington and British Columbia. He remembered just enough English to act as interpreter. So he shouldered his bundle at the station, came over to the club with us and went around explaining. It was a motley group as far as clothes went. They were all workingmen. But it was as logical as fate. These men or their like had once built this house for a rich profiteer. Now the wheel of fortune had turned and the builders were owning and using the products of their labor.

Even Missionary in No Danger in Russia

By MARTIN A. DILLMON.

ST. LOUIS—(FP)—The findings of the Rev. F. W. Burnham, president United Christian Missions of St. Louis, on his visit to Russia are at variance with the blood-and-thunder stories fed the American people. "The streets of Moscow are actually safer than the streets of St. Louis," Burnham asserts. With Mrs. Burnham he spent two months in Russia.

"Not only are there fewer burglaries and holdups in Russia than in the United States, but there are practically no beggars or tramps, and public officials are as adequate and competent there as here," he says. The Missions of which Burnham is head are international, with headquarters in St. Louis. The organization's annual expenditures are $3,000,000.

Burnham went to Russia to study church organizations. "Although there is no prohibition law in effect in Russia now, there is practically no drunkenness and no loafing. Everybody has to work," he says. "This year's grain crop in Russia is a bumper one. Though it is difficult for a foreigner to get in, once inside he finds travel confortable, food adequate and the Russians friendly and hospitable."

Medical Attention Free to Workers in the Land of Soviets

ROSTOV, Russia—(FP)—For workers medical attention is virtually free in Russia. Drug stores are city institutions. Hospitals and sanitariums are public establishments.

A worker in ill health goes to the doctor assigned to his industry or shop. After a physical examination, if the worker is found in chronic ill health he goes to a hospital or sanitarium and stays till he is well, free of charge with railroad fare paid both ways.

This is not charity. It is a public institution, just as the public schools and public highways are public in the United States. Each industry contributes to these health and insurance funds in proportion to the sickness or accidents existing in the industry. When a worker falls a victim to accident or sickness, the health institutions of the soviet union act to protect his health just as a fire-engine in the United States acts to protect property.

SWING TO THE LEFT IN BERLIN ELECTIONS DOOMS LOCARNO PACT AND VON HINDENBURG'S REGIME

By KARL REEVE

BERLIN, Germany (By Mail.)—The definite swing to the left in the municipal elections here, in which the Communist Party of Germany polled over 260,000 votes, demonstrates that as far as the German working masses are concerned, the robber pact signed at Locarno, and the monarchist Hindenburg regime are doomed to go.

The election took place amid increasing demand that the Luther cabinet resign and persistent rumors that the reichstag would be dissolved. Both the nationalist and socialist parties are wary about openly supporting the Locarno pact in the face of the mood of the workers, who denounce the agreement whereby they are further enslaved by allied imperialism.

Communists Get 43 Seats.

The results of the election, conducted on the system of proportional representation, give the Communist Party, 43 representative in the city administration, as compared to 73 socialists and 47 for the German national peoples' party, the monarchists. The Communist Party came within ten thousand votes of leading the nationalists, and thus becoming the second party of Germany.

The Communist Party has issued a statement demanding that the socialist representatives support a program of the immediate demands of the workers, or brand themselves once more as merely another one of the bourgeois parties.

There is a possibility of the workers having a majority in the city parliament says the Communist Party statement and if the socialist representatives earnestly have the interests of the workers at heart they will support the workers' demands. The Berlin workers have sent a majority to the city hall. Now then it is necessary for this majority to represent the will of its constituents.

Immediate Demands.

The proposed immediate demands which the Communist Party calls on the socialist representatives to support include: The eight-hour day and higher wage rates for the "Ungestellen" (government employes); construction by the state and city of houses for the workers, to be rented to them without profit, measures for relief of the unemployed this winter, and definite steps to reduce the high prices which are further increasing.

The Communist Party of Germany will direct the sharpest criticism toward every attempt of the socialists to build a block with the bourgeois parties, the statement adds. The program of the Communist Party of Germany, against the Locarno pact and the Dawes plan and similiar moves to enslave the German workers and form an alliance against the workers and peasants government of Soviet Russia, and demanding the workers' control of industry and the government, then summarized.

The results of the elections show that hundreds of thousands of Berlin workers understand that the Communist Party of Germany is the revolutionary fighting organization of the working class. A large number of the Communist voters are not yet members of the party. The Communist party points out to these workers that merely giving their votes is not enuf, and calls on them to enroll in the revolutionary fighting front of the German proletariat to join the Communist Party.

Monarchist Imperialist Ambitions.

The monarchists coalition, which won the last presidential election by promising a firmer stand against allied imperialism, altho their leaders frankly admitted to imperialist ambitions of their own, has now fully exposed itself.

The petty bourgeoisie who were promised they would get back the money they lost in the war, have now again been disillusioned.

While Hindenburg, and other old goosesteppers speak at the graves of kings where the monarchist flag is displayed, the Luther government docilely accepts the Dawes plan yoke and pays the allies by raising the prices charged the workers for food and other necessities.

As Comrade Leon says "Those who voted for Hindenburg because he promised them relief, are now calling for relief from the receiver."

The signing of the Locarno pact has been a heavy blow to the prestige of the monarchists, who by so doing accepted an agreement which more openly enslaved the German masses than the Versailles treaty.

Socialists and Locarno.

But still the socialists refuse to take a firm stand against the right coalition. The socialist leaders announced they would "not accept responsibility for the Locarno pact UNLESS THE NATIONALISTS AGREED TO SHARE IT."

The resignation of the three nationalist cabinet ministers was a gesture to pacify the workers by seeming to oppose the pact, but at the same time to save the Luther government.

In order to make it easier for the Luther government to enforce ratification of the Locarno treaty, it was decided that only a majority, and not a two thirds vote of the reichstag, would be required for ratification.

The swing to the left in the Berlin elections may force the socialists to insist on new elections, and the dissolving of the reichstag, altho so far they have only "threatened" to oppose the Locarno pact if new elections are held.

Employment Service Report Gives Lie to "Prosperity" Fables

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 16.—All is not so rosy in American industry as the organs of the capitalist class like to paint conditions in this country, according to the October report of the United States employment service which shows that many workers in southern cotton mills have been working on reduced schedules. These cotton mills in the south were opened by the textile bosses of the north in an attempt to slash the wages of the northern workers and also to break up whatever union organisation the workers in the south might have.

The report also points out that there are many workers in Pacific coast cities, especially in San Diego, Los Angeles and Seattle, that are tramping the streets with no prospect for a job.

The reports of the local agents of the bureau in various states show a tendency on the part of highly skilled workers, who are thrown into the ranks of the unemployed, to accept work on road building and at common labor in order to make both ends meet.

PURCELL TALK IS PRAISED BY SCHLOSSBERG

Interested in New York City Unity Meeting

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 16. — Carefully marking off on his calendar "November 17, New Star Casino, A. A. Purcell," Joseph Schlossberg, general secretary of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, today expressed his great interest in the Purcell mass meetings arranged for Tuesday, and said that every worker interested in the cause of labor ought to attend.

Altho it may not be possible for him to accept the invitation of the trade union committee to be present at the [illegible] conference of union representatives which will meet in Beethoven Hall on Sunday afternoon, Mr. Schlossberg gave the mass meetings his heartiest support, saying:

World Figure.

"Purcell is today one of the leading figures in the International Trade Union movement, as well as in the British Trade Union movement. He is bringing to us an inspiring message of international working class unity. His address delivered at the A. F. of L. convention aroused widespread interest. It was the first time that members of the American labor movement received such a ringing message from their fellow workers in other countries. Purcell as president of the International Trade Union Federation of Amsterdam is working to bring all trade unions of the world into one body. All workers who are interested in the cause of labor should come to hear Purcell.

"Personally, I have followed the efforts of the British workers for international trade union unity with intense interest. The fact that our British comrades have taken the initiative in this work is to me most encouraging and full of promise of success."

BRITISH LABOR READY TO BOYCOTT MUSSOLINI AS WELCOME TO LONDON

LONDON, Nov. 16. — Premier Mussolini of Italy will come to London for the signing of the Locarno treaties on December 1, the Exchange Telegraph says, denials from Rome notwithstanding.

A tense situation may arise if Mussolini comes to London as it is learned that labor leaders are prepared to boycott him and will not attend any functions where is a guest.

A Topic for Patriotism Day

Today, the second day of "education week," is devoted to patriotism. Simultaneous with the celebration of this day in public schools, there comes the announcement that Federal Judge McClintock, operating in the West Virginia soft coal fields, has declared labor unions illegal. That this ruling has the endorsement of the government is seen from the comment of the Washington Post, edited by the notorious Ned McLean, who was involved in the Fall, Denby, Daugherty, Roxy Stinson series of scandals beginning with Teapot Dome and ending with the whitewashing of the department of justice. The Post interprets the McClintock decision as nullifying the Gompers interpretation of the fourth section of the Clayton Act, which says that the labor of a human being is not an article of commerce, and hence thru combination cannot be considered a monopoly in restraint of trade.

McClintock rules that the Miners' Union has always been an illegal organization and hence government officials can have no dealings with that organization. In order to crush the organization in West Virginia by governmental force, it is necessary for a legal decree to clothe the act of suppression. The McClintock decision means that the government cannot deal with the miners thru negotiations, but should crush them by force.

The implications of such a decision are a solemn thought for Patriotism Day.

It will require a veritable avalanche of sophistry and patriotic buncomb from the pen prostitutes on the capitalist papers, aided by the droolery from the flabby lips of the skypilots to dispel the contempt all intelligent workers hold for the McClintocks, their decisions and the capitalist government at Washington that permits such time-servers and labor-baiters to sit upon the federal bench.

Incidentally this decision is one more argument in favor of a labor party, with spokesmen in congress that can initiate impeachment proceedings against this buzzard judge. Not that his impeachment would be realized, but congress could be used as a forum from which to speak to the masses on the outside and expose the fraudulent character of the United States government.

Boosting the Coolidge Myth

The delectable business of perpetuating the myth that Cal Coolidge is a great man goes merrily no. The latest contribution comes from Mrs. John D. Sherman, president of the federation of women's clubs in Washington. The child culture club of Ogden, Utah, asks the esteemed lady: "Is it disrespectful to refer to the president of the United States as 'Cal'?" She replies:

> "Calling Mr. Coolidge 'Cal' does not indicate rudeness. It suggests a hurry to get acquainted, and is an effectionate term applied in approval of a leader who is himself seemingly a little austere in his forcefulness."

Since Coolidge's woeful display of his ignorance of history at the speech before the congregational church convention in Washington, where he exposed to the world the fact that he did not understand even the rudiments of the principles upon which this government is supposed to rest, the mythmakers have had to work overtime.

Slated to be discarded because he was too colorless for the office even of vice-president, the insipid Down East yankee found himself catapulted into the presidency by the death of Harding. A deliberate campaign to create a giant out of a peewee was launched. Coolidge was so bewildered that he was dumb. This confusion was seized upon by press, pulpit and other means of publicity to create the idea that his silence was the brooding of a gigantic intellect.

For capitalism in its final stage, where governmental officials are mere marionettes, performing every act in response to those who hold the strings, Coolidge is the ideal president. But history will deal rudely with the Coolidge myth. Its final verdict will unquestionably be that his silence denotes plain stupidity, nothing more.

Mexico's Proposed Land Law

A new law, restricting ownership of land by foreigners, passed the house of representatives in Mexico City by an almost unanimous vote. It is now before the senate and will probably pass without any marked alterations. Spokesmen for the measure state that it is government inspired.

The probability is that the Calles government, serving the interests of Standard Oil, is making a move against the British concern known as the Mexican Eagle Oil company.

It is certain that Mexico does not contemplate the shutting out of foreign capital altogether, but the bill is intended simply to restrict the investments of one imperialist group in favor of the other.

Mexico has, since 1910, been kept in a continuous turmoil, with one puppet president replacing another in rapid succession: Madero, Villa, Huerta, Carranza, Obregon, Calles thrown on to the stage of history by either Standard Oil or the Mexican Eagle—playing the game either of the U. S. or Britain—in the world struggle for control of the oil production of the world.

Mexico will not merely restrict, but will prohibit foreign capitalism's ownership of land when the workers, revolutionized by the inrush of foreign capital and the industrialization of large sections of that nation, rise in their might and proclaim their own rule, instead of being used as pawns in the imperialist struggle between Britain and the United States.

As proof that royalty and brains are strangers, consider the prince of Wales. On a recent tour he tried to make speeches, written for him by paid diplomats. When the prince came to the word "nucleus" he pronounced it "knuckles," with the intonation of a coster-monger. There is no member of the Communist Junior leagues that cannot give the prince lessons on the pronounciation of nucleus. We wonder what would happen if he tried to say "shop nuclei"?

Now that Morgan is to float more loans to the Italian government Mussolini may obtain a new lease of life for a short period, until the loans have been "invested" in munitions with which to murder his political enemies.

The Oil Armistice Ends in the Near East - By H. M. Wicks

WHEN England secured control of the Mosul oil district the Standard Oil company raised such a storm of protest that an armistice was signed in the form of a gentlemen's agreement whereby the United States concern was to receive twenty per cent of the future production of those fields.

Now, as the aftermath of Locarno, comes a decisive break between England and this country over the question of Mosul oil. The armistice is ended. The struggle in the Near East between the two leading imperialist nations of the world breaks out anew in a more malignant form. It is not confined to Persia and Turkey alone but involves the other imperialist nations of Europe.

A short time after the close of the Locarno conference there came to light a new alignment on the question of Mosul oil. Britain's mandate is soon to expire so energetic action had to be taken to perpetuate it. The question will come up in the council of the league of nations. France, bound by economic ties to Standard Oil, and receiving a share of Mosul oil, resents this extension of the time period of the mandate.

Before the sixth assembly of the league France had things very much her own way. With the support of other nations she easily dominated. But at the sixth assembly every measure adopted was reached thru a compromise with British interests. This diplomatic triumph of England paved the way for her calling of the Locarno "security" conference.

Called with the two-fold purpose of creating a bloc of European nations against the Soviet Union and at the same time resisting the stranglehold that Wall Street is obtaining upon Europe, the final results, still in the womb of history, will unquestionably reveal the fact that its one achievement was a triumph for England against America.

THE contradictions within European capitalism prevented the realization of the British foreign minister's (Chamberlain's) hopes of preparing a unified struggle against Russia on the basis of the Locarno pacts. The economic dependence of France and Italy upon the United States prevents their uniting with Britain in its second objective. But, in spite of this, upon the basis of the Locarno pacts Britain is moving against the United States.

A few days after the Locarno conference there came to light the fact that England had offered Germany a 20 per cent share in Mosul oil on condition that Germany was to join the league and support England in its demand for a 25-year extension of the mandate. This move was deeply resented by Standard Oil because the Rockefeller interests desire to wrest Mosul oil from Britain and place it in the hands of Turkey. France backs Turkey and Wall Street backs France. When the agreement between Britain and Germany was made public Standard Oil flatly refused to permit Germany to obtain a percentage of its share, on threat of withdrawing from the Mosul oil group. England stood firm for its agreement with Germany. Standard Oil withdrew.

THIS withdrawal of the United States from the Mosul group is a declaration of an oil war against the English concern, the Royal Dutch Shell. Preparations for the war had already been quietly made by Standard Oil buying up large claims under various Turkish concessions in the Mosul fields. This one act brings forcibly upon the stage of history the next stage, and possibly the last, in the world wide conflict between the two imperialist giants, England and America, in their titanic struggle over monopoly of the oil fields of the world. The politics of diplomacy will soon give way to its logical extension, the politics of war.

A PROPER appraisal of this new struggle is impossible without keeping in mind that it is one front, though at present the most important, of the world struggle between Britain and United States for control of the oil supplies of the world. This struggle has been raging since 1919, when Standard Oil set out to conquer new oil fields and found that the Royal Dutch Shell controlled by Britain had been quietly getting control of most of the available supply of the world outside the United States, and a portion inside. Since that time Standard Oil has used every conceivable means within its power to overcome its rival.

In 1922 the United States concern, operating thru a subsidiary, the West Indies Oil company, was on the verge of obtaining a valuable concession from Persia, when the Anglo-Persian Oil company, a British concern stepped in and secured the oil by claiming a prior concession to the property. A slight gain over England was made in the Argentine in South America, but in May of that year, the Royal Dutch Shell secured another advantage over Standard Oil by signing an agreement with Leonid Krassin, acting on the Soviet delegation at the Genoa conference, to the effect that a five-year concession in the Baku oil fields would be granted the Royal Dutch Shell and its subsidiary, the Anglo-Persian concern. Concessions in Russia, tho of temporary advantage to the nation securing them, cannot be viewed in the same light as concessions elsewhere, for the reason that the Soviet Union prevents, thru political control, the securing of a monopoly by any other nation and because, at best, the foreigner acts only as concessionaire and the terms of agreements are always of short duration at the expiration of which the property reverts to the government.

Britain's policy was obviously to throttle operations of Standard Oil in the undeveloped fields of Mesopotamia and also to secure the more favorable concessions from the Soviet government for exploitation. Standard Oil has bitterly opposed the inroads of British oil and has utilized its power in Europe and the Near East to overcome British control.

WHEN Britain tried to decisively subdue Turkey in 1921 by backing Greece against that nation, it was French support with full backing of Standard Oil that smashed the military campaign of the Greeks. Britain and France (with the backing of Standard Oil) were at war and the Turks and Greeks furnished the soldiers to fight the battles.

England's maneuvering within the league of nations that culminated in its securing preponderating influence in the sixth assembly was the belated reply to the defeat of Greece. Also the early expiration of the four year mandate for Irak forced Britain feverishly to strive for advantages over France that would insure a continuation of the Irak mandate.

The best way for Britain to secure a perpetuation of its own mandates against the will of France is to discredit the French administration of mandates. That accounts for the policy of "neutrality" on the part of Britain in the fierce struggle now raging between the Druse tribesmen and Syrians on one side and the French butchers on the other.

The British press is strangely silent on this matter. Some capitalist editorial writers and European political correspondents have evinced amazement that Britain maintains a consistent policy of refraining from severe criticism of France in the Syrian affair. They, in their infantile minds, accustomed to analyzing the words of statesmen instead of the acts of the governments involved, construe this silence to be one of the beneficial results of Locarno. But, while maintaining "neutrality," the English press inadvertently exposes its hand by advising the English authorities in Palestine to avoid anything that could arouse suspicion that the English are behind the revolt of the Druses. This protestation of innocence is very suspicious. We think Britain, like the player queen "protests too much." Last week in the article on "Mandates in Syria and Irak" the present writer said: "While Britain had a hand in the Riff affair there is nothing to indicate that the revolt in Syria was encouraged from that source." We pointed out that Britain had everything to gain from the defeat of France in Syria; the transfer of control of territories so that a Cape to Cairo railway and a further extension to Calcutta, thereby uniting the continent of Africa with that of Asia, can be realized;—also the preparing of a case against France on the grounds that she is incapable of administering the mandate in Syria, so that Britain may get the mandate. We proved that Britain had every incentive to carry on intrigues against France in Syria, but we then had no evidence that she actually had a hand in starting the struggle. We still question Britain having had a great deal to do with it, much as she may have reached toward that end, but the press comments of London, just arrived, are suspiciously colored in regard to the affairs in Syria. There can be such a thing as overdoing the pretext of "neutrality."

IF England really has a hand in the Syrian revolt she is playing a desperate game, amounting almost to insanity, because such elementary forces, once unleashed, cannot be arrested by arbitrary decree. The Syrians and Druses have very definite desires to throw off the shackles of the imperialist power of Europe and they will not be more ready to submit to British rule than they were to French. Also, the success of the Syrian revolt will encourage the movement of national liberation in all the colonial countries and Britain will find herself faced with widespread revolts thruout all of Asia and Africa. But such are the contradictions of imperialism that the competing nations must frequently stake their existence upon the outcome of one maneuver.

When the Mosul oil fields are developed they will need the Syrian port of Beirut as the pipe line terminal. With the French retaining control of the Syrian mandate the French and American oil interests (in reality one) can force Britain to disgorge a large portion of her petroleum products. This creates another incentive for England to control Syria. At the same time this struggle over oil, the withdrawal of Standard Oil from the Mosul group, the bloody struggle in Syria, the strategic position of Beirut as the natural terminal for Mosul oil eloquently explains the American naval maneuvers in that region. It explains why United States battleships traversed the distance of the Mediterranean to Alexandria, from thence to Beirut, on the pretext of desiring to "protect American lives and property." Can anyone doubt for a moment that these warships are there for any purpose other than as a threat to Great Britain?

In Palestine the British forces are mobilized on the border. In the port of Beirut American destroyers menacingly lay in the harbor. Britain is preparing to oust France, the agent of Standard Oil, from Asia Minor. In driving relentlessly toward this object she uses every strategem at her disposal. The attack of Greece against Bulgaria was unquestionably the work of Britain, who wants to strengthen her front against Turkey, with the idea of subduing that nation, securing undisputed control of Mosul, capturing Constantinople and the Golden Horn and at the same time blockading Soviet Russia in the Black Sea. Bulgaria is financed by France. The fact that the league of nations intervened in the Greco-Bulgar conflict does not mean that another effort will not be made to achieve the same goal.

EVENTS transpiring in Asia Minor indicate Britain thus far the winner. But the struggle over oil is directly between the United States and Great Britain, the other nations involved are mere pawns of one or the other of these two powers; their own separate interests are transcended by those of the two giants of imperialism.

The temporary triumph of Britain only makes more imminent the outbreak of a war that will involve the whole world in a devastation many times worse than the past war. The United States is rapidly consolidating its power in Europe. The debt settlement with Italy which makes this government the guarantor of the savage regime of Mussolini, the debt negotiations soon to be resumed with France, the small debtor nations being drawn into the sphere of American banking capital, all menace the power of England.

In the coming world war present indications are that England will have the support of Germany and Greece in Europe and Japan in the Far East, while the United States will have the support of France, Italy and Turkey.

We refer to England alone, instead of the British empire for the reason that Canada will either support the United States or remain neutral. The same applies to Australia. But the penetration of American finance capital in both these British dominions favors their entering the conflict on the side of the United States. Canada is so geographically situated that she could not successfully wage war againts this country. Australia, because of the fear of Japan, will be impelled to unite with the United States in the struggle.

The last world war, a struggle between combinations of imperialist nations, thru reducing to secondary positions all of the principals except two, cleared the ground for the next world war, a struggle between these two colossal powers, wherein all the rest of the world will be pawns of one or the other.

The close of the oil armistice in the Near East revives the war for oil, which inevitably will lead to another world conflagration.

These sinister preparations must be exposed by the revolutionary workers of all countries and every effort directed toward building an invincible proletarian force that will challenge the power of capitalism. Instead of meekly playing the role of human cannon fodder for the imperialist nations we must prepare the working class to hurl from their seats of power the imperialist bandits and in place of the bankrupt league of imperialist nations establish the world wide Soviet republic.

Panama and American Imperialism - - By Manuel Gomez

FOLKS who imagined the occupation of the city of Panama by our "gallant boys in khaki" constituted an invasion were under an illusion. The entire "republic" of Panama is under American rule all the time. The recent episode was merely an application of "martial law" for the purpose of breaking a strike of decidedly un-American Panamans and restoring imperial law and order. The slaughter of five natives was just a "regrettable incident."

Readers of The DAILY WORKER may be interested to know what the republic of Panama looks like now that it is back to normal.

IN the first place there is the strip of Panama territory known as the Canal Zone, ten miles wide, running straight across the middle of the country and competely dominating it. Contrary to popular belief, the Canal Zone is not legally a possession of the United States but is part of the "republic" of Panama. Certain it is, that in 1904, with the concurrence of Roosevelt's "big stick" and the United States navy, the zone was "leased" to the U. S. in perpectuity. But Panama has never received a single penny of rental. The rent money is stored up in a Wall Stret bank to cover interest payments on the 30-year 5½ per cent loan that American bankers forced upon the protesting "republic." Similarly with the $10,000,000 that the U. S. was supposed to have paid over to Panama in return for the concession to build and operate the Panama canal. This money is invested in New York state bonds; the Panamans can neither change the investment, nor touch the principle or the interest. The entire net income of this "constitutional fund," as it is called, is pledged to cover interest payments on another Wall Street loan—the 5 per cent serials of 1915.

However that may be, an American governor runs the canal zone as United States territory—with a 100 per cent American military administration, an American post office, American fortifications, and American soldiers and marines. A Panaman worker can not even get a job in the Canal Zone, except at unskilled manual labor and at the very lowest rate of pay.

OF course, the soldiers and marines do not stay in the Canal Zone. They overrun the rest of the "republic" whenever the Canal Zone administration thinks it advisable. That is in accordance with the treaty of 1903 whereby Panama was forced to recognize our "special rights" as "the guarantors of Panaman independence."

It was with reason that Roosevelt called the treaty of 1903 "a historic stage in the development of the Monroe Doctrine."

Let us consider the territory of Panama (exclusive of the Canal Zone) under the present conditions of peace and normalcy. Customs, finances and police are under the direction of Americans. The Panama railway is owned by the United States government. Revenues from the liquor excise are pledged against interest payments on the 8 per cent "national defense loan" of 1921. (N. B.—Any attempt to institute prohibtion in Panama, in accordance with Yankee precedent, would no doubt mean another hurried military invasion from the canal zone.)

The total amount of private property in the "republic" of Panama was officially estimated about two years ago at $33,175,501. Of this, $5,000,000 or more belongs to the United Fruit company, which has its own railways, lands and equipments. By arrangement with the dummy Panama government, the Goodyear Rubber company has exclusive warehouse facilities for rubber in Panaman ports. The American Foreign Banking corporation and the International Banking corporation (both controlled by the Wall Street money trust) have their branches in the "republic" and dominate the movement of financial capital there. Two-thirds of all the capital invested in Panama is American capital.

AMERICAN "big business" has thus an enormous stake in the little pseudo-republic where the Panama hats come from. Has not this at least a little to do with the determination of the U. S. government to guarantee Panaman independence so religiously, even from the Panamans themselves? Is not American imperialism simply a phase of the development of American capitalism toward the monopoly of whatever sections of the earth it can lay its hands on?

I have not touched at all the question of imports and exports between Panama and the United States, but when that is taken into consideration as well as the factors mentioned above, it will be plain that Panama has no more independence economically than she has politically. Like other states of the Central American and Caribbean region, she has been impressed into the American economic system, dominated by the lords of Wall Street, and is as truly a part of it as Illinois or California. With the difference, however, that she is one of the colonial divisions of the system —that she is a subject nation, exploited under imperialist slavery, and her sons and daughters are obliged to toil under the most abominable conditions to produce super-profits for the imperialists. It is the super-profits from subject nations like Panama that make it possible for American capitalism to continue its exploitation and pauperization of the American working class. For this reason, if for no other, every class conscious worker in America, must be a supporter of the growing Panaman movement for freedom from American rule.

BUT it would be extremely superficial to assume that American financial interests in Panama itself furnish the only, or even the main reason for the enslavement of this little dependency of American imperialism. Panama must be looked at in connection, first and foremost, with the spread of American imperialism thruout Latin-America, and secondly, with the development of American imperialism over all the world. The Panama canal provides the key to the situation.

The project of the canal was what inspired the original robbery of Panama from Colombia in the imitation revolution staged in 1903. The project was an old one, but it did not acquire irresistible momentum until a certain period had been reached in the economic and political development of the United States.

To say that the canal was wanted for trading purposes is to repeat an obvious truth, without at the same time throwing any real light upon the question. The fact remains that it was only after America's entrance on the world political stage that things began actually to happen in Panama. After the war with Spain, the American empire included Hawaii, Samoa and the Philippines, Porto Rico in the Caribbean and Cuba, a protectorate, close at hand. In the words of President McKinley, the building of the canal was intended to afford "that intimate and ready intercommunication between our eastern and western seaboards demanded by the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands and the prospective expansion of our influence and commerce in the Pacific."

TODAY the United States is an empire stretching out everywhere—in the Atlantic as well as in the Pacific; in Europe, Latin-America and the Far East. Imperialism implies an industrial method of international seizure and monopoly; it is therefore, a form of business in which big guns are required no less than salesmen and credit men—to protect and extend the monopolized areas. Imperialism and war are inseparable and there are millions of workers who can be use as cannon fodder. The various units of the American empire have been pieced together with that idea in mind.

Latin-America is the economic base of American imperialism, and the Panama canal is its central strategic base.

The entire Caribbean and Central American region has its strategic as well as economic importance for American imperialism. A series of naval bases beginning with Key West, Florida, and including Guantanamo Bay (at the southwest of Cuba), Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, give the United States absolute control of the Caribbean. The treaty of 1907 with Santo Domingo gives the U. S. the right to build a naval base at Samana Bay; the treaty of 1915 with Haiti gives her the same right to the Mole of St. Nicholas; and the Bryan-Chamorro treaty of 1916, permits her to build naval bases in the Bay of Fonseca and the Corn Islands off Nicaragua.

It is significant that in the not wholly fantastic volume recently published under the title of "The Great Pacific War; A History of the American-Japanese Campaign of 1931-33," the starting point of the war is connected with the blowing up of a Japanese steamer in the Panama canal and the consequent suspension of communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific. The author, H. C. Bywater, is a leading British naval authority, and he knows whereof he speaks.

NOT without reason are the American military forces in Panama concentrated in the Canal Zone.

American imperialism will cling to the "republic" of Panama in the face of everything. There is not another of her possessions that she would not give up before this. She guards jealously against the slightest unsettling influence on the peninsula. Anti-capitalist agitation that tends to destroy the present balance of forces, strikes of ragged and hungry laborers against extortionate rents, any working class or peasant disturbance at all—will be put down as callously as Great Britain would put down a similar disturbance at Suez.

Panama is the pivotal point of the entire structure of American imperialism outside of the United States. In the face of this, what mean the protests of the little people of Panama who only want freedom?

We Correct An Error.

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 16.—To the Editor of The DAILY WORKER: One of The DAILY WORKER'S New York correspondents was seriously misinformed in a report published in the New York edition of The DAILY WORKER of Friday last, Nov. 13, to the effect that the Norwegian steamer Start had been tied up at Pier No. 3, army base, South Brooklyn, for two days by a strike for a wage increase under the direction of the International Seamen's Union.

According to correcting reports just received, there is no foundation for the above report given to our correspondent. Two port delegates of the I. W. W. Marine Transport Workers' Industrial Union No. 510, Bryan and Peterson, bring the word personally thru the former to The DAILY WORKER New York office that the crew of this ship, the Start, positively is 100 per cent I. W. W., that these two delegates themselves stamped up the members of the crew while in port, that there was no demand for an increase of wages or other demands and no trouble of any description while the ship was in port and that the ship sailed on Nov. 12.

The erroneous report was particularly obnoxious to the wobblies at this time, because during their recent strike in support of the international strike of seamen, the officials of the I. S. U. at all the ports of the country were reported to have given the shipping masters and the crimps active co-operation in fighting the strike and the wobblies have been more active than ever in lining up sailors in the New York port, since the recent strike was transferred to the job.

Fraternally,
H. R. Richards.

UNION HEADS LET MAINTENANCE MEN WORK IN MINES DESPITE STRIKE OF ANTHRACITE MINERS

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

(Article V.)

MAHANOY CITY, Pa., Nov. 17.—That the maintenance men are driving new rock tunnels, putting in new timbering, conducting exploration work and in general working as if no strike was in force in many mines in this section, is the charge made by striking miners. They claim that it is the policy of the union officials to give permits for as many men as the companies require as long as no coal is actually hoisted.

This has a demoralizing effect on the strikers and as the evil increases the complaints of the rank and file become more bitter but no open struggle over this issue has taken place as yet in the local unions.

Anti-Foreign Feeling.

The dissension created in the ranks of the strikers by this policy is aggravated by the fact that most of the maintenance men—engineers, oilers, electricians, carpenters, blacksmiths, machinists, etc.—belong to what is called the "American element," that is they are either of American, Irish or Pennsylvania Dutch stock while the bulk of the strikers are of Latin, Polish, or Slavic descent. The gap between the English speaking and foreign speaking groups is widened and a rift made in the union which is bound to weaken it seriously if this policy is continued.

The miners are completely in the dark as to the line of strategy, if any exists—which their officials are following. They read eagerly every word in the capitalist press which has to do with the strike, and this, except for the Communist papers which circulate here in various languages, is their sole source of information.

Miners Want Information.

The thirst of the strikers for information has been mentioned in a previous article but it was more evident than ever before while the recent negotiations between Governor Pinchot, President Lewis and Inglis, chairman of the operators' committee, were in progress. The majority of the miners have a mistaken belief that Pinchot can and will do something for them. They counted a good deal on the results of the recent conferences and when the announcement came that the operators had shown no desire to settle there was considerable disappointment. Only among the more conscious elements was there any criticism of Lewis for his right-about face in the question of arbitration. Speaking to a committee of businessmen in the Altamont Hotel, Hazleton, on August 25, Lewis stated that the United Mine Workers would not arbitrate "how much shall a man receive who is doomed to die, how much he shall make before his back is broken or his eyes shot out or the flesh burned from his bones."

Lewis Doublecrosses Miners.

The strike has been on now for two and one-half months, the number of

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

LAST Sunday one of the capitalist papers devoted a few pages to rotogravure pictures of present and past events. We see the present leaders of England, France, Belgium, Germany and Italy signing the Locarno "peace" pact. It was to prevent war, you know. Well, before the "ink with which it was writ was dry" the Greeks and Bulgarians shot it full of holes and a few days afterwards France, leading factor in putting the pact across, slaughtered several thousand Syrians, men, women and children—in the interests of peace, of course.

WHAT we are driving at just now, is not the hypocrisy of those human birds of prey making peace gestures. Another picture on another page shows German representatives a few years ago listening to Clemenceau reading the terms of the treaty of Versailles which the Germans swallow without butter. Clemenceau's name is rarely mentioned any more. We hardly ever hear the Germans referred to as "Huns." Germany, the land of militarism and Hohenzollerns is now the petted child of Wall Street and to a lesser degree of Threadneedle Street, and France, "glorious France" of 1917, is treated like a dead beat by Washington and London in 1925.

THIS is not an unusual situation in world politics. Nothing is so constant as change, yet change, which is ever present, is seen only by the few. A few years ago, a moving picture optient who did not hiss a picture of Von Hindenburg or applaud the imbecile countenance of King George was liable to find himself san tonsils if not worse, by a patriotic citizenry. But eight years afterwards we find German representatives wined and dined by our rulers and General Dawes, who played a prominent part in punishing the kaiser by proxy—that is killing several hundred thousand German workers in order to make the kaiser sore—going over to Germany and arranging German finances so that the German workers can pay the reparations the allies imposed on their foes as the price of defeat.

MEANWHILE, the kaiser had the pleasure of staging another legal marriage, writing a book, in which he dispassionately dwelt on the merits of the respective armies which participated in the great slaughter and no doubt praised the American troops for the valor they displayed in annihilating his own subjects. I would like to know the reaction of a wrecked American soldier to those pictures! In one of the few hospitals that were built from the money appropriated by congress for that purpose (most of the money found its way into the pockets of Col. Forbes of immortal memory, still at large by the way)

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION PLANS AID TO BREAK COAL STRIKE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—With the anthracite strike in its twelfth week, the interstate commerce commission announced today it would resume its inquiry into the "reasonableness" of freight rates on bituminous and semi-bituminous from West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania fields to middle Atlantic and New England destinations on November 19. Commissioner John B. Campbell will conduct the investigation, which was begun in New York last week.

NORWEGIAN LABOR DELEGATION LAUDS SOVIET RUSSIA'S PROGRESS

MOSCOW, (By Mail.)—Nov. 17.—On the basis of their experiences up to the present in Soviet Russia, the Norwegian workers' delegates have unanimously adopted a declaration in which they point out with satisfaction that they have had absolute freedom in the choice of districts, factories, etc., to be visited and a comradely support from the Soviet trade unions in their studies. The allegation that the delegation has no freedom of movement in Soviet Russia is stigmatized as a direct lie. Those members of the delegation who visited Russia in earlier times declare that tremendous economic and cultural progress has been made in the Soviet Union. The declaration stresses in particular the the great political activity and the intensity devoted by the Russian working class to cultural activities. According to the route mapped out by themselves, the delegates will go to Rostov on the Don, then to Tiflis and Baku. After this they will spend ten days in Moscow to study the construction and activity of the labor unions.

Furriers For Recognition of Soviets, Amalgamation

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—The left wing resolutions calling for the recognition of the Union of Soviet Republics, amalgamation and organization of the unorganized were passed at the Furriers' convention in session here. The resolution introduced by the left wing against class collaboration and endorsing a program for workers' education along class lines similar to that in the Workers' School in New York and Chicago was referred to the incoming general executive board.

Despite the attempt of Stetsky, one of the vice-presidents of the union and a lieutenant of President Morris Kaufman, to eliminate the phrase in the resolution on the recognition of Soviet Russia, which declares that Russia has defeated her enemies both inside and outside the country as a slur on the counter-revolutionary socialists, the resolution was passed without changes amid the applause of the left wing delegates.

Delegate Benjamin Gold asked Vice-President Stetsky what kind of socialists could the Russian type be if they employed the use of armed struggle against the Soviets.

Delegate Schactman, a progressive, asked Stetsky where he drew the line between the counter-revolutionary socialists and Koltchak.

The Kaufman machine did not dare to oppose the resolution on amalgamation which calls upon the American Federation of Labor to call conferences to promote the establishment of one union in each industry and another resolution which was introduced calling upon the incoming general executive board to take concrete steps for amalgamation in the needle trades was also unanimously adopted.

When the resolution to organize the unorganized was introduced by the resolutions committee, carrying the concrete proposal of levying a $5 assessment on the membership of the union to build an organization campaign fund, the machine attempted to befuddle the left wing by saying that the membership was opposed to assessments, etc. The machine feared to attack the resolution itself but tried to defeat it by raising the false issue of the membership opposing assessments.

Delegate Joe Cohen of the progressives flayed the machine declaring "you sit pot-bellied and smirk. Regarding rank and file opposition, the members will support genuine moves

MONOPOLY AND SCABBERY AIM OF "SURVEY"

Chicago Exploiters in Open Shop Drive

The association of commerce of the city of Chicago is conducting what it calls a "five day inventory" of the city's resources as a means of celebrating the twenty-first anniversary "the coming of age" of the association. In reams of screaming publicity this aggregation of plunderers solemnly informed the denizens of this community and the inhabitants of the Chicago hinterland that the inventory would be based upon "truth and accuracy."

At the opening session yesterday at the Hotel LaSalle the real motive behind the so-called inventory was revealed when Mr. Harry A. Wheeler of the Union Trust company addressed the members and visitors present. He reiterated the usual Chicago demand for a waterway to the gulf of Mexico and another from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic ocean as a means of aiding the transportation of the flood of commodities that pass thru the city.

Create Monopolies.

In addition to the formal advocacy of this transportation advantage to commerce, Mr. Wheeler revealed the motive behind the five day's confab. He advocated centralization of industries. "The day has gone," said Wheeler, "when we want to get as far away as possible from our competitor. We must concentrate."

Mr. Wheeler's connection with the Union Trust banking concern exposes the fine hand of bank capital endeavoring to control the Chicago industries by an elaborate plan of merging the kindred industries under one head.

Not merely will a drive be launched to consolidate industries under control of the large Chicago banks, but the small bankers in the outlying communities are to be brought "closer" toward the Chicago combines. LaSalle street strives to outdo Wall Street. Mr. George M. Reynolds, chairman of the board of the Continental and Commercial Bank, advocated bringing the banks of the Mississippi valley closer to the Chicago institutions and predicted a future population of from eight to ten millions for Chicago.

In fact Chicago "boosters" hope to outrival New York, after completion of their dream of a waterway thru the St. Lawrence to the Atlantic.

Open Shop Apostles.

Those prominent at the conference were the most notorious scab shop advocates of the city of Chicago. The complexion of the assemblage indicates a new open shop assault upon the workers of the city of Chicago before the week is over. It is known that several advocates of scabbery in industry are to discuss the advantages of Landis awards such as created havoc in the building trades in 1922, and also the general crushing of the working class in Chicago.

Chicago labor is taking no interest in the affair and is doing nothing to expose and counteract this new menace that is organized under the cloak of a celebration of the coming of age of the association of commerce. Militants in the labor unions will launch

League of Nations Out for Another Conference on Arms "Limitations"

GENEVA, Nov. 17.—The league of nations has made another move toward an arms conference. The league secretariat has sent invitations to representatives of England, France, Italy, Japan, Spain, Belgium, Brazil, Uruguay, Sweden and Czecho-Slovakia to meet in Geneva Dec. 3, to make a preliminary study of the situation and to report to the league regarding a disarmament conference.

AUTO WORKERS' UNION OF N. Y. IN BIG DRIVE

Also Fight Wage Cuts and for Conditions

(By Worker Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—Election of new officers for Local No. 49, United Automobile, Aircraft and Vehicle Workers of America will take place Nov. 19. All members should turn out to the election 100 per cent in order to elect such a staff of officers as is most capable to carry on a campaign against wage cuts for the coming year, when wage scales of the present working agreements expire.

This local has recently elected a new wage scale committee to answer the attempted wage cuts of the Coach and Motor Manufacturers' Association of New York.

List of Candidates.

Following is the list of officers to be voted on: For president, De Frank (machinist); vice-president, Max Smith (metal worker); recording secretary, W. M. Hanlon (trimmer); secretary-treasurer, Karl Schneider (blacksmith) or Joe O'Mara (painter); sergean-at-arms, Lois Salak; parliamentarian, James Powers or Fay Bradt; local organizers (two to be elected) W. Greenberg, Joe Madine, Edward Krulich, Chas. Mohl; trustee, Frank Potenz; members of the executive board (five to be elected) Arthur Mac, Harry Spunt, Chas. Bottinger, Frank Mazanek, John Oswald, Paul Reines.

Voting will begin at 7 o'clock.

Following is the open letter that Local No. 49 has written to all automobile workers of greater New York, as well as other automobile industrial centers:

Wages Determine Life.

"Read this over carefully as it means much to you. The time may come and come soon when you will be glad you received this call for action and acted upon it. The big thing in life that you are interested in is work and wages and good working conditions. The amount of wages you receive determines your standard of living. The number of hours that you work determine how yourself and your family spend their leisure.

"Are you working more hours than you should work? Are you receiving the wages you should have? And are you satisfied with the treatment that you are getting from the bosses and their hirelings: foremen and superintendents? If you are not, why not make an attempt to find some

SYRIANS AND DRUSE SMASH FRENCH LINES

Mercenary Christians Aid Butchers

LONDON, Nov. 17. — British troops, according to a Jerusalem dispatch to the Daily News, have been ordered to check the Druse invasion on the eastern side of the river Jordan. This dispatch is significant inasmuch as it reveals a move on the part of Britain to take a hand in the affair preparatory to charging in the league of nations council that France cannot efficiently administer the league mandate in that territory. This will pave the way for Britain to obtain the privilege of administering the mandate as a means of consolidating its oil interests.

CRIES OF 'MUSSOLINI' GREET WM. JOYNSON HICKS AS HE RISES TO SPEAK; BALDWIN IS HECKLED

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Communism loomed large at the very opening moment of the house of commons yesterday, when that body convened for the autumn term after a three months' recess. Thirty-six questions were put and answered in twenty minutes. The only excitement of the session, but quite enough to last for some time, came when Sir William Joynson Hicks rose to reply to a question whether more stringent laws to deal with Communists would be enacted. Ironical cheers and contemptuous cries of "Mussolini" were hurled at him from the labor benches.

Questions were fired at him in such rapid succession from the labor benches and the demonstration against him was so violent that he was staggered and could only meekly mutter: "The question is under consideration." This is the usual parliamentary evasion of cabinet members when they are hard pressed for an answer to their interrogators.

Turn on Baldwin.

The laborites were not satisfied with the evasion of Hicks so they turned on Premier Baldwin, demanding that he state the reasons for the persecution of the Communists and the governmental support of the fascist groups that are arising in England. Under the pressure of ques- Baldwin promised to make a statement tomorrow on the government's stand on the questions involved in the Communist controversy and the alleged encouragement of the fascisti groups being organized.

The labor party is holding a special meeting tonight to discuss plans for moving a bill of censure against the government of Baldwin for his anti-racial measures.

"Cadaver" Question Rises.

The government was also forced to take cognizance of the recent speech of Gen. Chartiers, former head of the army intelligence departmnt of Britain, who told the falsifying photographs to create the notion among Allied nations and the Chinese that Germans were boiling in vats the bodies of their dead in order to extract grease for munitions and for other purposes. Chartiers admitted that all this was based upon a series of lies and forgeries and seemed to think it a great joke.

While preparing for war against France, America and other nations threatening its supremacy, Britain can ill afford to have such damning stories of its methods of lying to its own people revealed. Not that they are worse than any other nation uses, but simply because such exposures are dangerous at this time.

SCOTLAND YARD HAS HARD TIME IN BOW STREET

British Communists Rap Frame-up Attempts

(Special to The Daily Worker)

(Picture on Page Six).

LONDON, Nov. 17.—The prosecution is still presenting evidence in the case against the twelve members of the Communist Party and the Young Communist League of Great Britain. Leaflet after leaflet is being read into the record in order to prove that the Communists are guilty of seditious conspiracy.

Dicks Lose "Memories."

The witnesses for the prosecution, who are Scotland Yard detectives, have wonderful memories when they are being examined by the attorney for the crown, but when the attorney for some of the members of the defense and members of the defense acting as their own attorneys question them, they conveniently "forget" about their activities.

Attempt to Attack R. I. L. U.

Scotland Yard operatives attempted to connect up the acitvities of the Red International of Labor Unions in England with the Communist Party by reading a copy of a letter, purported to have been seized during the raid on the Communist Party headquarters at 16 North King St., Covent Garden, W. C., and which was supposed to have been sent to Losovsky and the secretary of the Mid-European

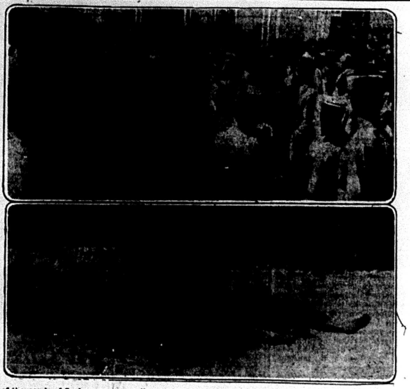
"DOWN WITH FRENCH IMPERIALISM!"



Hundreds of thousands of Syrians are responding to the call "Down with French Imperialism!" and "An Independent Syria!" since the French bombarded Damascus. All religious sects are forgetting their differences and the natives are preparing to drive France out of Syria, which was mandated to her by the league of nations. The upper picture shows angry natives discussing the outrages the French have committed on their people in Damascus. You will note armed French soldiers strolling about to prevent demonstrations. Below, three of the thousands of Syrians that were killed when the French troops bombarded the Moslem quarter of Damascus.

minister of England fraternizes with the Horthy hangmen. Altho MacDonald had intended to stay but two days with his ilk here, the social-democrats, he was able to extend his time so as to visit Bethlen, Horthy's prime minister and participate in an official dinner.

By this action the irresponsibility and malice of which can hardly be condemned too much, MacDonald has weakened and undermined the great protest action of the international working class which threatened to drown the whole Bethlen-Horthy government in a flood of indignation. At a time when all decent revolutionary workers consider the boycott of Hungary, the leader of the most prominent European labor party goes to Budapest where he has nothing to do, exchanges polite phrases with the Hungarian rulers and thus gives them a shameful hint that the protest of the labor organizations of all countries—amongst them that of the British labor party—should not be taken seriously.

The British workers should not tolerate any more without resistance this shameful attitude of their "leader" and when they rise in protest against the hangmen of Hungary, they must also protest against the accomplices of these hangmen, their former prime minister who has apparently lost the last remnants of feelings for proletarian solidarity.

Booze War Rages.

While the conference, or "survey," is being conducted the booze war between various bands of bootleggers protected by various agencies of the city, state and federal governments, goes merrily on, with a killing or two a day. In the fashionable hotels the nabobs flit from one drunken debauch to another, with an occasional suicide of some society lady suffering from a sentimental jag. Girls slave in the department stores of Marshall-Field, Carson-Pirie-Scott and other places slave for the most shameful stipends that cannot possibly keep them alive. In factories children slave from early in the morning until late at night and the sweat-shop thrives in the miserable hovels called homes for workers, where children of six, seven and eight years of age sew long hours beneath the faint rays of oil lamps and gas jets.

Following the fake survey of the bankers and manufacturers organized labor should conduct a real survey of the condition of the proletarian masses in this city and proceed to launch a drive against those parasites who distill the blood of men, women and children into profits.

solution in order to overcome this condition?

"Why are your conditions not better? Let's see. You know that the organized workers are working 44 hours a week, and in many places less than that. In addition, they receive time and a half wages for overtime, with double pay Saturday afternoons, Sundays and holidays. Besides, organized workers have established a minimum wage scale. If you are not enjoying the above conditions, there is a reason. The reason is that you are unorganized.

"On every side, you have the power of organization before you. The workers who are organized have the best conditions and of course you know it. The bosses have their associations to better their own conditions and profits. The longer hours you work and the less wages you receive, the more the employer profits, without regards to you, whether you make a bare existence or not.

Are You Working?

"Just a word more. No matter if you feel that you have not used the best judgment in the past in your attitude toward the union, whether as a union man you neglected your duty toward organization, or whether you never belonged to a union at all. That is not important. If you are still engaged in the auto industry, your place is to line up with the members of your union for improved conditions. What do you think?"

Scotland Yard Has Hard Time in War on British Communists

bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions at Berlin, in which the British party was asking for funds to carry on the work of the R. I. L. U. in England. Upon cross-examination, Sergeant Henshaw, who was in charge of the raiders, attempted to deny that he planted the letter of the R. I. L. U. in the Communist Party headquarters and was forced to admit that he had found no other R. I. L. U. correspondence in the headquarters.

After Printshop.

The prosecution then spent some time reading into the evidence bills from the printers and receipts for payments of dues and literature, and tried to establish that the Centro-Press, Limited, was owned by the Communist Party.

Did Not Know of Fascists.

Laughter was produced in the Bow street court room when the defense asked one of the Scotland Yard detectives whether he saw any members of the British fascists break the windows of the Communist Party headquarters, since the detective boastfully described how he had kept the Communist Party headquarters "under surveillance," and why he did not arrest these fascists for destruction of property. The detective began to feel uneasy and denied that he had seen members of the fascists near the building and denied that he knew of their existence in England and that they had held an open parade thru the streets of London in which they carried firearms demonstrating against the Communists.

Another detective who attempted to give a garbled account of a speech made by a number of the leaders of the British Communist Party was forced to admit that he was found that his stenographic notes had been hiding under the platform of the Rehearsal Theater at Bedford street and taken away and that he was now giving an account of the speech from memory and not from notes as the crown attorney tried to make it appear.

Scotland Yard Terrorizes Workers.

Sergeant Kitchener, another Scotland Yard dick, on cross-examination felt as tho he had been out on a bed of hot needles when William Charles Rust, one of the defendants, asked him whether it was not true that Scotland Yard dicks had visited homes of correspondents of the Workers Weekly and terrorized these contributors to the paper so that many of the correspondents stopped writing for the Communist organ.

During the cross-examination of this witness the Communists brought out that the British army became a standing army as a result of the growth of British capitalism and that tho the soldiers were recruited from the working class, the officers were recruited from the upper strata in society and that the function of the army was to crush strikes and other demonstrations on the part of workers.

Unions Protest Against Trial.

Unions thruout England are sending in protests daily to the British government heads demanding the immediate release of the arrested Communists and protesting their trial under the ancient sedition laws.

The International Class War Prisoners' Aid, British section, with George Lansbury as its treasurer, is raising funds to carry on the legal battle for the arrested Communists.

the rebel Druses and Syrians. In a number of places sudden assaults were made upon the rebel forces.

The French murderers and the christian recruits have been terrorizing Lebanon since the invasion of that territory by the rebels and the winning of large numbers of the native population, but in the fighting yesterday the combined forces of the French and christian mercenaries suffered complete route with every village and town under their control falling into rebel hands.

Smash French Attack.

In face of a terrific sweep of machine gun fire from the French the rebels steadily advanced and in spite of a loss of three hundred dead and many wounded captured the town of Merjayoun and expelled the French forces, and also routed a buzzards' nest controlled by American presbyterian missions.

French reports here are to the effect that overwhelming numbers forced them to retire. This indicates new recruits to the ranks of the rebels. Information also reaching Beirut describes big movements of Arabians toward Syria, in order to join in the fight against France.

Appeal to League.

Deeply resenting the butchery of France there is arising from the Syrian natives a demand that the league of nations withdraw the French mandate. British interests are taking advantage of this sentiment and have bribed a group of Syrian politicians to press the demand for revocation by the league. These people, however, do not demand freedom from all mandates of the league but simply from French administration of the mandate, which plays into the hands of Britain who wants the mandate, for herself in order to obtain a natural outlet for Mosul oil.

The enlightened natives oppose both France and Britain and correctly view the league of nations as a predatory combination of imperialist powers preying upon the colonial peoples.

I. W. W. HEARS MESSAGE ON PROFINTERN

International Is Given Hearing at Meet

The 17th general convention of the Industrial Workers of the World now in session took up the question Tuesday of international relations. The proposal brot up Monday to send a delegate to the Berlin anarchist international was turned down and after Harrison George, who presented credentials from the Red International of Labor Unions was granted the floor for 15 minutes to speak in the name of the R. I. L. U. executive on the question of affiliation, took similar action toward the R. I. L. U. and asserted by resolution that the scattered administrations in other lands should be integrated as an international organization in itself.

Wants Definite Stand.

Delegate Mincoff moved that the R. I. L. U. representative be given the floor for 15 minutes, explaining that everywhere the membership asks—"Where do we stand on international affiliation?" It had to be settled. If the convention did not grant a hearing, all would say they were afraid to discuss policy.

His motion was carried eight to four, those voting for it being Foster, Graham, Olson, Kiviniemi, Wagner, Mincoff, Schultes and Francezon. The floor being open, Harrison George spoke for the time allotted, covering all points thoroly in a speech which will be published in Saturday's magazine section of The DAILY WORKER.

Approves "Dictators."

Mincoff argued against sending a delegate to the next R. I. L. U. congress. He dwelt at length and in detail with his charge of "Moscow dictatorship." The I. W. W. could not affiliate to the R. I. L. U., he said, because of its opposition to this principle and to what he alleged to be the R. I. L. U. belief in "politics." The I. W. W. was closer to Berlin, he held, and to the anarchists who did not dictate and who were opposed to all governments, even a workers government.

Roger Francezon of the Marine Transport Workers reminded his fellows that international relations is a deeper question than some of them thot. Conditions force closer relations. But he saw "menace" if world unity was brot about by "politicians" who might use the working class as stepping stones. To what, he did not say. The big job is to organize.

Must Disregard Political Difference.

When that is done, then the subject could be talked about. But he warned that whenever workers are in a fight anywhere in the world, the I. W. W. must support them and co-operate with their political views.

Delegates Elsasser and O'Connor spoke, without adding much light to the argument, and the motion, which was to abide by the policy set by the 1922 convention carried unanimously. This is, briefly, that the I. W. W. recognizes the need of keeping in touch with world labor to lay a basis for world wide organization, but that no delegates be sent to the R. I. L. U. Meanwhile, however, the G. E. B. is instructed to maintain friendly correspondence to the end of world solidarity and organization.

Wants Something Definite.

Mincoff then introduced a resolution to instruct the G. E. B. to plan for a world conference of I. W. W. branches and administrations in foreign lands to integrate the I. W. W. as an international distinct from all others. His argument was that the fact of I. W. W. administration affiliating, as in Chile, to the Berlin anarchist group, showed we had no definite organization. The I. W. W. was nowhere between Berlin, Moscow and Amsterdam. It must take a stand. As a whole it then might affiliate where it chose, or remain in opposition to all.

Some were doubtful at first. Elsasser speaking for the present status. O'Connor alleged that the M. T. W. had liquidated the British administration by remitting from its English branches to New York headquarters instead of to the British administration. This was denied. But the motion of Mincoff passed without opposition.

The convention earlier voted against permission for the industrial unions to departmentalize themselves, some holding such provision as being already in the constitution.

Boost Alimony Rate.

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 17—Col. William Mitchell, before court-martial in Washington, must pay $2,000 more annually for the support of his three children by his first wife.

Burglars Are Back.

Soviet Rule Liquidates Capitalism's Brutalities Against the Children

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the Chicago Tribune tries to find comfort for the capitalist system it supports, from a news cable by Walter Duranty, Moscow correspondent of the New York Times telling about the wayward children of Moscow. Thus the Tribune reaches the conclusion that:

> "Civilization rests on its care of childhood. No civilized state would or could allow dependent childhood to revert to savagery and worse in its streets."

• • • •

No Communist, especially the Communists of the Soviet Union, will deny that the Workers' Republic has a child problem on its hands. This has been repeatedly pointed out in The DAILY WORKER, with the solutions offered for successfully meeting this problem.

The Tribune's editorial will not admit that it has a child problem under capitalism. If it did, according to the reasoning of its own editorial, it would be compelled to confess that capitalist society is unstable to that extent.

The unprincipled Tribune also builds its argument by claiming that Russia's child problem has grown up under Soviet rule, charging it is "indicative of the Soviet lapse from civilization." This, of course, is the sheerest sophistry.

Russia's child problem is an inheritance from the black days of czarism. It was made acute by the world imperialist war, when millions of fathers, bread winners, were slaughtered on the battlefields. It was augmented when the United States, egged on by this very same Tribune, joined all the other great capitalist nations, and made war upon Soviet rule in an effort to overthrow it, resulting in the devastation of great areas of the Russian nation, the crippling of its industries, the destruction of its agriculture and the murder of new thousands of fathers and mothers, not to mention the children. It grew bigger when crippled Russia was unable to meet successfully, as it will in the future, the ravages of famine like that of 1921, that continued the destruction of family life in spite of every contrary effort by the Soviet state.

But the problem is being met. Orphaned children are being taken care of in homes specially prepared for them; usually the palaces and country estates of the dukes and princes that are gone. Here they are educated and prepared for the life ahead; not herded as undesirable outcasts in asylums no better than capitalism's prisons. At this moment a special drive is being made to find homes for orphaned children among the peasants, enjoying the New Day that is coming to them thru the development of agriculture along modern lines instituted and encouraged by the Soviet state. Bolshevism builds its future on the winning of the children. The care of the children, the liquidation of all the capitalist barbarities toward children, including taking them out of the factories and sending them to school, this is the first responsibility of Bolshevist rule. All unprejudiced observers, non-Communists, even some enemies of Soviet rule, admit that the problem is being solved.

• • • •

But in the United States the problem grows worse. The number of children sent into industry grows, resulting in men and women stunted mentally, boys and girls robbed of their childhood, life's energy sapped out of them before they reach maturity, and when they come in conflict with the capitalist law, thru the commission of some crime, labelled as "morons" and "degenerates." Such conditions produce the Martin Durkins, illiterate and savage, hunted like beasts in the jungles of the great American cities with police order of "shoot them on sight." The war records, with their examinations of the millions called to arms, give conclusive testimony that American capitalism has produced a breed of subnormal human beings.

The great American capitalist crime of more than 1,000,000 children under 16 years of age in industry rocks the foundations of the whole profit social structure in the United States.

• • • •

It is easy to agree with the Tribune that, "Civilization rests on its care of childhood." By that test the "civilization" that has come into existence under capitalism rushes toward its merited destruction. The new civilization that will evolve under Communism will mark a higher stage of human development.

Maintenance Men Still at Work

maintenance men working is larger than it was the first day of the strike, the mines are in better shape now than they were then and, according to all reports, Lewis was willing to allow Pinchot to call together an arbitration commission but the operators were not.

It is hard for the miners to understand this method of conducting a strike. It is hard for anyone to understand it if the intention is to win the demands of the union.

The miners' puzzle over these contradictions but the only light they receive, if such it can be called, is when Lewis, Murray, or Kennedy accompanied by a collection of priests, parsons and businessmen, speak at the few meetings held in some of the mining centers.

At the meetings where Lewis speaks he generally tells how Samuel D. Warriner of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company could not find time to have dinner with him recently and states that "the day will come when Warringer will be glad to eat with John L. Lewis." This statement, smacking of this great American democracy with its implication of the classlessness of our society, usually produces great applause, especially from the priests and businessmen.

But news of the strike and its objectives is lacking. The publication of a strike bulletin in the various languages would do much to raise the morale of the miners and draw them more closely to the union.

Playing Into Operators' Hands.

The United Mine Workers officials will have to outline a policy for the membership soon. The present drifting policy is dangerous for the reason that it plays into the hands of the operators. Their agents are able to cause confusion which as yet has not resulted disastrously because of the loyalty of the miners to the union as such and because a settlement is expected.

But in the smaller and more isolated camps, where the miners live in company houses—the "patches" as they are called—foremen and superintendents are telling them that "the mines are open," "go in and work if you want to."

In addition to this campaign, the local press in the anthracite region, while not actually hostile to the miners so far, is cunningly hinting at the foolishness of the whole proceeding, the willingness of the operators to come to terms, the danger of the loss of the market for anthracite, etc.

The operators' propaganda machine is busy. The unions must start a counter offensive or morale will suffer.

Foreign Exchange.

PROGRESSIVES OF FURRIERS SHOW WEAKNESS

Kaufman Trick Wins on G. E. B. Report

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—In defense of use of injunctions by the Furriers' Union in its battles with the employers, President Morris Kaufman, in the battle over accepting the report of the general executive board, employed every sophistry of class collaboration and every argument of the opportunist in his attempt to escape criticism for the general executive board's use of the injunction in the Boston struggle against the Millburn firm.

In his talk Kaufman, shedding large crocodile tears, regretted, that of course, he would like to see more revolutionary changes, but, declared this bureaucrat, "Revolutions sometimes do not show results in less than a generation, how can the delegates expect more from the officers in a period of one year."

Vulgarizes Marx.

Kaufman's lieutenants came to his rescue in the convention in an attempt to jam the majority report of the general executive board thru the convention. Stetsky, one of the vice-presidents, even went to Karl Marx to justify the use of injunctions against employers and declared with a ridiculous smugness that "man makes history, not out of whole cloth, but out of conditions at hand," and concluded that the union must accept conditions as they are and recognize that we are living under capitalism and that we must act as capitalists act.

The lefts, Benjamin Gold and Schneider, introduced a minority report and attacked the general executive board's report showing the convention that the union had committed itself to recognizing the injunction since it employed the injunction against the Millman firm and that the union had won a doubtful victory as a result.

The minority report also attacked the lack of organizing work and the miserable agreement made in South Norwalk, where the members were bound to a five-year agreement with conditions which agreed to no chairmanship and longer hours than in other centers.

The minority report showed the utter incompetency of the Kaufman machine for leadership in the union.

After a campaign of flimflamming the delegates by the Kaufman machine, the majority report was adopted with 38 delegates voting for the report. Thirty-five delegates refrained from voting for the report, thinking by this means to express themselves in favor of the minority report.

Why Progressives Fell Down.

Many of the delegates who ideologically and traditionally cling to the Kaufman machine, but because of the pressure of their rank and file are forced to take a progressive stand, were disarmed by the demogogy of the Kaufman machine and supported the majority report. These so-called progressives lack the left wing ideology and have not decided in their own minds to break completely with the general executive board politically and ideologically.

The Kaufman machine which the latter part of last week was meek and humble when the question of the New York joint board came up, filling the air with peace talk, have started their war on the left progressive bloc when they thought they stood on firmer ground and stood a chance of flimflamming the delegates.

This tactic was used to the extreme by the machine. The lamb turned wolf. The fox remained foxy. The Kaufman policy was clear—peace on the bad case of the New York board—fill the air with peace talk. Then beat the opposition on the work conducted and thus maintain the machine's prestige. This the machine accomplished, due to the weakness of the progressives.

for organization and we will go to them with such proposals with sincerity and spirit."

Cohen's bitter castigation of the machine followed Gold's attack on Kaufman for insinuating that the membership was not willing to sacrifice for the cause. He declared that the rank and file are always willing to work for a strong union but "we understand well your petty maneuvers because you do not believe in organization. You do not support this proposal and when you come with such spirit of ridicule no one [illegible] believe that you mean anything more than to kill this proposition."

The resolution was adopted in spite of the tactics used by the Kaufman machine.

NEW YORK IRON LEAGUE TRIES TO SPLIT UNION

Red-Baiter Howard Is Bosses Tool

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.— The creation of an independent union, led by a former business agent who sought to call off the strike against the Iron League, is the latest attempt to break the iron workers' union. The new venture is receiving considerable attention in the capitalist press, but so far seems to have made little headway with the boys who rivet the girders fast to the sky scrapers.

Charles A. Howard, the father of the new movement, is denounced by representatives of the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers as a tool of the Iron League against which the union has been striking for the last year.

Howard, as business agent for Local No. 40, the big local of New York sought to break the strike last winter by urging the members to go back to work. The strike was called for union recognition and a raise in wages. Howard spoke to many workers personally and he sent them post cards with his back-to-work appeal. Some members were influenced but he had no general success and in the ensuing controversy he turned in his resignation as business agent and the resignation was quickly accepted by the local union. He was later expelled.

Later he toured the country from coast to coast, at his "own" expense, at least not on union expenses, and spread his arguments for an industrial peace policy, swinging in the suggestion that the time was coming for another union that would end the taxing of western members for the New York strike. In addition to these activities, Howard, on his return began figuring as a red baiter and agitated particularly for the expulsion from the union of Joseph Manley.

In his campaign to build the new Independent Iron Workers' Union of Greater New York, Howard is continuing his end-the-strike talk. He urges iron workers to join a union that will be more pleasing to the non-union contractors—the Iron League, and tries to persuade iron workers that the bosses don't want to sign agreements with an organization containing officials who have been in jail. The prison reference is particularly directed against P. J. Morrin, international president, who once served time in connection with the union's fight with the National Erectors' association. Union representatives ridicule this respectability argument and say that the Iron League—a powerful contractors' group backed by the steel trust, is anti-union and is part of a national movement of the big industrialists to destroy organized labor.

ACCUSED TATARBOUNAR PEASANTS FORCE OFFICERS TO DESCRIBE TORTURE DURING MASS ARRESTS

KISHENEV, Bessarabia, Nov. 17.—During one of the last sittings of the court there were lively incidents between the accused and witnesses on the part of the prosecution, agents of the secret police. Thus, during their cross-examination by the defense, one of the accused put to an agent the following question: "Is it true, that you have beaten my wife with a whip, until her skin began to break off?" "Do you remember," was another question, "How you tortured the peasant Semior with a red-hot iron?" The third of the accused said: "Let the witness tell, how he had poured hot oil into people's ears."

The president of the court, Colonel Maxim, tried to smooth the impression of those questions by frequently interrupting the accused.

A Cynical Confession.

Lieut. Epimic Apostolescu, leader of a punishment expedition to the village of Cismea, described the terrible things that happened under his leadership.

Sixty peasants were locked up by us in a cellar and the gendarmes received the order to throw gas grenades into the cellars. The cellar was kept carefully closed, till the next day, then it was opened and only 16 peasants were still alive. The others had died from the gas.

On the question of the defence why these sixty peasants who had not fought against the soldiers, were simply murdered and not given over to the courts, the Lieutenant answered:

Work With Terror.

"We had to work with terror. The population was our enemy and we have treated it as such."

As the defence stated that even hostile prisoners are not killed in war, the worthy member of the Roumanian army answered:

"Under certain circumstances one is allowed to kill one's prisoners in war. Certainly, however, in civil war."

The chairman interrupted these statements with the remark: "Thank you. Mr. Lieutenant. There are still thirty other witnesses to be examined."

Another Earthquake

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 17.—An earth tremor of far greater intensity than any registered on the seismograph within the last two years was recorded at Regis College.

Starting at 5 o'clock this morning the maximum waves were reached between 5:08 and 5:20 and were very rapid. The distance was estimated at about 1500 miles but the direction could not be determined.

It is believed the quake was on this continent.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The supreme court of the United States announced acceptance and confirmation of a new boundary line between Arkansas and Tennessee as formed by the Mississippi river.

Chicago Typo Union Decides to Reopen Scale Negotiations

At a special call meeting at Bricklayers Hall, corner Monroe and Peoria Streets, the Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 decided to serve notice on the Chicago Newspaper Publishers Association that it desired to begin negotiations for a new contract to become effective at the expiration of the present contract May 22, 1925.

In the proposed contract, of which a rough draft had been submitted to the membership by the newspaper scale committee, the objectionable bonus feature was missing. The proposed contract calls for a shortening of the work week of the day workers from 45 to 42 hours. Workers on the night shift will work 42 hours but on the lobster shift, which starts at midnight, are to work but 6½ hours per night and are to receive a 45-minute lunch period on the bosses time.

The question of wage scales and a number of other demands have been referred back to the scale committee with numerous recommendations by means of which the union will be able to safeguard the conditions it has won in the various newspaper offices.

TORONTO LABOR HAILS PURCELL UNITY MESSAGE

British Labor Head Gets Ovation

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TORONTO, Nov. 17—Albert A. Purcell, president of the International Federation of Trade Unions and fraternal delegate to the American Federation of Labor convention at Atlantic City from the British Trade Union Congress, received a thunderous ovation at his meeting here where he urged world trade union unity.

Thruout the entire meeting the approving "Hear, hear" of many Englishmen could be heard, as Purcell emphasized the need of uniting all workers in the struggle against the capitalist class.

When Purcell called for unity of the working class against capitalist wars a demonstration followed his remarks that lasted several minutes.

Purcell's plea for unity with the Russian trade union workers made a deep and lasting impression on the trades unionists assembled.

Purcell ended his meeting urging the Canadian workers to send a delegation of unionists to Soviet Russia so that they can study the developments in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics for themselves and see the Russian trade unions at work.

The president of the Toronto Trades and Labor Council presided at the meeting and many prominent Canadian trades unionists were on the platform.

Fight Bosses and Burglars.

NEW YORK—(FP)—Nov. 17— Protecting other people's jewelry and bank vaults is not its own reward, so about 125 burglar alarm men have gone on strike for the 48-hour and $50-week. The men were employed by the Metropolitan Electric Protective Co., and the National Wiring Protective Co. and their jobs were to hasten to the scene when burglar alarms rang out in the night. Hours were 50 and pay from $32 to $42 a week under the old arrangement and when the men protested 10 were discharged, precipitating the strike.

That worker next door to you may not have anything to do tonight. Hand him this copy of the DAILY WORKER.

PLUMBERS' WAGES INCREASE AS ORGANIZATION STRENGTH GROWS

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Continued gains in the wages of union plumbers in 1925 correspond with very considerable increase in membership recorded by the United Association of Plumbers & Steamfitters between 1924 and 1925. According to the annual report of the United States department of labor on union wages and hours, union rates for plumbers May 1, 1925, exceeded 1924 in 12 out of 40 cities. Only one city in the list reported a reduction in plumber wages.

Wage Increase in 40 Cities.

Extending the comparison back to 1920 we find that in the 5-year period plumbers' minimum hourly rates have been raised in 30 of the 40 cities. In only two cities are their wages below 1920. This is somewhat better than the average in the building trades. As many of the increases have been large, union plumbers have materially improved their living standards compared with 1920, the year of highest living costs.

The 44-hour week is universal except in Seattle where union plumbers have a 40-hour week. Here again the plumbers are slightly ahead of other building trades unions. Since 1913 plumber hours have been reduced in 13 cities.

Plumbers get the highest hourly rate in Birmingham and St. Louis where it is $1.50. Pittsburgh is just behind with $1.438 while 6 cities including New York pay $1.375. The $1.50 rate is a gain of 118 per cent over 1913 in Birmingham and 126 per cent in St. Louis. Charleston, Fall River, Manchester, Minneapolis, Richmond and St. Paul have the lowest plumber scale with a rate of $1.

Minimum Hourly Rates.

Minimum hourly rates for plumbers in 18 leading cities in 1913, 1920 and 1925 were:

Plumbers pay per hour	1913	1920	1925
Baltimore	$0.50	$0.875	$1.25
Boston	.60	1.00	1.10
Chicago	.75	1.25	1.25
Cincinnati	.618	1.00	1.25
Cleveland	.625	1.00	1.375
Denver	.625	1.00	1.25
Detroit	.563	1.25	1.30
Kansas City	.625	1.00	1.375
Los Angeles	.563	1.125	1.125
Minneapolis	.563	1.00	1.00
New Orleans	.563	.90	1.125
New York	.688	1.125	1.375
Philadelphia	.438	.90	1.15
Pittsburgh	.625	1.063	1.438
St. Louis	.663	1.25	1.50
San Francisco	.75	1.25	1.125
Seattle	.813	1.125	1.25
Washington	.50	1.00	1.313

Cities in which union plumbers secured increases since 1924 are Baltimore, Buffalo, Denver, Indianapolis, Louisville, Memphis, Newark, New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Providence, Salt Lake City and Washington. The only decrease was from $1.125 and $1.10 in Boston.

The average of the 38 cities was $1.22 in 1925 compared with $1.195 in 1924, $1,043 in 1920 and 59.5 cents in 1913. The present level is an advance of 2 per cent over 1924, 17 per cent over 1920 and 105 per cent over 1913.

Membership Increase.

The membership of the plumber union is shown in the 1925 American Federation of Labor report as 39,200, a gain of 12 per cent over 1924 and 23 per cent over 1920.

Whiteman Speaks to Working Girls at Jim Crow Branch Y.M.C.A.

Lovett Fort-Whiteman, national organizer of the American Negro Labor Congress, spoke before a group of Negro working girls at the Jim Crow branch of the Y. W. C. A. 35th and Indiana on the "Aims and Purposes of the American Negro Labor Congress."

Whiteman outlined the purpose of the congress to unite as many workers of the Negro race as possible in an endeavor to combat the Jim Crow laws, race segregation, and discrimination that is practiced on the Negro worker politically, economically and socially.

Following the short talk by Whiteman, the girls asked a number of questions that showed their keen interest in the congress and gave the founders of the congress to understand that the time was ripe for such an organization on the part of the Negro workers. A number of the assembled working girls handed in their applications to the congress at the close of the meeting.

Haverhill Labor Split Heals

HAVERHILL, Mass. —(FP)—Nov. 17.—The split in the Shoe Workers' Protective Union that began when the wood heel workers' voted to secede last week for the purpose of making a separate agreement with the manufacturers, is now mending with the local's vote to reaffiliate. The Protective expects an agreement shortly with the bosses' organization to replace the pact that expired.

The Two French Trade Union Congresses

Second and concluding installment of report by Com. Lozovsky to the Executive Bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions.

THE colonial wars formed the most important question facing the two congresses. Both met at a time when preparations were being made for a big push in Morocco. Both met when the negotiations between France and Spain on the question of taking joint action against the Riffs had just finished. It is of interest to note how they reacted to this qusetion.

As far as the Unitary Congress is concerned no difficulties were met with and no differences of view showed themselves. There was full agreement on the need for carrying on an energetic struggle against the war, while the idea was raised of undertaking presentations for a protest strike. This decision was unanimously adopted by the congress.

The congress of the General Confederation of Labor was quite a different affair. In its case the question was regarded from the purely governmental point of view. There was no thot of proffering any opposition to the war, the most important speakers being of the view that France had done all that lay in her power to reach an agreement with the Riffs while making out at the same time that it was a matter of a defensive war. As if the Riffs had fallen on the poor French and were threatening to conquer France! By placing the question in such a light they demonstrated to the full the true imperialist spirit of the leading circles of the reformist trade union movement.

JOUHAUX'S speech on the advisability of the General Confederation's present tactics was particularly characteristic. In his speeches Jouhaux emphasized the fact that the reformist General Confederation of Labor was pursuing its old pre-war policy.

We must examine this strange way of looking at the question a little more closely. Despite all its defects, the pre-war Confederation of Labor was in substance a very healthy body. It stood for the class struggle, for carrying on a ruthless fight against the bourgeois state, against all war, against colonial policy, etc.

In order to talk at the 1925 congress of the reformist confederation applying these very tactics, one must be possessed of some special qualities, abundant enuf in the present leader of the reformist Confederation of Labor, Jouhaux, that many a reformist does not possess. Such a statement was not of a "historic" character, but was an attempt to politically mask the real issue with regard to unity so as to answer to all proposals for unity with the set phrase: "If you want unity, then come back to the old home" and so put a stop to all discussion.

It was stated at the C. G. T. congress that unity with the Unitary Confederation members was impossible because they were under the influence of the Communist Party so as to be able to pursue a bourgeois line of policy with greater ease!

IN addition to issues of general import the agenda of both congresses featured questions of a practical nature: Wages, the eight-hour day, social insurance, immigration, etc. It would seem that there could not be differences of view on such points. Surely it is precisely on the question of the eight-hour day, social insurance, and immigration, that agreement could have been reached seeing that Jouhaux and his followers are agreed that the unions must deal with those problems, and these problems only.

But here, too, the fundamental differences between French reformism and French Communism made themselves manifest. The difference lay not in our congress having pressed for other demands, but in HOW it proposed to enforce these demands.

It is noteworthy that in connection with the fall in the rate of exchange the reformist congress did not move for the calculating of wages on the gold basis. According to the reformists such a system would "be impracticable" (!), while Ee Dauple, organ of the C. G. T. bluffed as usual with its statement: "We know why the Unitary Confederation people are demanding gold. It is because they are accustomed to get gold from Moscow."

Such cheap demagogy is, however, no reply to the question of how the unions are going to secure a certain decent standard for the working class of France while the country is suffering from a falling rate of exchange.

IMMIGRATION is a especially important problem for France. How exceptionally important it is becomes clear when it is remembered that there are nearly three million foreign workers in France, that they are helping to lower wages, that strikebreakers are recruited from their midst, and that it is extremely difficult to carry on any political activity among these workers.

But what does the reformist Confederation of Labor propose to do in the matter? Nothing at all. Our comrades, on the other hand, moved for the complete emancipation of these workers, for their being granted equal rights with the French workers, for the founding of a press for the foreign workers, for their having equal rights in respect to the employers, etc.

By their very existence the two confederations have grouped around them all the revolutionary elements on the one hand, and all the reactionary, on the other. At neither congress did the various ideological tendencies show themselves to any great extent. The Unitary Congress showed almost complete unanimity on the main questions: The war, general tactics, etc.

THAT is not to say that there was absolute agreement. The revolutionary trade union movement in France is not yet a single homogeneous whole; it includes all kinds of elements, ex-syndicalists, former anarchists, all shades in the rainbow of French socialism, which has given representatives to the revolutionary labor movement.

There is at present a right wing in the French Communist Party with one part inside the party and another part outside. These right wing elements succeeded in wielding considerable influence on the question of the re-election of trade union officials. This is a question that has always played a big role in France.

The old anarchist principle of syndicalism was that everyone should take his turn in leading the unions. It was on this issue that differences arose at our congress. In point of fact the opposition of the right wingers on this issue was a political misstep. By making a stalking-horse (fearing to call a spade a spade), of this issue, they thereby raised the question of the Communist Party's policy in the trade union movement, as well as of the line taken by the confederal bureau, members of which had joined the Communist Party a couple of months before the congress.

BUT so weak were the right wingers ideologically that they were unable to raise the question in its broadest aspect as a political issue. By utilizing the confusion prevailing in this sphere of the trade union movement, they managed to get a third of all the votes cast. But the votes so cast represented no opposition or any sort of ideological tendency.

These votes against the confederal bureau's resolution only represented a temporary bloc between the different elements who for various reasons, mostly because they were not aware of the political implications, voted for the old prewar principle of anarcho-syndicalism.

BOTH congresses are exceptionally characteristic for the whole of the world trade union movement; they show at a glance what reformism is, at bottom, and what the revolutionary trade union movement really is. Jouhaux's speech was warmly applauded by the whole of the bourgeois press. The whole of the conservative and monarchist press, all the most reactionary elements in France, all stressed the "exclusive wisdom and sane, statesman-like outlook of M. Jouhaux," who publicly acknowledged the errors of his youth and condemned the plainly utopian and simply Bolshevist character of the decisions of the C. G. T. U. congress.

These sympathetic views of the bourgeois press on the one hand, and the merciless campaign of lies against the Unitary Congress on the other, give us a better idea of the two congresses than any number of explanatory articles would.

The Unity Conference.

THE C. G. T. U. broadcasted the slogan for the closing of the two congresses by fusing them into a joint congress and making a unity conference of it. This proposal was turned down and it became clear that such a congress was out of the question. A congress was fixed for August 31.

Fifty-six representatives of independent unions and of trade unions belonging to the reformist conferation turned up. Representatives were thereupon appointed from the Unitary Congress and a unity conference organized consisting of 35 delegates from the reformist and independent unions and a like number from the Unitary Congress.

By not observing the decision of the reformist congress and coming to the conference, the reformist unions showed how close they approached to us. The proceedings showed that the independent, mainly the anarcho-syndicalist unions had no following. When they broke off from the C. G. T. U. they had some 30,000 workers with them—today they have only two or three thousand.

AT the conference the question was raised as to the basis on which unity could be set up. Some attempt was made to bring forward the aged Amiens charter as a sort of unity platform, but was opposed not only by the unitary representatives, but by many of the reformists and independents as well. The Amiens charter was thus accorded decent burial, while the conference confined itself to passing a resolution on unity.

Altho not big as far as members go, this conference was very characteristic of the present state of the trade union movement in France. There are many reformist unions desirous of seeing unity achieved, but only an inconsiderable number of them dared to attend the conference fearing expulsion from the reformist G. C. T.

But the very fact that such a conference could be convened and a joint resolution worked out by such varying elements in the trade union movement amply proves that there is a profound urge towards unity among the working class masses who care not a jot whether the G. C. T. leaders want unity or not.

Weak Points in the French Trade Union Movement.

IT must be quite openly stated that out trade union movement in France possesses many weak points. The first is the low percentage of workers organized in the unions; the second the continuous change in the makeup of the union membership in France generally and in the unitary unions in particular. Among the metal workers, for instance, the composition of the membership changes during the course of every two or three years.

It looks almost as if one man walked out of the union while another man was joining up, much as if they were attending short-term courses. This is an old weakness of the French labor movement. The composition of the unions changes because the worker has no material considerations to bind him to the union except that of his own membership dues. When sick or out of work, the worker cannot reckon on getting any help from his union as in the case in Great Britain and Germany.

ANOTHER weak point that must be noted is that among the local organizations general issues predominate over the questions of the day-to-day struggle. We, least of all, can object to the unions devoting attention to issues of a general nature, but in some of the French unions this is done to such an extent that they are occupied exclusively with world problems while at the same time they are steadily losing influence in their own trade or industry.

Lastly, our organizations are particularly weak in the most important industrial centers, with the exception of the Paris district. In the North, for example, where our problem is to gain influence in the mining industry, our unions, it will be found, are considerably weaker than the reformist. In conclusion it has to be admitted that in our trade union movement there are numerous defects demanding the most drastic remedies if our organizations are to be raised to their true level.

Summary and Future Prospects.

THERE were some in the Unitary Confederation who thot that August 31 would have seen the attainment of unity, and when the 31st had come and gone and no unity was arrived at, they were seized with disappointment and fell into despair. In a country where 90 per cent of the working class remains still unorganized there is no ground for pessimism just because the reformists are against unity.

The greater part of the French proletariat is still beyond our influence, and for that matter, of the reformists, and here lie our chief tasks in organization. To get the whole 100 per cent of the French proletariat drawn into the unions, that is the basic task marked out by the congress.

Our other task is to strengthen the revolutionarily minded opposition in the reformist unions. It is already well on the way to setting up its own center, issuing its own organ, etc. But the speed at which it is developing is too slow and it is up to us to assist the opposition in its difficult work.

It is most important that serious attention be directed to educating our union members. Hitherto very little has been done in this direction, as was to be seen from the discussion on the re-election of union officials. Even the Communists attenting the congress were unable to find their right bearings at times on the question of organization.

THE reformists in France are strong by reason of the fact that they depend on the machinery of the bourgeois state. In this respect reformism has far firmer roots not only in civil service circles, but even among certain working class strata as well. The French bourgeois parties still get many of the workers' votes, reformism still represents a force of some strength.

But there is no comparing French reformism with the German brand. There is no such powerful social-democratic party in France as in Germany. In France reformism is greatly handicapped on the one hand by the influence of Communism which is disintegrating its political organization, and by the Unitary Confederation of Labor, on the other, which is attracting all the revolutionary elements, while yet again by the events taking place overseas.

The drive of the British trade unions to the left has made a tremendous impression among reformist workers in France. The Scarborough congress will exercise a powerful influence as far as ideological re-grouping and the desire to look for support to the British unions are concerned. The reformist congress minority wrote the British unions heartily welcoming their struggle against disruption and describing the split in France, and appealing to them for advice and assistance. Again the leaders of the General Confederation of Labor are so intimately bound up with the heads of the French government that even for the rank and file of the workers these connections are becoming somewhat too obvious.

IT is worth noting that the delegation sent to Geneva on behalf of the French government consisted of Messrs. Briand, Loucher and Jouhaux. This unnatural alliance of leaders of the trade union movement with state ministers is particularly repugnant to the workers at present belonging to the reformist organizations.

The reformists attempted to arrange a demonstration to come off during the sessions of the two congresses which was intended to go beyond the boundaries of France itself. They invited representatives from ten or twelve countries who delivered speeches fully harmonising with the spirit of the right wing of the Amsterdam International. But there were no representatives from the British unions, a little item that did not pass unnoticed by the workers.

The reformists did not succeed in this effort to lend moral and political support to the Amsterdam right wing, for the speeches directed against the British unions and against unity only compromised them and their congress in the eyes of the workers. The Unitary Congress, on the other hand, not only did not weaken the Red International of Labor Unions, but actually strengthened its position.

THE present political situation in France is exceptionally favorable for our Confederation of Labor. The Communist Party and the Unitary Confederation are the only bodies at present leading the struggle against the war, and as this is a very important question for the French proletariat we have all the requisite conditions at hand for strengthening our influence among the masses. During the past the influence of the Communist Party and the Unitary Confederation has grown to a considerable extent, but there can be no stopping at that.

Should there be a rapid development of events, if the war is fought with increasing bitterness, should there be a further fall in the rate of exchange with a consequent financial crisis, then the broad working class masses thus set in motion will find their leaders in the Communist Party and will rally around the C. G. T. U. But at the moment only a section of the French working class is under our influence and our principal task is to go on with the organization of the wide masses, getting them into the unions, getting the masses lined up behind the unions, a task the successful carrying out of which will be of the utmost importance for the further fate of the working class of France.

Marxian Economics for Beginners at N. Y. Workers' School

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—A course in Marxian economics will be given at the New York Workers' School, beginning Thursday, Nov. 26, at 8 p. m., with J. Mindel as instructor.

This course begins with a consideration of the different schools of economics and takes up the fundamental elements of Marxian economy, such as value, money, surplus value, capital, rate of profit, how capital revolutionizes the mode of production, the accumulation and concentration of capital in industry and agriculture, banks, crises, the influence of concentration on the working class, and what capitalist accumulation leads to. This course is preparatory to a second course in the economics of the era of financial capital and monopoly. It takes up all the classic concepts of Marxian economics and "Americanizes" them, that is to say, it particularly studies these economic phenomena as they are illustrated in the U. S. An interesting feature, seldom or never treated in a course in Marxian economics in the United States, is the study of the concentration of capital in agriculture and the general economics of the agrarian problem.

This course is open to any one who has the barest elements of economic knowledge such as can be derived from the reading of the economics section of the "A. B. C. of Communism," or some work of a similar nature. The fee for the three months course is $2.50. Registrations are being taken now at the school office, Room 34, 108 East 14 St.

THE FACTORY NUCLEUS AND THE STREET NUCLEUS

By W. ULBRIGHT.

ARTICLE I.

THE political tasks of the Communist parties demand that factory nuclei be the foundation of party organization. However, we must not forget that it is essential to organize also comrades who are not in industrial enterprises and cannot be attached to factory nuclei. These comrades must be organized and in street nuclei as it is absolutely necessary to work systematically among those employed in small concerns, and among housewives, unemployed and the petty bourgeois classes, in residential districts. The necessity of this procedure is particularly noticeable during election campaigns. In the course of the past few months we had occasion to observe that in two of the most important sections of the Comintern, in the Communist Party of France and the Communist Party of Germany the election campaigns were not carried on quite satisfactorily. The C. P. of F. was not active enuf in the residential districts as it almost entirely depended on factory nuclei and the workers groups proved to be a failure. The C. P. G. on the other hand carried on its election agitation almost entirely in the residential districts and neglected the factories.

Shop Nuclei and Election Campaigns

Altho agitation in the residential districts is very important, agitprop work during election campaigns should be first and foremost concentrated on industrial enterprises, for the following reasons:

(a) The close connection of factory questions with general political questions brought forward at elections, give a very good opportunity to expose the election trickery of the opponent parties.

(b) During an election campaign, our first concern is to capture industrial workers as completely as possible, because it is they who count most in all labor struggles.

(c) With the help of factory newspapers and by selling dailies in and outside the factories, we can easily influence the most important sections of the working class in a systematic manner.

(d) Only by carrying on agitation and propaganda in the factories on a large scale during election campaigns is it possible to organize rapidly and successfully factory delegations and mass demonstrations at the opening of parliament.

Winning the Social-Democratic Workers

The same applies to the struggle against the social-democratic party. We will not make much headway if we limit ourselves to general agitation against the social-democratic party in parliament. Such agitation leads frequently to a more or less serious clash between the social-democratic parliamentary leaders and Communist parliamentary debaters. But this does very little towards convincing and winning over social-democratic workers. In the fatcories, however, we can bring to the notice of the workers the nature of the social-democratic policy in connection with all everyday questions. The social-democrats have recognized the importance of factory agitation. For instance, the report of the district managing committee of the Berlin-Brandenberg district of the socialist party of Germany contains the following statement:

"The factory secretariat has taken measures to supply our representatives in the factories with the necessary material in order to bring our party again into good repute in the trade unions and factories."

This quotation shows the importance which the socialist party of Germany attaches to factory agitation. It is this which has enabled social-democratic leaders to keep social-democratic members in the party in spite of their betrayal of the interests of the workers. A section of the social-democratic leaders deceived the workers by radical phraseology in parliament, whilst with the assistance of the influence of social-democratic leaders, they obstructed the workers in the factories in their every action.

These experiences are a lesson that we must first of all capture factory workers, in order to take away the ground from under the feet of the social-democratic party. Then Communist factory nuclei will be able to act as the active vanguards of the workers in their struggle for their everyday needs, when they will know how to treat social-democratic workers as deluded class comrades, in order to influence them in a systematic manner, it will be possible to weaken the social-democratic party. Therefore, leading party organs must always bear in mind that factory work is the most important work and that work in the residential districts is only of secondary importance.

Factory nuclei should be the basis of party organization, that is to say, the center of gravity of party work is in the factories. Therefore, factory nuclei should be represented at conferences in accordance with their strength and importance. But such a formulation of the question does not mean that there should not be any street nuclei. There are organizations in which comrades live quite close to the places of their employment, in which there are only a few comrades employed in factories and where men and women party comrades can be attached to factory nuclei. In such cases, agitation in the residential district is also carried on by the factory nuclei.

Tasks of Street Nuclei.

It is essential to ascertain who belongs to street nuclei.

The French comrades are right in saying that all party members who cannot be attached to factory nuclei belong to street nuclei. Does this mean a weakening of work in the residential districts, because a smaller number of members belong to street nuclei than formerly to the groups of ten? Certainly not! For hitherto only a small number of officials carried on the work in the residential districts. If street nuclei are now able to draw all their party members into the work, this would mean a strengthening of work in residential districts.

The task of street nuclei consists in carrying on Communist work among the residents of their sphere of activity, especially among those employed in small concerns and among housewives and the middle classes of the local population. They must register sympathizers and to recruit members and subscribers. They organize the sale of Communist newspapers, periodicals and pamphlets, from house to house and in shops and institutions. They organize meetings and carry on agitation and propaganda work at the functions of our opponents. They publish special wall newspapers for the large blocks of flats and compile special agitation material for propaganda among the middle classes of the locality linking up this material with local events. They agitate from outside in enterprises where no Communists are employed and endeavor to gain sympathy for the purpose of gradually forming a factory nucleus. For such enterprises it is the street nucleus appointed by the nucleus group's leading organ which makes itself responsible for the factory newspaper. Street nuclei turn their attention to all branches of party work and receive membership contributions from party members who cannot belong to factory nuclei. As comrades organized in factory nuclei who live far from the place of their employment are as a rule not given any work by the factory nuclei after working hours and on Sundays it is essential to register these comrades with the nuclei executive committee of their residential district. This executive can give the comrades definite party work to do (reporting agitation in the rural districts, compilation of factory nucleus newspapers for factories without nucleus assistance with definite branches of work in the nucleus section or subsection executive, etc.)

These comrades can also be attached to definite street nuclei for work after working hours and on Sundays. As these comrades are only full fledged members in factory nuclei they cannot of course participate in the making of decisions on party questions in the street nucleus. Wherever street nuclei do not exist comrades can be attached to factory nuclei by the nucleus section or subsection executive. They can participate in making up factory newspapers, can help with the educational work of that factory nucleus, can be members of the commission for agitation in the rural districts, etc.

Cleveland Launches Organization Drive for Working Women

CLEVELAND—In order to launch the work among women, the District Executive Committee is calling a meeting of all women comrades of Cleveland, to discuss the work and work out plans.

Work among women is very important for the party. The attitude that the party has hitherto taken—and that many comrades still entertain—must be combatted. Work among women has been considered as of little importance—as a matter of secondary importance. This is a big error, for the struggles of the workers at the present time can be intensified if the women are educated and mobilized to help their husbands and fathers.

The backwardness of women politically and in industrial organization is again due to the lack of understanding of the big issue involved. Half of the proletarian population is to be eliminated from the struggle.

The Communist International and the Workers (Communist) Party have decided that women must be educated and lined up industrially and politically. The bourgeoisie is doing its work well both among the dames of its own class—and among the working class women.

District Six of the party intends to begin the work among women. Every woman comrade of the party in Cleveland is instructed to be present at the district office on Sunday, Dec. 6, at 2:30 p. m. This instruction is mandatory. Men members of the party are also invited for work among women does not mean work by women members of the party. It is party work among the proletarian masses of women, in which the party as a whole should participate.

Educational Work in Cleveland Will Reach Workers Outside Party

CLEVELAND, Nov. 17.—The district committee of this district has begun its educational work. The agitprop has outlined the following courses: an elementary and an advanced class in English, a public speaking class, and a class in the history of trade unionism and the Communist tactics in the trade unions.

The classes in elementary and advanced English will begin on Sunday Nov. 29, at 10 a. m. These classes will hold two sessions a week—on Sunday mornings and Wednesday nights—in two separate classes. The class in public speaking will start on Tuesday, December 1, at 8 p. m. and will meet once a week. The fee for either the elementary or advanced English class, which will last 6 months, is $2.50. The fee for the class in public speaking is also $2.50 and the course will also last 6 months.

The class in trade unionism will begin on Sunday, December 6, at 10 a. m. It will consist of 8 or 9 lectures on the history of trade unionism, with full discussion. To this will be added a lesson for the discussion of action at a trade union meeting. Then will follow three sessions on the tactics of Communists in trade unions. The fee will for this course will be $2.00.

All the courses are open to party and non-party workers, with the exception of the three last lectures on the tactics of Communists in the trade unions.

These courses are very important for all party members, and every comrade should avail himself of them. In January will begin a course on Marxism-Leninsm in its theoretical and practical application.

As rapidly as possible the agitprop of the district will arrange circuit lectures for the cities outside Cleveland.

Enrollment for the courses in Cleveland should take place at once.

General Membership Meeting in St. Louis on Sunday, Nov. 22

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 17.—A general membership meeting of the Workers Party in St. Louis, East St. Louis and Madison, Ill., on reorganization, at which Comrade Jay Lovestone will be present will be held Sunday, November, 22, at 2 p. m., at the Labor Lyceum 1243 North Garrison St. St. Louis, Mo.

CONNECTICUT DISTRICT ARRANGES FOR REORGANIZATION MEETINGS

The following meetings have been arranged in the Connecticut district by the District Executive Committee:

NAUGATUCK, R. I.—Thursday, November 19.
WATERBURY, CONN.—Friday, November 20.
TORRINGTON, CONN.—Saturday, November 21.
HARTFORD, CONN.—Wednesday, November 25.
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—Thursday, November 26.
NEW LONDON, CONN.—Monday, November 30.

These meetings are being held for reorganization purposes and it is extremely important that the membership in the respective cities named above attend these meetings.

The Party Wants The Daily Worker

By C. E. RUTHENBERG, General Secretary, Workers (Communist) Party.

THE response which the party has made to the appeal of the Central Executive Committee to save The DAILY WORKER from suspension is a splendid demonstration of the spirit of our movement. The help given The DAILY WORKER in the crisis in which it found itself is conclusive proof that the party is ready to fight for and maintain The DAILY WORKER.

The Central Executive Committee found itself face to face with the necessity of raising $7,500 in five days. It had to raise the money or The DAILY WORKER would be suspended. This was the problem before the secretariat of the party on Wednesday, November 11th. This money had to be on hand, part of it by Friday, the 13th, and the balance not later than Monday, the 16th. The secretariat spent all day of last Wednesday mobilizing the forces of the party to raise the necessary money. The task was all the greater in view of the fact that for two months The DAILY WORKER had been carrying on a campaign for funds.

THE party responded splendidly to the appeal sent out. The South Slavic comrades raised $700 as a contribution in part and part in payment of their bills. The Lithuanian comrades made a loan of $500 to The DAILY WORKER. The Greek comrades handed in a check of $350 on their account; the Polish comrades paid $200 in account; the Scandinavian $150. The comrades of the Finnish section loaned The DAILY WORKER $1,000. The Lettish bureau loaned The DAILY WORKER $300 from its press fund and the Lettish branch of Chicago raised another $200. The comrades of San Francisco sent in a check for $300 raised at a membership meeting. The New York comrades sent a check for $500 on account of the proceeds of the November 7th meeting. Cleveland, Detroit, Philadelphia, Boston and many other places sent in substantial remittances on account of the November 7th celebration.

Today, November 16, The DAILY WORKER has received the $7,500 which it was necessary to raise to prevent its instant suspension.

THE DAILY WORKER is alive. It will continue to appear as the expression of the militant revolutionary workers of the United States. It will continue to serve the party as a weapon to organize the working masses for the struggle against capitalism.

The immediate crisis has been overcome. Now it is the task of the party to place The DAILY WORKER beyond the reach of another such crisis. Now the party units thruout the country must complete the task of raising the $40,000 fund which The DAILY WORKER appealed for in September. There is another $20,000 to be raised to complete this fund.

We believe that the way the party has responded to the appeal of The DAILY WORKER in its emergency makes certain that the party will complete this fund. It will place The DAILY WORKER on a basis so that it can go forward without further appeals.

COMRADES, continue the work which has been so splendidly shown in the action of the party in The DAILY WORKER crisis. Let every branch sell the "Save The DAILY WORKER" coupons. Let it complete the quota assigned to the branch at the beginning of the campaign. Thus we will put our paper on a solid foundation and make it a more valuable instrument for our movement.

The Central Executive Committee, thru its sub-committee, is carefully studying the whole situation of The DAILY WORKER financially and editorially. It is working on plans to improve The DAILY WORKER as an organ of the revolutionary movement. It is working out the details of a campaign to increase the circulation of The DAILY WORKER and thus put it on a sounder foundation for the future.

BY completing The DAILY WORKER fund, the members and branches of the party place The DAILY WORKER in such a situation that they can carry out the plans which the C. E. C. is formulating.

We have had a splendid demonstration of Communist loyalty and work in the response to the appeal of The DAILY WORKER. Let us continue that spirit and complete the task, insuring The DAILY WORKER for our movement for the year to come.

BOSTON, MASS., FINNISH DISTRICT CONVENTION OVERWHELMINGLY SUPPORTS PARTY EXECUTIVE

MAYNARD, Nov. 17.—The Finnish district convention of the Boston district was in session here for the past two days. The make-up of the convention showed that the delegates present realized the need for bolshevization and reorganization in the Finnish section.

Thoro debate was held on many of the vital questions confronting the Finnish section. Comrade Puro represented the Central Executive Committee at this convention and the resolution which he presented, for bolshevization of the Finnish section, for reorganization, for the unification of the entire party behind the Central Executive Committee, for intensive trade union work, and against all right wing manifestations in the Finnish section and in the entire party, was adopted by a vote of twenty-seven for the resolution and three abstaining.

Comrade John Hill was censured for his articles against the labor party by a vote of 27 for and three abstaining. Comrade Onni Saari was expelled from the Finnish section of the Workers (Communist) Party for defending Lore, and opposing the line of the Communist International and attacking the party.

The delegates who were elected to the national convention of the Finnish section, Comrades Santti, Janhonen, Lahti, were instructed to stand behind the reorganization and bolshevization program of the party, against all right wing tendencies in our party, and for the unification of the party ranks behind the Central Executive Committee.

The vote for the Central Executive Committee, as shown in the election of the delegates, numbered 22; those for the viewpoint of John Hill, numbered 8.

RENTS INCREASE IN NEW YORK AS WAGES DECREASE

Workers Must Dwell in Firetraps

By ESTHER LOWELL.

(Federated Press)

NEW YORK—Hundreds of witnesses are telling the story of New York's shameful housing of the majority of its population, the workers, to the state housing commission hearing on the need for continuing emergency rent laws enacted in 1920. Rent increases of 50 per cent to 200 per cent are related. Indifference of landlords to demands for repairs and increasing demands by landlords for disposses proceedings in the courts are told.

High Real Estate Values.

Captain Harry Ely of Washington Heights Tennants' association, declares that three-fourths of the city's population live in tenements! Another witness calls attention to the fact that assessed real estate in New York City is now rated $17,119,659,644, a billion dollars over 1924. The witness, a deputy county clerk, points out that the burden falls in higher rentals.

Fourteen people in one small apartment; sometimes as many as five families in a 6 or 7 room apartment; and almost incredible doubling up to bring rent into reasonable proportion per person to fallen wages are some of the facts given the commission by witnesses. Conditions in Harlem, where most of the Negroes live, are among the worst. Double advantage is taken of Negro workers because the area within which they can find accommodations is limited.

All Expensive Flats.

But East Side, West Side, Bronx and Brooklyn workers are suffering as well from the shortage of moderate rental apartments. Building has been going on since 1920, tenants grant, but show that the new apartments are chiefly more expensive ones and none rent for $10 a room or less. The flock of new two-family houses springing up like toadstools in Queens and outlying districts are fire-traps, the commission is told by experts; so that they cannot be counted as relieving the housing situation even if they are sold or rented at a more moderate rate than metropolitan apartments.

Live in Fire-Traps.

With rents rising and wages going down or at least not increasing, riots are predicted, if the rent laws are suddenly removed, by the Tremont Tenants' association. Joseph W. Romayne, president, asks whether it is "more paternal to spend money to prevent tuberculosis, mental deficiency and crime, all of which are preventable diseases by proper housing, than to spend huge sums to remedy them?" He declares that "in our own state nothing has been done to provide homes for the workers. Indeed, a very thoro survey proves that the supply grows steadily less."

BRITISH SEAMEN WANT POWER BY AMALGAMATION

Move to Get It Begun by "Outlaw" Strikers

LONDON.—The "P. C. 5" is a ticket which British seamen must get endorsed by shipowners and the officials of the National Sailors' and Firemen's Union before any job can be obtained.

There has been a strong protest against this for some time, but probably the most effective way to end the "P. C. 5" is to organise a section for seamen within the Transport and General Workers' Union.

Amalgamation Means Power.

With the backing the seamen could get from the dockers, they would have power to stop it being used as a blacklist, but if such a section were formed, it should be with the object of taking in both the Amalgamated Marine Workers' Union and the National Sailors' and Firemen's Union. With this end in view, a joint meeting of unofficial strike committees agreed to recommend to seamen the following decision:

"That this joint meeting of strike committees agree to the formation of a seamen's section of the Minority Movement to operate within the A. M. W. U., and N. S. F. U. for the purpose of educating the rank and file towards forcing amalgamation of the two unions, and to urge the formation of a seamen's department within the T. and G. W. U. and thus bring about an industrial union of transport workers."

The grand resistance of British seamen to the £1 reduction is one of the finest fights ever made by any body of workers. They are to be admired in their determination to win. That the strike was effective was evident by the howl that the shipowners put up thru the daily press.

Strike Continues in Australia.

The strike in Australia and New Zealand continues. Seventy-eight vessels are tied up, representing 750,000 tons of shipping; 300,000 carcases of mutton awaits shipment at Wellington, New Zealand; over 1,000,000 tons of cargo is held up in Australia. A break has taken place among the strikers at Durban, South Africa, but this has had no effect in Australasia.

The political effect in Australia has caused a general election as the state labor governments refused to operate the federal premier's decision to deport Tom Walsh, president of the Austrian Seamen's Union, and Johannsen, the secretary, of Sydney, N. S. W. The election campaign is anti-red for the bourgeoisie, with the usual scaremonger phrases being used to stampede the farmers into the camp of the enemy of the workers. This strike has great political consequences of an international character.

MOSCOW WORKERS PROTEST AGAINST TRIAL OF BESSARABIAN PEASANTS

MOSCOW, Nov. 17.—Four thousand workers gathered in the great Moscow circus and voiced their protest against the court-martial of the 500 Bessarabian peasants taking place in Kishinev, for their participation in the Tatarbounar peasant uprising against the Roumanian boyars and also voiced their condemnation of the Horthy hangmen of Hungary. Not only was this meeting one of protest but it was also a memorial meeting in honor of Max Goldstein, who died in the Doftan prison after a hunger strike that lasted fifty days.

The meeting adopted resolutions of protest against the Hungarian government and also resolutions demanding that the rights of national minorities be respected.

In the name of the Communist Party of Roumania Dobrogeanu-Gerea reported upon the situation of the Bessarabian peasantry, driven to despair by the arbitrariness of the occupation authorities and economic exploitation and hunger. The unification with Russia had become the religion of the Bessarabians, groaning under the boyar yoke. Dobrogeanu described certain horrible details from his own personal experience in the prison of Doftan where Max Goldstein has died after fifty days hunger strike.

Bela Kun spoke in the name of the Comintern upon the persecutions of the working class and the national minorities in the Balkan states. He demanded in particular the right of self-determination for Siebenbuerger oppressed by Roumania and demanded international proletarian action to save the political prisoners and the national minorities in Roumania. Dobrogeanu made a great speech in which he gave details about the personality of Max Goldstein who, altho not a Communist, was an unshaken and heroic revolutionary and whose bomb, as he himself declared, was filled with the blood and tears of the Roumanian working class. The Roumanian bourgeoisie will not be successful in crushing the movement of the suppressed Bessarabian people by legalized murders.

Peasants from Moldavia also spoke at the gathering.

Third Annual Moonlite Dance for Los Angeles Coming November 28th

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 17—On Saturday night, Nov. 28, the Young Workers League of this city will hold their annual Moonlite Dance at the Co-operative Hall, 2708 Brooklyn Ave. (near Mott St.)

Those who took part in the year's affair will need no urging to be there on time this year. The Moonlite Dance committee prophesies a total eclipse of previous moonlite dances.

So get your tickets early.

Los Angeles district has set itself a quota of $500 to raise immediately. Three hundred and fifty dollars are to be sent in without delay to the Young Worker. The Moonlite Dance is the first step toward raising this quota. Besides this however, contribution lists are being distributed and with the co-operation of all who have the interest of the Communist movement at heart, it will not take us long to fill our quota.

Bring all your friends to the Moonlite Dance. Help up raise our quota quickly.

CLASS IN "HISTORY OF REVOLUTIONARY YOUTH MOVEMENT," SUNDAY A. M.

Among the classes of the Workers' School of Chicago, which is receiving the attention of especially the young workers, is "The History of the International Revolutionary Youth Movement," conducted by Comrade John Williamson. The class will begin Sunday morning, Nov. 22, at 10:30 o'clock sharp, at 19 South Lincoln street, and will cover two semesters of eight weeks each. The ground covered by this course shall be as follows:

First semester—Early forms of youth organizations; revolutionary and socialist youth movement before and during the war.

Second semester—Formation and development of Y. C. I.; problems and tactics of Y. C. I. today.

This course will give to the young worker of today a historical background, dating into feudalism, outlining the growth of early forms of youth organization and the gradual development of society and subsequent rise of the socialist youth movement. It will especially equip the Y. W. L. member of today with an understanding of the relations of the worker in particular with the various forms of society and the changing economic forms assumed.

Outline for the First Semester, Beginning Sunday, Nov. 22, 10:30 A. M.

First week—Feudal economy, the guild system, guild apprenticeship, general condition of youth at that period.

Second week—Breakdown of feudalism and beginning of capitalist economy.

Third week—Social and economic conditions of youth under early capitalism.

Fourth week—Early economic and political organizations of workers.

Fifth week—Beginnings of youth movement.

Sixth week—Formative period of Young Socialist International.

Seventh week—The world war, the division of the socialist youth movement into social patriot and revolutionary.

Eighth week—Struggles and tactics of the socialist revolutionary youth movement during the world war.

No specific textbooks will be used but a list of books for supplementary reading and other references will be furnished each week. Application for this class and all others given by the Workers' School should be sent in immediately to 19 S. Lincoln St.

District Six Will Hold Three Meetings for Education Week

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 17.—District Six, Young Workers League, has arranged three mass meetings during so-called "Educational Week." They will be held in the following cities:

Cleveland, Ohio Friday, Nov. 20, 8 p. m. at Insurance Center Bldg., 1783 E. 11 St., 6 floor. Speakers: Martin Gordon, I. Amter and Phillip Shatz.

Conneaut, Ohio, Saturday, Nov. 21, 8 p. m. at Workers' Hall, 943 Broad St. Speaker: Martin Gordon.

Youngstown, Ohio, Sunday, Nov. 22, 8 p. m. at Ukrainian Hall, 525 West Rayen Ave. Speakers: Herbert Benjamin, Martin Gordon. This meeting is held in conjunction with the celebration of the 8th anniversary of the Russian revolution, which has been postponed.

NEW YORK UNION DEMANDS FREEING OF BEN GITLOW

Ladies' Garment Local Condemns Anarchy Act

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—At a general membership meeting of International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union Local No. 20., held at Arlington Hall, 19 St. Marks place, the following resolution, condemning the imprisonment of Benjamin Gitlow, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, under the New York state criminal anarchy act and demanding his release, was passed unanimously:

"Whereas, the conviction of Benjamin Gitlow under the criminal anarchy law has been sustained by the supreme court of the United States, the decision also declaring the law constitutional and thereby forging a powerful weapon of the capitalist class against the militant labor movement and the revolutionary political movement of the working class of this country, and

"Whereas, this is a denial to the labor movement to the right of freedom of speech, and Courts Against Workers.

"Whereas, it is part of the general policy of using the courts and machinery of government against the workers in the form of injunctions against picketing and striking and of persecution of the militant leadership that is found at the forefront of our political and industrial struggles, and

"Whereas, the sustaining of Gitlow's conviction by the United States supreme court supplies a precedent which will mean the railroading to long terms in prison of many other well known fighters in the ranks of the labor movement and will make easier the suppression by the capitalist controlled government of all and any working class organizations which dare oppose their open shop rule, and

"Whereas, the experiences of the labor movement has demonstrated that such statutes when once adopted and sustained, are gradually extended in scope thru judicial interpretation until they can be used against any sort of working class movement, and Solidarity Essential.

"Whereas, the solidarity of the entire working class is essential to its welfare and requires that those in the forefront of the struggle must especially have the support of all workers, and

"Whereas, in freeing James Larkin and the others charged jointly with Gitlow for the same offense and under the same act, even the capitalist governor of the state of New York, Mr. Alfred E. Smith, was compelled to state of those convicted: 'They are not criminals and I can see no useful purpose that will be served by holding them in prison any longer.' therefore be it

Support I. L. D.

"Resolved that we protest against and condemn the action of the United States supreme court; demand the repeal of the criminal anarchy law and will work to that end; record ourselves as in support of the International Labor Defense in fighting this case and call upon all labor bodies and working class organizations of any sort to take the same stand, be it further

Release Gitlow.

"Resolved that we demand of the governor of the state of New York that he immediately free the defendant, and be it further

"Resolved, that copies of this resolution be sent to the governor of the state of New York and to the labor press."

Throws Hat in Ring.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 17—In a letter to precinct workers, Col. Frank L. Smith, of Dwight, Ill., chairman of the Illinois commerce commission formally announced his candidacy for the republican nomination for the United States senator in opposition to Senator William B. McKinley.

AS WE SEE IT

there may be a physical wreck, with medals hanging on his wasted frame, who may mutter, with all the vehemence of a leading actor in "What Price Glory." "What the hell did I wreck myself for?"

YET despite all this evidence which is flaunted in the face of the working class, who contributed the main human toll in the war, we find wage slaves who still boast of having defeated the kaiser. They may not have a job, or if so, it may be a bum job, long hours and short pay. But they are proud of having won the war so that the ouse of Morgan could place Europe under tribute. This is the kind of thing that makes superficial radicals pessimistic and hopeless. They say: "The workers don't appreciate our sacrifices, so to hell with them." For that kind of radical the ash can of oblivion is the proper receptacle.

THOSE who throw in their lot with the revolutionary movement and take the sour with the sweet in the expectation that the masses will sprinkle their path with roses are not the kind that go thru to the end. Leaders, whether in the capitalist ranks or in the ranks of the working class, receive the support of those they speak for, just so long as they succeed in convincing their followers that they can serve them. The masses may desert them when they are right and follow them when they are wrong. They may stone them while they are living and build monuments over their graves when they are dead. A good deal depends on the time. Had Lenin died in 1917 instead of 1923, it is probable that his mausoleum in the Kremlin Square would not today be visited by millions of Russian worekrs and peasants. Karl Marx's grave in London is not so frequented.

WOODROW WILSON was an American hero in 1917 and for a few years afterwards. Today Calvin Coolidge is the little tin god. Wilson at least was a man of intellect. Coolidge's brain could be squirted into a gnat's eye without making the little thing wrinkle his brow. Coolidge is the spokesman of the policies of the republican party, and in an era of prosperity—for the rich of course—Coolidge goes. But let capitalism find itself in a crisis and Coolidge will fade away like a set of false whiskers in a cyclone. Then you may find a Borah coming to the front.

THIS is a complicated world and people who demand their politics simplified are liable to die cursing their fate. Trotsky once said that the shortest distance between two points is a zig zag. Perhaps Trotsky did not invent the phrase. It is a good one nevertheless. Anybody who has made a study of European politics since the war, can see that the powers involved have been busily engaged ever since trying to liquidate the results of the struggle. The Locarno pact marks a point in that effort. A war between nations is like a fight inside a political party, magnified a millionfold. The lower the theoretical level of the party, the more necessary it is for the leaders to appeal to the prejudices of the membership in order to hold them in line.

THE rulers of capitalist nations in times of war personify the leaders of the competing powers as inhuman monsters who must be crushed if the wives and daughters of "civilized" nations are to go their graves unsullied and pure. At least, if their virtue is tarnished the vile deed must not be done by a hated foreigner. This is the kind of stuff that made our American morons look on every German with a jaundiced eye. Ditto for Austrians towards Italians and vice versa. Same for all the rest of them. But when the slaughter was called off, and the capitalists sat down at the same table, drank champagne out of the same bottles, smoked Havanas out of the same box and proceeded to divide the spoils and pay the penalties, their main problem was how to delouse their subjects of the prejudices with which they infested them during the war. The fact that Germans and French and British rulers can now sit together and sign a treaty shows that they have succeeded—after a fashion.

DRIVE TO SAVE DAILY WORKER OVER-REACHES $20,000 MARK; SECOND HALF OF QUOTA NEEDED

TODAY begins the second half of the drive to save The DAILY WORKER. With a sudden onrush of contributions, the $20,000 mark was passed, and the first half of the campaign achieved.

But donations were so slow in coming in, that they scarcely kept up with the regular weekly deficits, to say nothing of meeting the indebtedness of the long preceding period. Unless the amounts come in for the next week at the rate of $1,000 daily, there will come another crisis.

To avoid this, WORKERS PARTY organizations and DAILY WORKER friends are putting every ounce of energy into the heavy task. Comrade L. E. Katterfeld of New York, has been untiring in his efforts, sending an additional $339.23 today from various branches and sympathisers, part as proceeds from DAILY WORKKER rescue parties.

From a Canadian friend, J. L. Counsell of Hamilton, Ont., came $100.00, while San Francisco forwarded $285.00 as a result of a Workers Party membership meeting and branch donations. Detroit, Mich., sent $151.58 as a result of their Soviet celebration, while another $100.00 was received as a donation from the Jewish branch of Cleveland, O. The Resolution on the Party Situation

The resolution of the political committee of the Central Executive Committee on the party situation will be welcomed by every party member who has at heart the unification and upbuilding of the Communist Party in the United States.

The resolution correctly analyzes the party situation and the dangerous and difficult period in which the Workers (Communist) Party finds itself. The party has gone thru a period of bitter conflict over the question of the correct policy for the movement in the United States. Altho this problem has been solved with the help of the Communist International, the factionalism which sprang up during the controversy has not yet been liquidated. Added to these difficulties is the opposition which arose in certain sections of the party to the reorganization of the party on the basis of shop nuclei and street nuclei (international branches) and the organization of language fractions in place of the language branches and sections which have hitherto existed. The enemies of the Communist Party have already been gloating over the prospective disintegration of the party which it hoped would spring out of this situation.

The resolution of the political committee frankly presenting these dangers to the party is a great step forward in overcoming these dangers. This resolution was drafted in collaboration with a section of the former majority of the party which supports the views of Comrade Cannon and Comrade Dunne. It expresses the submission to the party of a common platform for this group and the Ruthenberg group which is the majority in the political committee of the party. It marks the unification in the leadership of the party of these two former groupings. It is a long step toward breaking down and completely eliminating the factional situation which has existed in the party during the past eighteen months.

The attitude taken toward that section of the former majority which supports Comrade Foster opens the way for complete liquidation of the divisions in the party. The resolution leaves the door open to unite in the leadership of the Central Executive Committee, for all comrades who are ready to support the platform laid down in the resolution, that is, completion of the reorganization of the party at the earliest possible moment, intensification of the trade union work, bringing the party members into the unions, the organization of party fractions, and the creation of a broad left wing in the labor movement and an energetic campaign for the labor party. The resolution correctly declares there can be no abatement of the struggle against deviations from the line of the Communist International and the Central Executive Committee, and particularly that there can be no compromise with opposition to the reorganization of the party.

The resolution showing that the party is on the road to solving its inner difficulties will put new life and enthusiasm into the whole party membership. It will create a new fighting spirit for participation in the work among the masses. The party must go forward along this line. Every unit of the party should endorse the leadership towards unification of the party, active participation in the class struggle thru work among the masses, which the political committee has given in this resolution. Factional lines must be completely wiped out and the party face its enemies as a unit.

Forward to a united party!

Forward to new victories in establishing the influence of the Communist Party among the working masses!

Forward to the work of revolutionizing the American working class and a united struggle against American capitalism!

Missionaries and Militarism

In the present situation in Syria where the French forces have been waging a losing battle against the Druses and Syrians there is developing a classic example of the intimate connection between missionaries and militarism. American warships lay off the coast at Beirut, while in Lebanon American missionares are playing the loathsome game of French imperialism. Thru the heavy investments of the House of Morgan in France, that country's destiny is bound up with American imperialism. If France is decisively routed from Syria it means that Britain will maneuver to obtain control of that unfortunate country in order to facilitate the development of its interests in the Middle East. That will be a direct blow to American oil interests. Hence both great combinations of American capital operating on foreign soil have immediate interests at stake in the Syrian struggle: Morgan to defend the prestige of France in Europe and Standard Oil to gain an advantage over British oil in the world-wide struggle between these two powers.

Press dispatches relating the burning of an American high school operated by the American presbyterian mission reveal a definite propaganda to prepare the ground for intervention of American armed forces in order to "protect American property and lives."

British forces are standing in readiness in Palestine, just south of Lebanon where an American and French subsidized "christian army" is trying to hold the country against the Druses and Syrians. If United States forces invade the country to protect American missionaires, they will find themselves confronted by British soldiers who can just as readily manufacture a border disturbance as this country can fabricate lurid tales of christian martyrdom, to conceal the greed and avarice of the imperialist bandits. Such a situation creates the preliminaries for a clash between the British and American forces.

In order to avert such a denouement British agents in Syria are demanding that the French mandate for that territory be revoked. Tho not a member of the league the United States will use its influence over countries having permanent and temporary seats on the league council to hold the mandate for France against Britain.

The proletarian and peasant masses of the home countries and the colonies must act decisively against this new threat of world war. Especially in England, France and the United States the working class must relentlessly expose the preparations for a new world slaughter, and tell the imperialist monsters in no uncertain terms that every weapon at our command will be used against their schemes to again lead the workers of the world into the slaughter house.

The Movement for a Labor Party in Japan

The formation of a labor party in Japan, composed of the bulk of the trade union movement, including the farmers' union, was noted in The DAILY WORKER in an article by K. Yamato from Tokyo, a Communist. What the commercial and financial interests think about it is also interesting. The following article from the Japan Chronicle (an English paper published in Kobe, Japan) of Sept. 3, gives a review of Japanese press comments:

A GENERAL meeting of the delegates of proletarian organizations, which was recently held at the Central Public Hall at Nakanoshima, Osaka, passed off without exciting much press comment, though it proved a memorable gathering in that the formation of a proletarian party was formally decided upon on that occasion. We find a few journals commenting on the decisions of the meeting, however. In spite of the fact that the general meeting of the proletarians in Osaka was convened without elaborate preparations, says the Tokyo Asahi, it did much towards helping forward the work of organizing a proletarian party. The decision then reached, that, while neglecting no means to advance the interests and happiness of the proletariat, they should proceed to organize a big proletarian party based on the entire influences of proletarian classes with a view to compassing the perfect development of the proletariat, is a good step forward in the direction of party organization. It also augurs well for the future of the movement that organizations of thinkers, such as the Political Research Society and the Suiheisha, have been admitted into the campaign.

Foreign Examples.

The history of the development of proletarian parties in foreign countries, the Asahi continues, indicates that harmony between labor organizations and associations of thinkers always presented supreme difficulties, notwithstanding the obvious fact that, denuded of the cooperation of the intellectuals, the healthy development of proletarian parties is impossible. How valuable is the co-operation of intellectuals is most eloquently proved by the rapid and healthy development of the movement in England for the organization of a proletarian party which followed the participation of the independent labourites. In such movements labor organizations and associations of intellectuals stand in the relationship of muscles and nerves. Of course, labor organizations form the prop and stay of a proletarian party, but they must needs have the cooperation of the other in order to put their party in a fit form. From this point of view, the promoters of the recent meeting acted wisely in admitting organizations of intellectuals into the new movement. There is nevertheless no disguising the fact that the path of the projected formation of a proletarian party is beset with grave obstacles. The greatest difficulty will probably be experienced in the formulation of the platform and regulations of the new party. It is on record that a great deal of confusion attended the drafting of the platform of the committee of labor delegates, which was the nucleus of the labor party of England. It certainly contains a valuable lesson for the promoters of the present movement to profit by that the views of the right elements always prevailed and indicated the course which the labor party in England has been able to attain its present development. Needless to say, the slogans of a proletarian party must be the promotion of the interests and happiness of the proletariat and the reform of social and economic organizations, and for the realization of their aims, they must ever follow a legitimate and evolutionary course, or otherwise it will be impossible for them to enlist the support of the masses.

Parties Represent Classes.

Turning its attention to the political parties in existence, the Asahi asks them to make no mistake of the fact that the creation of a proletarian party constitutes no menace to the present day parliamentary system, and that it is, on the contrary, helpful in bringing parliamentary politics to a successful consummation. A diet after the enforcement of manhood suffrage would be imperfect without a proletarian party within it. Whatever sophistry they may use, the fact remains that the political parties now existing represent the interests of certain classes only. No apprehension need be entertained about the diet taking on more class color by the inclusion of a proletarian party, for it is to be hoped that thru such parliamentary politics harmony between the classes can best be achieved. It is important that there should always exist powerful proletarian supervision and criticism in the diet.

Struggles for Retention of Power.

The Osaka Asahi notes with satisfaction that the recent meeting at the Central Public Hall brought the formation of a proletarian party within the realms of probability. It is, of course, fully to be expected that many vicissitudes will still have to be gone thru before it becomes an accomplished fact, and that it will take a still longer time for the new party to acquire a sufficiently strong influence to be counted upon in politics. But if the promoters of the new movement go about their work in real earnest and in the right way, there is no reason to doubt that the proletarian party now in embryo will be quickly helped into being and be enabled to grow into a great influence. The chief asset of a proletarian party is that it grows out of the masses and exists for the good of the masses. A study of the history of the growth of the present political parties in Japan reveals the fact that none of them was born with the backing of the populace. They were formed, without exception, by some of the ruling classes with the object of snatching political power, which they had lost, from the hands of others. The late Marquis Okuma's Kaishinto and the late Count Itagaki's Jiyuto were none other than by-products of struggles for power among clan statesmen. The Satsuma and Choshu clans, which produced the largest number of distinguished statesmen at the restoration, wielded supreme power in the early days of Meiji, but the Saga clan, to which Okuma belonged, and the Tosa clan, of which Itagaki was a samurai, were rather left out in the cold. In order to extricate themselves out of this unfavorable position and to supplant the Choshu and Satsuma statesmen in the place of power, both Okuma and Itagaki conceived the idea of forming political parties. Ito was an eminent leader of the most favored clan, Choshu, but when he gradually came to realize that the old methods of competing for power were fast growing ineffective, he resolved on creating a political party himself, and the Seiyukai was called into being under has presidency. Katsura followed Ito's example some time afterwards, and formed the Doshikai, which developed into the Kenseikai.

Why the Parties are Selfish.

Thus it will be seen that all political parties in Japan owed their birth to the political ambition of certain statesmen, not to any sincere desire to improve the conditions of living among the masses. This accounts for the single-eyed devotion of these parties to the promotion of their selfish interests to the neglect of the interests of the masses. Herein lies the inherent weakness of the present political parties, and it is on account of this weakness that they have fallen into disgrace with the populace. A proletarian party, on the other hand has none of this weakness, and this is the reason why its organization is eagerly awaited by the masses. The final aims of politics must be to advance the happiness and interests of the people at large, not by any means to compete for power. If the proletarian party in embryo assiduously endeavors, when it is born, to promote the true interests of the people at large, free from all self-seeking designs, this will invest their actions with supreme moral power, and this moral power is more precious than anything else. It will greatly help the proletarian party to develop until it will finally be able to step into power.

Diverse Interests of Proletarians.

The Yamato says that it is quite natural that the adoption of manhood suffrage should be followed by the creation of a political party devoted in the interests of the proletariat, for thru the instrumentality of such a party the proletarians can hope to maintain and advance their interests and to bring about the establishment of a new order of society by legislative means. Altho the new party will consist of men belonging to the proletariat exclusively, the interests of the component elements will not be in perfect accord, nor will there be full agreement of view in detail on political and other matters. In future, therefore, it may split into several parties, each representing different interests, agrarian, socialist, labor or Communist. It is nevertheless important that these conflicting principles and interests should be harmonized to a certain extent within one and the same party, so that the wishes of the proletarians may be most effectually voiced in the legislature. From this point of view, the example of the labor party of England, which, despite its heterogeneous composition, has managed to attain its present influence by retaining a commendable solidarity in its ranks, is worth following, and the Yamato sincerely hopes that every care will be used by those interested in the new movement to see that there arise no fatal clash between the socialist and anti-socialist elements within the group.

When Will Cotton Goods Be Cheap?

Soviet Primers No. 6.

The Sort of "Soviet Propaganda" that the Government is Telling Its Own Peasants.

ONE of the most interesting of the little booklets that are going out in editions of fifty thousand to the Russian peasant I found not in Moscow at all. I picked it up at a station on the Trans-Siberian railway on my trip to China. There, at the station bookstand were the usual piles of leaflets, scientific, agricultural, political, even tales by Upton Sinclair and Jack London. Then my eye caught the vivid blue and yellow cover of a booklet "When Will Coton Goods be Cheaper?"

I bought it. It cost all of five cents, for it had 64 pages and half a dozen illustrations. And on the inside cover I learned that this booklet was issued in an edition, not of fifty but of one hundred thousand. All at once,—one hundred thousand.

For this is the burning question of the Russian peasant today. No longer land, no longer taxes! He has his land; year by year the land laws have the creases ironed out to suit him more fully. Even his taxes have been grumbling cannot claim that they are as high as under the tzar. But cotton goods,—every peasant must buy it. It stays scarce in quantity and high in price. He growls that somehow these city folks always find a way to rob him.

THE little "propaganda" booklet, designed for peasants libraries, takes the bull by the horns "Why is cotton so high? Why is bread so cheap in comparison? The rich peasants say that all poverty comes from the Soviet power and the Communists. The priests say that god does all this to punish the peasants for throwing out the landlords. The mensheviks and social revolutionaries say that it comes from over-throwing the constituent assembly, where every one, workers, peasants, landlords, priests, might have agreed in peace together.

"But now lets talk seriously, and with facts and figures. Cotton is by far the chief goods consumed by the peasant. In 1924 we produced 806 meters of cotton goods, but only 28 million of wool and 27 million of linen. We use fifteen times as much cotton as the other two together. Let's see, then, what is the trouble with cotton."

Cotton Shortage Began Before War.

IN the decades before the war the consumption of cotton grew enormously thruout the world. Between 1884 and 1900 about 2 million tons a year was worked up into goods. In the next years it increased to 3 million tons already by the 1908-1914 to more than 4 million tons a year.

A shortage of raw cotton began to be felt. For every land people were turning from homespun to the thinner, cheaper, more beautiful goods of the factory. The world number of spindles rapidly increased: 135 million in 1911, and already 142 million just two years later. Seven million more spindles added in two years. In the past twenty years they doubled in France, increased ten fold in Germany, fifty fold in Belgium, one hundred fold in Denmark. In Japan formerly there was not a single pound of cotton imported. But already in 1910 she was importing from America 70,000 tons.

So fast was the use of cotton goods increasing before the war. But with the war, and the turning of factories to war uses, and the blockade of various countries, the production of cotton fell sharply. Even the rich textile country of England was producing only thirty meters per inhabitant per year. Poland, surrounded by armies, produced only 2 meters a person. Russia, which before the war produced 16 meters a person, now produced only one. Not enough even to mend clothes with, to say nothing of new ones.

Whence Comes High Cost?

AN arshin of cotton print, undyed, used to cost at the Konshin factory 11 kopeks. After the war it cost 33. Exactly where does the extra cost come from?

If we examine the figures, we shall see that of the eleven kopeks, 8 formerly went for raw cotton, 2 for wages, one for repairs and use of machinery. But of the 33 kopeks, 23 goes for raw cotton, 4 for wages, and 6 for use of machinery. Thus we see that wages have doubled, but the cost of raw cotton has increased three times and that of machinery six times. This last is because of our worn machines and the need of buying new ones on very short term payments. But the really big increase, which most affects the selling cost of goods, is the price of raw cotton.

Even in England cotton goods cost now twice as much as before the war,—this surely was not caused by the wrath of god or by the Bolsheviks. But in our country there are three special reasons which make our cotton dearer than abroad.

THE first of these special reasons is obviously, the destruction of our industry by civil war. The destruction of irrigated cotton districts of Turkestan is most important, but we will speak of this later. Here we speak of factory production. Steam power, because of the cost of fuel, rose three fold. Freight and general transport rose eight fold. Repairs on machines, three fold. Besides this, owing to the worn out machines, the production on them is less. To fight these troubles we are installing new machines, and electric power. But this is a costly process for we have little capital and must pay very high rates of interest.

The second special cause of expense is the disorganization of the trading apparatus. Even the cooperatives have too many middlemen. The Central Cooperative sends out goods for 100 kopeks. The state co-operatives pass them on at 174 kepeks; the regional ones at 191 kopeks, and the village cooperatives stores sell them at 216 kopeks if they are near the city, or 243 if they are far away. By the time it gets to the peasant, the goods cost two and a half times as much as in the center.

These were the figures in September 1923, the very worst time. Then the government began very severe examination of all these middleman, with their cumbersome apparatus. By better factory organization the price at the factory came down to 24 instead of 33 kopeks an arshin. Fuel and oil were made cheaper; factories began working full speed, which is always cheaper. In the trading apparatus many economies were made, but not enough. This also, must be the work of the peasants themselves, through their own cooperatives.

But—the Raw Cotton.

BUT more than 70% of the cost of cotton goods comes from the raw cotton. Even our own cotton costs enough, but in the past three years we have had to buy American cotton, and this is still more expensive. Ours costs 23 roubles a pood, but American cotton costs 27 to 38 roubles, according to the kind. In 1924 we had to buy 3,507,000 poods, (60,000 tons) of this. And to this cost must be added two to four roubles freight per pood.

FURRIERS FAVOR LABOR PARTY

World Labor Saves Rakosi

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE history of labor trials in the United States would make quite a sizable volume and one worth possessing. It is a job that needs being done. Perhaps it might open the eyes of those deluded workers who believe this is and was the land of the free. I am afraid that some of our fellow workers are of the opinion that aliens create all the "trouble" for the employers. This is the impression the wily employers try to create. Of course it never occurs to Henry Dubb, that we are all aliens in the strict sense of the word. Those who are not aliens, the Indians, are driven out intc the "wide open spaces" and spend their lives trying to eke out an existence and hold on to their eyebrows, lest our Nordic 100 per cent Americans might steal them.

THE story of the American labor movement would convince the American worker that our masters never bothered much whether the strike leader was Nordic, a Celt or an Ethiopian. When an individual interfered with his mass robbery of the workers, he did not go and look up his family three but he took steps to get rid of the particular limb that interfered with his pilferage. Respectable editors, preachers and goose step professors do not call the art of exploitation by those uncouth terms, but thank the stars we are not respectable and let us hope you have

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

ARTICLE VI.

HAZLETON, Pa., Nov. 18.—This city, the third largest in the anthracite, with a population of some 35,000, is built on the backs of the miners who work the properties of the Lehigh Valley Coal company which with their breaker houses, gallows frames and huge dumps of slate and waste, towering hundreds of feet into the air, form a three-quarter circle around the town.

The mines are idle but the huge culm pile lying in the valley is being loaded and hauled away to New Jersey where angry coal consumers will curse as they try to make this "buckwheat" anthracite burn. The culm pile looks from the hill to be about a mile in length and at $18 per ton represents millions of dollars.

Death a Casual Affair.

A thirteen year-old boy was shooting stones at a milk bottle on the roadside while a flock of geese swam and honked in a pool of dirty water. We was a miner's son and his father had died of miner's asthma, he informed me in the casual manner in which life and death are discussed in all mining camps.

But, he added, this was before the union had "made the companies put beter air in the mines." Things are not so bad now, he said. He wanted to be a miner and in another year could go to work but his mother was going to keep him in school. She

BOSTON, Nov. 18.—The International Furriers' Union convention in its closing session here unanimously adopted a resolution favoring the formation of a labor party based on the trade unions and including all other working class organizations on a local, state and national scale.

In the resolution, the furriers point out, that the LaFollette movement is a movement of the middle-class business men and professionals and that it has nothing in common with the workers and emphasizes the necessity of organizing the workers into a class party.

In the elections to the general executive board, the Kaufman machine which had been thoroly discredited by the left wing as incapable of leading the organization, was forced to retire and support the elements following Sorkin, who has posed as a progressive.

In the elections to the general executive board, the left wing was able to elect two members of the board, despite the united front presented by Kaufman and Sorkin.

Kaufman Supports Sorkin.

The fear that the left wing under the leadership of Gold may dominate the union, the Kaufman gang threw its support to the Sorkinites, who readily accepted it. They realized that the presence of Gold as vice-president and Skolkin as secretary on the board would mean that the resolutions, which were presented by the

LONDON WORKERS DEMAND RELEASE OF COMMUNISTS ON TRIAL FOR SEDITION

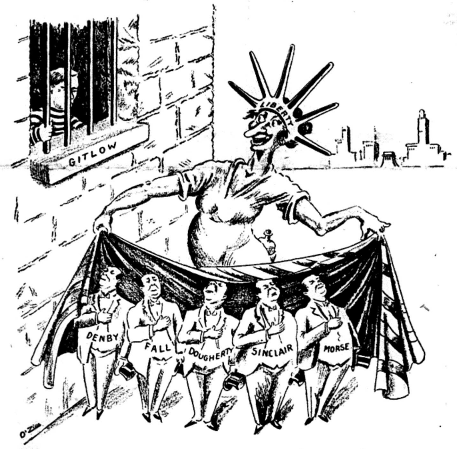
LONDON, Nov. 18.—Several hundred Communists and sympathizers marched thru the streets of London to the Bow Street court house to register their protest against the trial of the twelve arrested members of the Communist Party and Young Communist League of Great Britain singing the International and the Red Flag.

The Communist fife and drum corps headed the procession. The police reserves were called out to disperse the demonstrating workers upon whom they bore down with their clubs, beating a number of the demonstrators very severely.

American "Liberty" Has Its Favorites



Members of I. L. G. W.! Fight Bureaucrats' Split!

That the bureaucracy of the needle trades unions are desperately trying to avoid complete defeat is seen in the facts revealed by the following statement issued by the National Committee of the Needle Trades Section of the Trade Union Educational League, whose proposal to prevent a split by the reactionary officialdom is set forth below:

• • • •

TO ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE I. L. G. W. U.:

Fellow Workers:—Lately at a meeting of Local No. 10, Cutters, Dubinsky, the manager and one of the leading lights of the Sigman machine, openly threatened to withdraw the cutters from the joint board and to fight the other crafts of our industry, as a means to maintaining control over his and his friends' jobs in the local.

He participated in the objection and examination committee of the joint board to vote down opposition candidates till the every end, but then withdrew the cutters' candidates from the general election, despite the peace agreement which he declared, at a previous meeting, he accepts and in spite of the decision of the joint board to hold general elections.

During the election of delegates to the convention, he and his executive board flatly refused to live up to the peace agreement by barring the candidates from watching the balloting as provided for in the agreement and requested by the opposition candidates. He excluded them even from being at the count as provided for by their constitution.

CUTTERS' LOCAL ALREADY FUNCTIONS SEPARATELY.

There are no joint board business agents from the cutters and Dubinsky is attempting to take over all complaints and instructing underhandedly the cutters not to take orders from the joint board. Evidently he is preparing for an open split after the convention. This is in line with the policy adopted at a secret meeting of the bureaucracy at which the ousted officials as well as those still in office participated with Sigman's partnership.

According to this policy, as soon as the membership quiets down, the bureaucracy will attempt to regain their power and old jobs. NOW THAT WE ARE ONLY A FEW MONTHS OFF FROM A DECISIVE STRUGGLE WITH THE EMPLOYERS, THEY ARE MAKING A SCRAP OF PAPER OF THE PEACE AGREEMENT AND AGAIN PREPARING FOR A NEW CIVIL WAR WITHIN THE UNION.

Fellow workers! The left accepted the peace in good faith. For the sake of unity against the employers in the big struggle to come. But the bureaucracy is preparing for war. A skunk cannot change his footprints, neither can the bureaucracy change their methods. The rank and file has beaten them to a frazzle once, it can finish the job and be done with it.

The cutters need the other crafts to maintain their conditions, and they know it well enough. If it were not for the power of the union as a whole, the bosses would be doing their own cutting in the one and two-men houses (which are the bulk of the trade) long before now. In a fight against the other crafts, the bosses would be the only winners. United we lick the bosses and improve the conditions for all crafts.

The cutters are suffering from short seasons and all the other evils the same as the pressers, operators, finishers. Therefore their interests are the same. The threat of loss of jobs by opposing Dubinsky is no more. The new leadership, we are sure, will see to that. Therefore it is up to every worker to convince the cutters of the necessity of unity against the employers, of the necessity of an aggressive policy against the employers which the old leadership is incapable of, of the necessity of having a unified centralized organization and not separate autonomous locals; not crafts, but all workers in the shops to control and elect the officials of the joint board.

If all workers in the shops will do their duty, this new danger will be eliminated together with the Dubinskys and the rest, and we will then be able to build a truly strong, clean union.

Anti-Imperialist League for Independence Move

The All-America Anti-Imperialist League sent a telegram last night to Washington inviting Sergio Osmena, Teodore Kalaw and the other members of the Filipino independence mission to the United States to address public meetings on behalf of Filipino freedom in Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Cleveland.

Manuel Gomez, secretary of the league, announces that his organization is prepared to go ahead with the preparation of these meetings as soon as word is received from Washington.

"The visit of the Filipino mission," he declares, "again places the issue of freedom for the 11,500,000 people inhabiting the Philippine islands squarely before the workers of this country, who have always declared themselves against the maintenance of Wall Street's 'American empire.' RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED PROVIDE BASIS FOR GREATER STRUGGLES IN AMERICAN LABOR MOVEMENT

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 18.—In view of the fact that the resolutions adopted by the special convention of the International Furriers' Union in its closing sesions here are of national importance, The DAILY WORKER is requested to publish them in full. They should be the basis for the urging of similar declarations in other labor gatherings, especially the stand taken on the labor party. This and the resolutions for the recognition of Soviet Russia, amalgamation, the organization of the unorganized and against class collaboration, are as follows:

Forward to the Labor Party.

WHEREAS, The organized workers in their struggle for higher wages, shorter hours, and better working conditions have found themselves forced to combat not only the employers directly, but also the government thru all its agencies, anti-labor legislation, Daugherty injunctions, railroad labor boards, use of troops and police in strikes; and

Whereas, The entire history of the struggles of the working class shows that so long as the powers of the government are allowed to remain in the hands of the capitalist class, as at present in the United States, just so long will these powers of government be used against the workers; and

Whereas, It is necessary, in order for the workers to develop the political power of their class, to build up a political organization of their own, a labor party, which will draw the millions of workers into political activities and organize them for political struggles against the capitalists, and

Whereas, The LaFollette progressive movement, which is devoted to the interests of middle class business elements and large farmers, cannot serve as a party of the workers and poor farmers and has completely betrayed those workers who saw in it a substitue for a labor party; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the International Furriers' Union herewith favors the formation of a labor party based upon the trade unions and including as affiliated sections all other political organizations of a working class nature, upon a local, state, and national basis.

For Recognition of Soviet Russia.

WHEREAS, The Russian government has withstood, for almost eight years, all the attacks launched against it from the enemies within its own boundaries, as well as from the organized capitalist governments of the world, hostile to it and constantly carrying on fresh forms of struggle against it, has demonstrated by its successful resistance that it has the support of the masses of Russian workers and farmers; and

Whereas, The delegation of the British trade unions to Russia has just published an extensive report pointing out the tremendous strides forward being made by the workers and peasants of Russia with their newly established society, and giving definite proof that while the workers of the rest of the world are suffering from a declining standard of living those in Russia

BERLIN—(By Mail.)—The Red Front Fighters at Berlin, at a huge mass demonstration in the Neue Welt Hall, the largest auditorium in Berlin, unfurled a banner to be presented to the Moscow workers, while 10,000 men and women toilers cheered and from 12,000 to 15,000 more tried vainly to jam their way into the hall. The tremendous demonstration for Soviet Russia was conclusive proof that the workers of Berlin will oppose with all their powers the Locarno alliance against the first workers' state. The demonstration was called to send a greeting to Soviet Russia on the eighth anniversary

Shachtman who is pledged to support the amalgamation resolution and the other left wing resolutions presented to the convention and fight corruption in the union was elected president. Shachtman is in the left group of the Sorkin following.

Benjamin Gold, who was defeated by the new alliance of the Kaufman machine with the Sorkinites, has declared that the left wing will fight against the present board as it cannot be trusted to carry out the desires of the membership and that this alliance of the Sorkin and Kaufman machines was nothing but a maneuver of the Kaufman machine which will attempt to recapture power in the union at a future date. He showed that the tactics, which will be used by the new alignment, will be one of sabotage of the New York joint board and the sabotage of the left wing resolutions in order to discredit the Communists and prepare a come-back for the Kaufman machine.

Must Fight Kaufmanism.

He further pointed out that the left wing would lend their support to the president of the board, Shachtman, only on the condition that he fight Kaufmanism and against any attempt of the Sorkin machine to bring Kaufman back to power.

Delegate Skolnick was defeated for the secretaryship of the union as well as Gold for the vice-presidency thru the betrayal of the rank and file by the so-called progressives, who at the first opportunity that presented itself in the convention jumped onto the band-wagon of those who have formed an alliance with the Kaufman machine. Among these so-called progressives were Gross of Local 5, New York, and Englander of Toronto. Winick, a Sorkinite, from the same local as Gold, was elected to the vice-presidency, by a vote of 43 for and 29 against. Skolkin was defeated by Woll, a Kaufmanite, for the secretaryship of the board.

Executive Board Make-Up.

The executive board as it is constituted today consists of two Kaufmanites, four Sorkinites, two wavering between Sorkin and Kaufman and two left wingers. Two other members of the board will fall to Kaufman, as the delegates from St. Paul and Montreal did not accept and elections in these locals will fall to the Kaufman machine.

The general executive board by no means represents the dominant opinion of the union. The board is a federated body in which the eleven largest locals are represented on the board by one representative— the vice-president of their local.

The resolution introduced by the left wing endorsing the Freiheit and The DALIY WORKER was defeated by the convention due to the "bargain" struck by the two machines.

The resolution calling for the release of the political prisoners was adopted with a tail added by the new alliance of reactionary elements, calling for the freeing of the counter-revolutionary socialists who tried to destroy the workers' Soviets in Russia.

Gold declared that counter-revolutionaries were not the same as imprisoned workers in capitalist countries and urged the adoption of the resolution without the tail.

Drive For Labor Party.

The adoption of the resolution favoring the formation of the labor party, places the delegates of the Furriers' Union in a position where they must carry on an active fight before convention for the formation of a labor party to represent the interests bor Party to represent the interests of the workers in this country and will be the basis for the formation of propaganda groups to agitate for such a political organization in this country.

Oppose Kaufman Collaboration.

During the discussion of the convention at Monday session on the resolution introduced by the New York joint board and recommended for adoption by the resolutions committee on class collaboration, in which the Kaufman policy of "hearty cooperation" and all policies which sought to destroy the spirit of the class struggle was condemned, the machine tried to create the impression that the left wing progressives were utopians, dreamers and impractical while the machine supporters were hard, practical-minded people.

In the course of his attack on the left wing he asked for a definition of class collaboration which was graphically portrayed to him by delegate Gross, one of the New York left wing, who reminded Kaufman of his opening speech in which he urged cooperation between the bosses and the workers, and also of his action in recognizing the use of injunctions in the Millman case in Boston as well as collaboration of bosses and union representatives to discharge a worker in Chicago. The resolution was adopted, unanimously, the machine supporters fearing to show their weakness.

The resolution against class collaboration education and a program of workers education promoting the class struggle and recommending schools similar to the Workers' School in New York and Chicago was refered to the incoming general executive board. The resolution for the Rand School was adopted by a majority of a few votes, the real left wing voting 28 against it.

Fake Telegram Raised.

The committee to investigate the fake telegram, purporting to come from the Workers Party in Chicago, reported that it was unable to discover anything and that it would have to go to Chicago to further investigate the matter.

Gold ridiculed the entire matter showing that the machine was raising the bugaboo of outside interference to cover its own mistakes. He showed that the Communist Party has nothing to hide from anyone and that the Workers (Communist) Party was a functioning organization and not a dead body like the socialist party.

Kaufman had appointed a number of the right wing progressives to this investigation committee, whom he seeks to arouse into an open battle against the left wing by flaunting this fake telegram. All the delegates and workers at this gathering laugh at this political maneuver on the part of the machine.

Place Youth In "Felony Row."

SAN FRANCISCO,—(FP)—Nov. 18.—The accident that the victim was a rich man's son has laid bare a pernicious practice on the part of the San Francisco police. A 16 year old runaway high school boy from Tacoma appealed to the police for shelter over night. In response he was placed in "felonk row" with men awaiting trial for murder, burglary and other major crimes, and was obliged to stay in this environment until he was rescued by a detective the next day. How many young boys who do not happen to come from wealthy families receive their first introduction to crime by this method can only be guessed.

the fascist government of Hungary trembled before the avalanche of protest let loose by the workers of the world when Horthy announced his intention to hang Rakosi and over one-hundred other workers arrested with him. Detailed information has not yet been received, but the cablegram indicates that in any event the proposed executions will not take place.

Threatened with Death.

The fight to save Rakosi and his comrades was a bitter one. Immediately after the arrests were made, Horthy, thinking that he had a clear road ahead, announced that the defendants would be tried before drum head court martial and the sentences executed a few hours after the decisions were rendered. Those sentences weer already prepared. The white terrorists had decided that Rakosi and his comrades should die.

But Horthy did not have his own way. The International Class War Prisoners' Aid, with millions of members thruout the world immediately launched a campaign of protest against the proposed executions. The British trade union movement and labor party called on the Hungarian government to stay its bloody hand. The workers thruout the rest of Europe joined the protest.

The Prussian diet refused to receive Horthy's minister of education until the threatened execution of Rakosi, peoples' commissar in the Hungarian Soviet government was called off. Socialists, Communists, democrats and centrists joined in the vote. The question was raised in the Checko-Slovakian parliament. Everywhere the arm of the International Class War Prisoners' Aid reached to save the life of a revolutionary fighter.

I. L. D. Led the Fight in U. S.

In the United States, the International Labor Defense took the leadership in the campaign. Immediately on receipt of a cable from Berlin the I. L. D. organized mass meetings, demonstrations and cabled protests to the foreign office of the Hungarian government. A committee of liberals headed by Upton Sinclair and Roger Baldwin, demanded that Horthy call off the court martials and give the defendants civil trials. Thousands of telegrams poured into the Hungarian legation at Washington. Mass meetings were held in dozens of large American cities, the Hungarian consulate in New York and Chicago were picketed and a demonstration was held in front of the Hungarian legation in Washington.

The world wide campaign finally convinced Horthy and his Wall Street backers that the execution of Rakosi would arouse enough indignation thruout the world to sweep his rotten government out of existence. He compromised and thus gave further proof of what the workers can accomplish when they have the will to act.

an equal antipathy to respectability, of that kind.

WHAT we would like to drive into the nob of the average worker—and he is almost everybody—is, that the employers are more interested in making profit out of a worker's energy than in tracing his genealogy. If they can make more profit out of a black man than out of a white man they will employ the black man. Ditto, a yellow, brown or green man. There are oodles of the latter and they are not all in Ireland.

LET us take the I. W. W.'s for instance. There isn't a dumbell from Cape Cod to the real estate sharks of Los Angeles who does not believe that the wobblies come from Russia. (They used to come from Germany during the war!) Yet the roster of an I. W. W. convention in the days of its prime reads like the guest list of a New England Mayflower celebration. But the capitalist papers create the impression that everybody who is against them is a foreigners and the Henry Dubbs' are taught to say that those disatisfied people should "go back to where they came from."

HOW would this work? C. E. Ruthenberg, would go back to Cleveland, Eugene V. Debs to Terre Haute, William Z. Foster, to Massachusetts, Anita Whitney, could not go any farther than where she is, Fred Merrick, might hop over from Pittsburgh to West Virginia—well, come to think of it about the only prominent alien, who would have to travel quite a distance on a deportation warrant is Secretary of Labor Davis, the Welshman, who is saddled with the job of deporting the rest of us. (By the way, it might interest some of those who are in "durance vile," to know that Davis gets an "iron man" which means a dollar, for every sucker who joins the Loyal Order of the Moose.)

EVERY worker is an alien in the eyes of the capitalists except a fellow like a certain scissor bill, who boasted that in seventeen years he was never late for work, and so concerned was he over the fortunes of the firm, that he refused an increase in wages of three dollars a week, lest his employers go broke. He was getting twelve. By the way two of the owners of the firm died from alcoholism. They could afford the luxury out of what they robbed the scissor bill off. The father of the two loyal followers of Bacchus was a model christian, gave liberal contributions to the salvation army and promptly fired any of his employes who had the temerity to ask for an increase in wages. The man who was never late for work—if man he was—was never fired, and was never arrested for having violated the criminal syndicalist law. He was not born in the United States, but he was never called an alien.

I BELIEVE it is quite clear from the above that the employing class has no more regard for the sweat of on addle-pated 100 per cent American than it has for the muscle of a native of Zululand, provided both are equally efficient in making his pocket bulge with coin of the realm. Our class war prisoners are descended from every race under the sun. If you want to be a loyal slave, just keep quiet, work hard when you get a job, buy a used tin can out of which you can make a shield for that part of your anatomy which was made to be kicked. You will need the armor. The boss will test his boot on it. You will be first in war and last at the peace table. But you will have the satisfaction of dying a loyal supporter of capitalist civilization.

IF I remember rightly it was Teddy Roosevelt, who uttered the famous saying: "What is the constitution among friends?" He said a mouthful. Take free speech, free press and free assemblage for instance. Those rights are written into our constitution but—take advantage fo them at your peril! Did you ever hear of the policeman who listened to a soap boxer quoting Thomas Jefferson, mistook the orator for the patron saint of the democratic party, took him to the police station and after tapping him on the head with his club charged him with disorderly conduct? "I heard a lot about that scoundrel," declared a republican police court judge. "I believe it was he who killed Abraham Lincoln. If the statute of limitations was not in force I would have him indicted for murder. As it is, sixty days for violating the constitutional provision against violating traffic regulations is the worst I can do for him!" The truth of this story is not vouched for. Tho the man who told it to me is neither a democrat nor a republican. He is a Communist and therefore liable to be impartial.

LEST people might think we are prejudiced against the United States, a few words on the British Empire are in order. Surely nobody would be mean enough to suspect us of not being able to give J. Bull an even break. John used to be the champion of free speech, everywhere except in Ireland, India, Egypt, South Africa, etc. In England however, he was a expansive to radical propaganda as a prohibition agent to a bootlegger's dollar. Why? Simply because he had nothing much to fear. His slaves could find something to put in their feed bags and they were used to being slaves. But John has changed. So have his slaves. He is irritable because they are hungry. And John, changed man, opens his jails and jams them full of Communists and other evid doers who claim that the workers having produced all wealth are entitled to it all. Just the same as is done here in the United States.

A. C. W. MEMBERS INDIGNANT OVER POGROM REGIME

Impromptu Shop Meetings Show Anger

News of the slugging at last Friday's general membership meeting of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' of Chicago, and the murderous attack on Sunday morning's private gathering in the Biltmore Hall by business agents, other officials and sluggers, has spread like wildfire thru the shops of Chicago.

Members of the A. C. W. are showing considerable excitement over the threat of a terror regime of pogroms against the members by the officials.

In many shops the last two or three days, workers are reported as discussing during the noon hour the meaning of the sluggings to themselves and their interests in resisting "readjustment" wage cuts.

Indignation in the Shops.

These discussions in many shops are taking the form of shop meetings, where great indignation is raging and many questions are being voiced as to whether members have any voice in their union or whether the officials are czars.

Such questions as the following are being asked by the members:

"Is there no free speech in our organization? Can we not discuss the questions and problems of our union at our meetings or elsewhere without fear of being slugged? Do our officials get paid for slugging our brothers and sisters?"

Others inquire: "Are we to pay a $25 assessment for the emergency fund to fight wage cuts, or is that money only going to be used to hire sluggers to beat up our brothers and sisters that dare to speak up on union questions?"

These are the leading questions that form the talk of the A. C. W. members in the shops.

To bring Charges.

At the meeting of Local 39 on Tuesday evening well attended by the membership, some of the slugged members, far from being suppressed, stood up and announced they would bring charges under the union law against the officials and other sluggers involved in the gangster attacks. They prefered to take it up in the union and had refused to give any information to the police when they were arrested last Sunday.

American Labor Offers Its Aid to Fight of Filipinos for Liberty

American imperialism. Latin-Americans have already expressed their solidarity with the aspirations of the struggling Filipino people. It is now up to the American workers. The presence in this country of a mission elected by the Filipino people to voice their demand for independence here, in the homeland of imperialism, must become a rallying center for a concerted struggle.

"The Philippine islands constitute the biggest and one of the oldest of American colonies. 'Independence for the Philippines!' must be a foremost slogan of any real fight against American imperialism. The All-America Anti-Imperialist League will give all co-operation to the Filipino independence mission in its fight for freedom and will consistently raise the issue, not only in the United States, but in Latin-America as well."

The mission now in Washington was elected by the Philippine legislature last August and arrived late in December. It includes some of the founders of the nationalist movement, graybeards who are known in every corner of the islands. A second group, with Senate President Manuel Quezon at its head, is due in the United States within a short time. When this group arrives, there will be in this country practically every one of the important figures of the Filipino natoinalist party.

Some criticism of Osmena and Quezon has been heard from time to time in the Philippines not because of opposition to their demand for Filipino independence, but because, it was complained, they did not carry on the struggle determinedly enough to suit the Filipino people, who feel that their independence is not a subject for debate with the bought agents of Wall Street who sit in the United States congress, but a fighting issue which can be settled only by struggle. One fact, however, stands out above all others the Filipino people desire their freedom, and the presence of the independence mission here is a symbol of that desire.

Mask of "Democracy" Is Being Stripped from Face of British Capitalist Rule

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, vaunted British "democracy" is under fire on two fronts. In the house of commons the militant laborite members are attacking the tory government for its support of the fascisti on the one hand and on the other its attack against the Communists, the latter being but part of its carefully planned onslaught against the whole left wing of the British labor movement. At the same time the farcical trial of the 12 Communists in "Old Bailey," notorious court of British oppression, as it proceeds knocks every prop from under so-called English "liberties."

• • • •

It is significant, however, that not only the ruling class of Baldwin, Chamberlain and Lloyd George, fears this unmasking, but also the betrayers of labor in the ranks of the workers, like Thomas and MacDonald, who join the tories and liberals, in approving the attacks on the Communists.

Thomas takes the same position as Green, Woll, "Majah" Berry and other American labor officials who openly show that they love the capitalists more than the workers. But when the British fascists seized and damaged a motor van load of Daily Heralds, they forced Thomas to show his hand. The Daily Herald is the organ of the Labor Party and the Trade Union Congress and Thomas couldn't dodge the issue. But instead of an attack on British tory rule, at the first session of parliament, Monday, he made a plea to Premier Baldwin to temper the ferocity of the fascisti lest it injure the imperialist government. This is the way Thomas put it:

> "J. H. Thomas asked Mr. Baldwin whether he was aware that widespread dissatisfaction existed among the British public at the action taken by the director of public prosecution regarding four 'national fascisti' who admitted seizing and damaging a motor van belonging to the Daily Herald, and whether Mr. Baldwin would give an explanation on the matter in view of the serious danger that this action of the fascisti MIGHT DESTROY PUBLIC CONFIDENCE IN THE IMPARTIAL ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE."

Thomas weeps for the "dear public" as copiously as any American "labor lieutenant" of capitalism, who denies there is a working class and a class war. But every day's development is against them all.

The government replied to Thomas that all four of the fascisti bandits had been arrested. Three of these, however, have been dismissed on their "good behaviour." It is declared the fourth is being held because of failure to pay a $100 fine imposed "for carrying a revolver." It is not stated how long he will be held before he will be turned loose to join the other three in new anti-labor assaults. Revolvers, blackjacks, daggers and clubs are the weapons of the British fascisti, in common with those of their Italian counterparts. To use them is no serious crime. If it is done in support of the capitalist state, which means against workers, it is no crime at all.

But in "Old Bailey," Sir Douglas M. Hogg, attorney general for the crown, takes an entirely different attitude in the case of the Communists. No revolvers were found in the raid on the Communist headquarters. But the police took away plenty of good Communist literature that his majesty's officers considered highly seditious.

It is perfectly permissible to criticize and complain against the king's government, after the fashion of MacDonald and Thomas. They will be permitted all the free speech they desire to carry on this harmless attack. But to demand the abolition of the king's government and the inauguration of Soviet rule, that is beyond the pale of free speech, or any other civil liberty. British labor will thus learn that the free speech it enjoys under capitalism is of no benefit to it. American workers will discover the same thing. They will learn that every idea that threatens the overthrow of capitalist rule is illegal in the eyes of the capitalist state. But by that test such ideas will be accepted by the whole working class and become beacon lights on labor's march towards its own emancipation.

WORKERS CHEER PURCELL WORLD UNITY MESSAGE

New York Labor to Send Delegation to Russia

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Six thousand workers filling two of the largest halls in New York City, gave Albert A. Purcell, President of the International Federation of Trade Unions, one of the greatest ovations ever afforded a labor leader from abroad. Never once at a loss for a phrase and with exacting conciseness, Purcell formulated for his audiences the revolutionary role of militant trade unionism. At both New Star Casino and Central Opera House the vast crowds took up the cry of world trade union unity and unanimously seconded Purcell's suggestion for a labor delegation from America to Soviet Russia.

Abolish Capitalism.

The climax of Purcell's appeal for world trade union unity came when he said, "Wherever capitalism has planted its root, whatever parts of the earth capitalism enters for the purpose of exploiting human labor, our duty is to plant the trade union organizations of a militant and energetic type for the purpose of uniting the workers of all lands for the stopping of the imperialist tide and the eventual consumation of the task of emansipating the working class. We will be satisfied with nothing less than the abolition of capitalism and the world supremacy of the working class."

Coming to the inclusion of the Russian unions in the great international movement the speaker said, "The Russian trade unions are as bona fide as the American, the British, the French or any other trade unions. It is the view of the British Trades Union Congress that the united world movement cannot be achieved without the 6,000,000 Russian trade unionists. And we are in favor of their inclusion not only because of their numerical strength but even more because of their vast achievements and their great experience in administrating industry, the principle task with which they are charged under the new regime."

Speaking of the prejudice existing against Soviet Russia, Purcell said it largely emanated from the fact that those who do not work under the Soviets have no vote, that no more millionaires are made and landlords can no longer collect rents.

Raise Funds for Delegation.

At both meetings a resolution was unanimously adopted declaring that a workers' delegation be organized and sent to investigate conditions in Russia on behalf of the American workers. In addition to approving the resolution the combined audiences contributed more than $1,100 in a collection to start a fund to send the delegation.

Morgan Makes Loan to Fascist Italy

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Conferences that are now being held in New York between the representatives of the J. P. Morgan and the Italian fascist government mission, headed by Count Volpi, are preparing to launch a $50,000,000 loan for the fascist power within the next two weeks.

Tho several banking firms have attempted to get the privilege of shaking the shekels out of the pockets of small investors, it is understood that Morgan will do the underwriting of this loan. Morgan is also advancing a second loan of $50,000,000 to Italy so that the Mussolini government can stabilize its exchange credit.

I. W. W. MEET TALKS BY-LAW ALTERATIONS

Debts of Lower Units Are Investigated

The 17th general convention of the Industrial Workers of the World yesterday, discussed the advisability of the cancellation of uncollectable indebtedness of subordinate parts of the organization to the general organization, electing a committee to examine all accounts to determine their status. Most of the day was given over to discussion of miner constitutional alterations.

The printer's devil in The DAILY WORKER office on Tuesday played a couple of tricks with the story. Over the paragraph concerning Delegate Mincoff's remarks the sub-head "Opposes Dictators" was transformed to "Approves Dictators," which is quite contrary to the delegate's opinion. Also, in summarizing Chairman Francezon's remarks, a slug of type dropped out, which made the delegate appear to say something quite different than he did.

With Them, Not With Their Views.

Francezon had stated that when the workers of other lands were fighting against the capitalists, the I. W. W. should co-operate with them in the fight, regardless of their political views. The mistake made it read that the I. W. W. should "co-operate with their political views."

It was learned that on Friday the convention received the report of P. J. Welinder, who was general secretary-treasurer pro tem and member of the General Executive Board until he resigned in July. Some indignation arose over the circulation of the report in the months prior to the convention by private means around the country.

The report was very lengthy and condemnatory of almost everyone who held or holds any influential position, except, of course, Welinder himself. In general it charged that the officials were "dictators," grafters and Communists, and it is freely predicted that the report shows Welinder is going over to the emergency program split.

Dual Unionism Expensive.

Welinder scatters his charges about with free hand, and reports are that when he failed of evidence he was rich in interpretation. One of the charges, learned authentic from other sources, concerns the dual union attacks by the Building Construction Workers' Industrial Union 330 on the Structural Iron Workers' Union in New York.

Welinder, however, was not opposed to the dualism, but only its expense account which was increased by salaries to questionable organizers of $66 a week, with no results in breaking up the Iron Workers' Union even at that rate. He charges that the union spent over $1,000 on the attempt.

Welinder also resents that the Communists have a strong influence in the I. W. W. in checking the anarchistic campaign of slanderous attacks against Soviet Russia, which he interpreted as the "truth about Russia."

Flirting with the E. P.

In the view of some I. W. members, Welinder's report is his apologia for "going emergency" since he started out with the Rowan split a year ago as chairman of Rowan's convention, came over to the regular organization only because it was obviously the stronger, and now has gone to Europe where he writes friendly articles in the papers belonging to the Anarchist International with which the split is affiliated.

The delegates decided that Welinder should be instruced to come back and face those he accuses and prove his charges to the next convention.

TOOHEY COMING TO SPEAK HERE ON COAL STRIKE

The workers of Chicago will be given the opportunity to get first hand information on the conditions in the anthracite strike fields when Pat Toohey, young strike leader, will speak next Tuesday, Nov. 24 at Northwest Hall, corner North and Western avenues, at 8 p. m.

Besides Toohey, Alex Reid, secretary of the Progressive Miner's Committee, who together with Toohey were arrested and just recently released from jail for their activities in the strike, will speak. Reid is well known, particularly among the miners in Illinois, where for years he has been carrying on a bitter struggle against the reactionary Farrington machine.

Wm. F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, who is at present touring the anthracite strike zone, will be back in time to give us information fresh from the field of struggle.

Admission is free. The meeting is under the auspices of the Progressive Miners' Committee.

The Movement for World Trade Union Unity

By Tom Bell

This is the sixth instalment of a series of articles dealing with the question of World Trade Union Unity. This instalment deals with the Steps Toward World Trade Union Unity. Following instalments will deal with the American Federation of Labor and Unity, and What to Do For Unity.

The Steps Toward World Trade Union Unity.

"Regardless of nationality, race, color and political and religious creeds, the working class has always been insipred by one idea—the overthrow of capitalist society, built on slavery, exploitation and violence. In this struggle of labor against capital, the working class can win only by mustering all their forces against the common enemy, bound in one proletarian strong organization. This is why for the working class, in order to save itself from economic enslavement and from the menace of war—unity is imperative.

"This is why the delegation of the trade unions of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, at the mutual conference with the British trade unions, not only understood the task before them, but showed such firm will for the establishment of unity in the international labor movement."

In these few words, M. Tomsky, secretary of the Central Council of the Russian Trade Unions, sets forth the objective of the movement for world trade union unity—against the economic enslavement of the workers by capital and new imperialist wars.

For this objective the 11,000,000 trade unionists of Britain and Russia have united in the movement for world trade union unity, thru the formation of the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee. This Anglo-Russian Unity Committee has become the organizing center of the movement for world trade union unity. The officialdoms of most of the other trade union movements, including the American trade union movement, are hostile to this movement, and fight it in co-operation with the bosses and their agencies.

Organizationally this movement demands the convocation of a world congress of trade unionists to establish a united trade union international and decide upon a program for combatting the economic enslavement of the workers by capitalism and against new imperialist wars. No preliminary conditions are laid down to which any trade union has to subscribe prior to this world congress.

The self-evident facts of the present situation in which the working class finds itself will determine the program and tactics of this congress. That the program will be based on class warfare against capitalism is evident—if the right wing leaders of the Amsterdam International thought that such a world congress of trade unionists would support their policy of co-operation with the capitalists they would favor the holding of such a congress. But because they know that a world congress of trade unionists really representing the rank and file of the trade unions would reject their class-collaboration policy they do their utmost to prevent the holding of such a congress.

The first meeting of the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee was held in April, 1925, in London. There the unity of the British and Russian trade unionists was cemented in the movement for trade union unity. A joint declaration was drawn up at this conference which sets forth the real necessity for unity of the trade union movement of the world. Every honest and intelligent worker will admit that the following paragraphs strike at the root of the question of trade union unity—and establish the imperative necessity for the achievement of that unity:

"So long as the capitalist system continues there is danger of war. The merciless struggle for supremacy between the conflicting vested interests of competing groups of exploiters will, as in the past, eventually evoke a new crisis, plunging the workers of the world into another disastrous war.

"There is but one power that can save mankind from being plunged into another universal catastrophe. There is but one power which can defend the workers of all countries against political and economic oppression and tyranny. There is but one power which can bring freedom, welfare, happiness and peace to the working class and to humanity. That power is the working class if well organized, properly disciplined, self-devoted and determined to fight all who would oppose and prevent its complete emancipation."

The meeting of the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee held after the Scarborough meeting of the British Trades Union Congress constituted the committee as the organizing center for the movement for world trade union unity. No longer is it a question of attempting to force the reactionary right wing Amsterdam leaders to agree to trade union unity. They have shown plainly that they will agree to unity on one basis only—that the trade union movement shall not fight the capitalists on an international scale. Otherwise they fight unity.

The Anglo-Russian Unity Committee has the task of mobilizing the trade unionists of the world to achieve unity—the establishing of a single trade union international to combat the capitalists. This is being accomplished in no uncertain manner, and the growing number of unions that have endorsed the idea of trade union unity, and the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee, shows that the rank and file of the trade unions are for unity and are moving towards it in spite of reactionary leaders and all the agencies of capitalism.

The following partial list of trade unions, and mass meetings of workers that have endorsed trade union unity and the establishment of the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee will show to what an extent the movement for world trade union unity has grown:

France: The French trade union movement was split three years ago and the split has been maintained by the leaders of the General Confederation of Labor, Jouhaux and Merrheim, who are at the same time leaders of the right wing of the Amsterdam International. The left wing United General Confederation of Labor has repeatedly made overtures for unity of the movement but these have been rejected by the reactionaries of the General Confederation of Labor. Both federations have a half a million workers organized. The United General Confederation of Labor, affiliated with the R. I. L. U., has endorsed international trade union unity and the formation of the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee. It is initiating joint meetings of workers of both federations on the unity question. Local unions of railroaders, metal workers, teachers, miners, butchers, civil servants, etc., have voiced the demand for unity both nationally and internationally.

Joint meetings of trade unionists belonging to both federations are being held. Such a meeting held at Lille is typical of this movement where, after endorsing the campaign of the left wing federation for unity in France, the resolution continues:

"Considering the praiseworthy efforts of the British trade unions which have resulted in an agreement with the Russian unions on the question of international unity, the meeting declares its approval of this action of the British trade unionists, and asks the C. G. T. trade unionists of France to adopt the same attitude as the British in the question of international unity."

Germany: The German General Federation of Trade Unions (A. D. G. B.) had about 11,000,000 members at the time of the 1918 revolution. At the last congress held this year about 4,000,000 membership was reported. The leaders of the A. D. G. B. (Leipart, Grossman, Tarnow and Co.) are the finest servants the German capitalists have. They have preached and practiced co-operation between capital and labor both during the war and since. The workers' revolution of 1918-19 was defeated largely because of their support of the capitalists. The entire apparatus of the trade unions was placed at the disposal of the capitalists. The mighty struggles of the German workers have been opposed by the leaders, strikes broken and sold out, left wing workers and Communists betrayed to the police—all to help the German capitalist. The French invasion of the Ruhr in 1923 was not opposed by these leaders. The Dawes plan is supported by them even tho is has turned the German workers into European "coolies," turned the eight-hour day into a 10- 12- and 14-hour day, and increased the exploitation of the German workers terribly with the result that in the western capitalist countries the bosses demand wage reductions because of the competition of "cheap German labor."

Against these traitorous leaders the trade union members have revolted time and again with the result that individual and mass expulsions have been resorted to. The election of a worker to an office in a local union who does not bow the knee to the traitor policy of the leaders results in his expulsion. But in spite of this, and because of the compulsion of the terrible conditions under which the workers labor, trade union unity is supported by thousands of trade unionists. The metal workers, wood workers, municipal employes and transport workers have passed resolutions in many centers demanding unity. The Berlin local of the Metal Workers' Union, the largest union local in the city, unanimously passed a resolution at a general meeting held in July demanding that the German Trade Union Federation Executive Council

". . . propose to the I. F. T. U. that all trade union organizations of the world, regardless of whether they are at present affiliated to any trade union international or not, be united into a single trade union international. The executives of the I. F. T. U. (Amsterdam), and of the R. I. L. U. (Moscow), shall in joint conference decide upon the manner and composition of a world congress to be convened for that purpose."

The recent visit of a delegation of German workers to Soviet Russia has had the effect, not only of strengthening the bonds between the German workers and the workers' republic, but of increasing the movement for world trade union unity among the German trade unionists. This delegation of workers, not trade union officials, saw for themselves the power of the Soviet republic, the growing betterment of the conditions of the workers, and the strength of the Russian trade unions. They will enlighten their fellow workers to the lies of the trade union bureaucrats against the workers' republic.

Belgium: The Belgian workers were used by the Allies in the first days of the world war to stop the German advance on Paris and the Channel ports. King Albert is praised for this, and Emil Vandervelde, leader of the Belgian labor party, has become a member of the Belgian cabinet. The leader of the Belgian Trades Union Commission is Mertens, prominent in the fight against unity led by the right wing Amsterdamers.

Last February the Belgian Clothing Workers' Union sent two fraternal delegates to the Russian Clothing Workers' Union convention. One of the delegates, Liebaerts, secretary of the union, writes:

"Like the British trade union delegation, we returned from the new Russia firmly convinced of the possibility and necessity of realizing trade union unity with our Russian comrades. Our report and conclusions have been unanimously approved (with one hostile vote only) by our national committee."

C. Mahlman, secretary of the Belgian Transport Workers' Union, writes:

"We are convinced that in Belgium also unity with the Russian trade unions would meet with approval and welcome."

The Brussels local of the Belgian Teachers' Union unanimously resolved that

". . . We beg all working class organizations to work for the re-establishment of trade union unity, and with this in view, to support the efforts of the Anglo-Russian Council."

Norway: The Norwegian Federation of Trade Unions at its meeting in September approved of the movement for trade union unity, and decided to apply for admission to the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee to aid in the work. A national conference of trades councils held in the same month passed a resolution which says in part:

"The conference entirely supports the endeavors of the British and Russian trade unions and of the R. I. L. U. for the summoning of an international trade union unity congress. . . The conference appeals to all organized workers to support these endeavors for a united trade union international."

From the other European countries the trade unionists are raising their voices demanding trade union unity. The Czecho-Slovak One Big Union with a membership of a quater of a million, affiliated with the R. I. L. U. supports world trade union unity. In Spain, Italy, Sweden, Denmark and Jugo-Slavia the trade unionists are rallying to the support of unity.

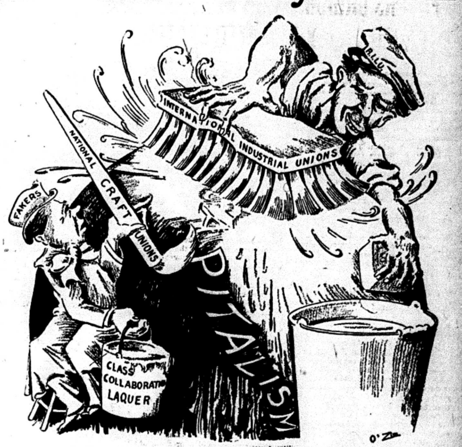
In South America unions in Brazil, Uruguay, and Mexico support unity. At Montevideo, Uruguay, the journal of the Printing Trades Unions, El Obrero Grafico says:

"The question of trade union unity is not simply a European question. It should also be discussed in other countries. To deny that the Uruguayan workers have any interest in this question would mean working against unity."

In Canada the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes, at its convention in October, went on record for international trade union unity. Local unions of machinists, etc., have also done likewise.

In the United States the Capmakers' International Union at its convention last April unanimously endorsed international trade union unity. Local unions of miners, painters, clothing workers have voiced their support for this movement. The officials of the A. F. of L. and the Railroad Brotherhoods are opposed to unity. Green & Co. will support the right wing of the Amsterdam in the fight against unity. If the A. F. of L. affiliates with Amsterdam it will be to take over the leadership in the struggle against unity to protect the investments of American capital and aid the American imperialists to extend the Dawes plan to other European countries.

The rank and file trade unionists of this country are faced with the alternative of lining up with the trade unionists of other countries to fight the capitalists or to be led by Green & Co. aganist their fellow workers who are fighting against the Dawes plan, against swelling the coffers of the House of Morgan.



COMMUNISTS' PRESS DRIVE FALLS SHORT

Less Than Half Amount Previously

Loans are only a means of averting: they cannot possibly put The DAILY WORKER on the firm basis that will prove its safety for the future.

Temporarily, the Communist press is being sustained by loans. These are merely crutches to be used until the safety drive for $40,000.00 is achieved.

Workers Party branches that today demonstrated their determination to carry the campaign to a successful finish number in the top ranks the Finnish and Lettish comrades of Chicago and the Bulgarian comrades of Detroit, Mich., all of whom have been unrelenting in their fight against The DAILY WORKER'S failure.

Notwithstanding their efforts, however, today's total was only $456.83, less than half as much as was received on the three previous days. Those cooperating to bring this amount were the following:

CLEVELAND WORKERS MUST SHELL OUT FOR COMMUNITY FUND OR LOSE JOBS DURING "EDUCATION" WEEK

CLEVELAND, Nov. 18.—The annual campaign of slush, slobber and sentiment has again struck Cleveland. Every charity organization, church and uplift society has joined the movement to force the workers to shell out their hard-earned money for the "community fund." Workers in the factories are compelled to donate to this fund or else lose their job or be discriminated against. In the schools collections are being taken up among the students and long sermons about christian charity, love for the poor, etc., are being made by schools teachers who are themselves underpaid and exploited. The collections in the schools happen to come just at the time when preparations are being made for "American Educational Week."

It is significant that one of the topics for "Education Week" is "Thrift." The children are taught to save their money and some day, perhaps . . . they will become wealthy. Nothing is said about the low wages received by the thousands of workers employed in the steel mills and automobile plants of this city, about the hundreds of school boys who have to peddle papers after school to add to the family income; these things are not mentioned at all.

In addition to "thrift," patriotism, god and country, and the constitution are some of the topics for discussion in the schools during Education Week, from Nov. 16 to the 22.

The Young Workers League of Cleveland, in co-operation with the Workers (Communist) Party, has arranged a mass meeting for the purpose of combatting the pernicious propaganda spread during education week and to point out the true nature of the educational system, that of a prop in the capitalist system.

This mass meeting will be held on Friday, Nov. 20, 8 p. m. at the Insurance Center Bldg., 1783 E. 11 St. The speakers will be Israel Amter, district secretary of the Workers Party; Martin Gordon, district organizer, Young Workers League; Phillip Shatz, member of the District Committee of the Young Workers League and Edward Shatz of the Juniors.

Soldier Unable to Get Job Forges Check; Lands in U. S. Penitentiary

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 18. — Elmer Louis La Warre, who some years ago kissed his job good-bye and sailed to sunny France to help make the world a decent place to live in, for the capitalists, and was awarded a Croix de Guerre and Garibaldi medal of honor, which wasn't worth a darn when he was hungry, has been sentenced to three years in the federal prison in Atlanta for forging an endorsement on a government check for $403.75. The prisoner claims that despite his record abroad he was unable to secure a position, let alone a plain job.

Get Them Out on Time.

VIRGINIA, Ill., Nov. 18. — School children are going to their books today, regulated by the stroke of a municipal bell. For weeks the tardy lists have gradually increased and invariably, the excuse was made that the clock or watch at home had lost time. Since the town appeared to be full of defective time pieces, school authorities and public officials hit upon the bell scheme.

Join Unity Movement.

The representative of the Central Council of the Russian Unions, Jaglom, stressed especially that the Norwegian unions were the first to join in the work of the Anglo-Russian committee for the establishment of international trade union unity, and that the journey of the Norwegian delegation to the Soviet Union would add to the importance of that step.

A worker from the railway workshops in Ivanov greeted the delegation in the name of the Russian railwaymen and pointed out that the cause of international working class unity was becoming ever more important, particularly in view of the new grouping of capitalist powers as seen at the conference at Locarno.

A member of the Norwegian delegation, Bratwol, greeted the assembled workers in the name of the organized Norwegian workers and declared that the journey undertaken by the delegation was the first step to the realization of the unity policy decided upon by the Norwegian Trade union Congress. The delegation had only been a few days upon Soviet soil, but it had already had sufficient proof to convince it that the Russian proletarian revolution was the greatest historical work of humanity, that the Russian working class was striving for a better future for the working class in the whole world and that the gains of the revolution were in safe and certain hands.

Bratwol called for cheers for international unity and the assembled workers cheered enthusiastically.

The chairman of the workers delegation is Alfred Mandsen, secretary of the General Council of Norwegian Trade Unions and chairman of the workers fraction in the parliament. The members of the delegation are: Gensen, miner; Wenge and Arndsen, metal workers; Sloteled and Suid, chemical workers; Oleen, municipal worker; Lilian and Bratwol, paper workers; Bulan, chairman of the Building Workers' Union; Anderson, wood worker and Nowgord, chairman of the Bakers' Union. One section of the delegation consists of Communists, social democrats and members of the independent labor party. The majority of the delegation is non-party.

Australia Has Laws to Protect Its Miners

SYDNEY, Australia, Nov. 18.—Legislation of a working class nature is fast being made law by the New South Wales labor government. One measure—the coal mines regulation act—prevents anyone working in a coal mine at the coal-face unless he has had two years' previous experience with a skilled miner. This will prevent scabs being employed in mines in times of strikes.

Another measure calls for the immediate installation at all mines of life-saving and rescue apparatus to be used in times of accidents and disasters. Rescue stations are also to be erected. The cost of the apparatus and the stations has to be borne by the coal operators who have also to instruct the miners in its use and maintain staffs to operate the apparatus.

Capital punishment has been abolished despite the bitter opposition of anti-labor politicians. Day baking has been made law and now all bread must be baked in day time between the hours of 7 a. m. and 6 p. m.

Two More Courses for Beginners at the N. Y. Workers' School

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Two new courses in the fundamental of Communism are announced by the New York Workers' School. These courses are for members just entering the party or for those who have been in the party a long time but have not had an opportunity to get any fundamental training. Their aim, is to familiarize the party members with the elements of the theory of Marx and Lenin. They are calculated to serve as a basis for further training in the application of the theory and practice of Leninism to the problems of the party and the Communist International. The instructors are D. Benjamin and Geo. Siskind.

The course is divided into 12 topics. It will begin with an analysis of the capitalist system of society; it will trace the evolution of capitalism; it will lay special stress upon the theory and nature of imperialism as the final stage of capitalism; and will study the theory and technique of revolution; the collapse of the Second International; the Russian revolution; the history and development of the Communist International.

Reorganization of Party Is Completed in Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 18.—The Kansas City, Mo. local of the Workers (Communist) Party was reorganized on the basis of shop and street nuclei. Three shop nuclei were formed and three street nuclei. Two of the shop nuclei are in the packing industry and one in the railway industry.

An executive committee of the nuclei has already been elected, which promises well for the future functioning and progress of the Kansas City Local.

The Driving Force of the Nucleus

By WALT CARMON.

Altho the American Communist movement is reorganizing on the basis of shop nuclei, it has not "solved everything." A shop nucleus can also be quite dead. Just as inert and as lifeless and as dead as any "branch" whose ghost continues to drag itself thru the books of our party.

But a nucleus permeated with a true spirit of Communism can prove to be the seed of our future full Communist growth.

In such a nucleus there will be an organizer—the most capable comrade in the group and its guiding spirit. But next to him, and second to him only in importance, will be that comrade on whose ability and understanding will depend a great deal of the group's real success in building the Communist movement: the propaganda director. In other words—the DAILY WORKER literature agent. The comrade who in the present form of organization which our party is discarding, was only too often, if not the unwilling holder of a title only, at least a comrade whose good intentions were insufficient for the important position of propaganda director.

Make Daily an Influence.

Half of the branches in our party have not even yet deemed it important enough to grant one of its members the title! Out of thirteen hundred branches, slightly over six hundred have elected DAILY WORKER agents; of these about three hundred and fifty were ever heard from; and only half of these could be called active. Right in this set of figures one can guess part of the reason why The DAILY WORKER is not now a greater influence among the masses—and what is greatly responsible for the financial difficulties in which The DAILY WORKER finds itself. Here also, is real evidence of a lack understanding of the importance of our daily to the party.

In the reorganization of our party, next to the organizer of the nucleus, must be The DAILY WORKER agent—the propaganda director, if you will. Must be, I repeat, to be that driving force in each little Communist cell that will so stimulate the growth of the Communist body. Necessarily, this comrade must be one from among the very best in the group: a comrade of understanding, judgement and ability.

Great responsibilities await him if he is fully to perform his duty. To assist in bolshevizing the nucleus first: to give its membership an understanding of Communist principles and tactics thru the medium of "immediate daily influence of Communist ideology"—thru the daily influence of The DAILY WORKER, language press, and the books and pamphlets of the teachers of the Communist movement. A grave responsibility this is indeed, and one that begins and ends with an ever pressing campaign to make every party member a subscriber to The DAILY WORKER. (In Russia, subscription to the official party organ is a condition of membership). It is for this "first responsibility" that the questionaire of the organization department of the party asks: "Are you a subscriber to The DAILY WORKER?" The propaganda director must have all the latest literature at all nucleus meetings—and there are many other responsibilities he has to the nucleus itself.

Agent and Correspondent.

But this is not all. To make The DAILY WORKER truly a reflection of the lives of the workers, to make it of greater interest to the workers in his shop—he must serve as a regular worker correspondent—or see to the election of one in his nucleus. He must also get other non-party workers to write for The DAILY WORKER. Bolshevizing his nucleus, the propaganda director can assist in Bolshevizing our press.

In the external activity of the nucleus, The DAILY WORKER agent is the "driving force" in full action—and with him every member under his guidance: to get subscribers to The DAILY WORKER, secure worker correspondents; arrange for the sale and distribution of The DAILY WORKER and all literature at the factory gates (by party members not working in the shop if necessary); at noon-hour meetings: to advertise The DAILY WORKER by stickers, chalk marks and word of mouth in the shop—a hundred and more ways of getting all the workers in the shop under "immediate daily influence of Communist ideology."

The work mentioned here is but the skeleton of its total. A big job it is . . . and it needs a big man. To use "American language" it needs a "full blown" Communist. For it is on the basis of this work that the difference between a live and a lifeless nucleus will often be found. On this very work will depend the growth of the nucleus an dthe development of its own membership.

What the C. I. Says.

It is not for nothing that in its "Decision on the American Question," made in May, the Communist International made special reference to the development of this work as a basis on which to build our party. The C. I. always speaks with a purpose. So it may be well to refresh our minds to these exact words:

"As long as the Workers Party does not at least double its membership, it cannot be said that it fulfills the requirements of an American Communist Party. Under no circumstances should it underestimate in any way the importance of such "minor tasks," as the circulation of lishment of new organs, the development of the Workers Monthly, the publication and distribution of good propaganda literature, the organization of party schools, recruiting weeks, etc."

Never was the time more opportune to draw the attention of American Communists to these words of guidance of the Communist International. And with the reorganization of our party on the basis of shop nuclei, let us keep clearly in mind: that the difference between a live nucleus and a ghost—may be the difference in the "driving force" of the nucleus. Your choice of the propaganda director for the nucleus must be of a comrade who is only fitted for the position thru capability—but one who appreciates also, the importance of this basis work of the nucleus.

N. Y. SHERLOCK WANTED TO KNOW ABOUT 'NUCLEI'

Hoped to Suppress Big Revolt Singlehanded

By SYLVAN A. POLLACK.

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 18.—Police visited the New York district office of the Workers (Communist) Party at 108 East 14th Street, just as final preparations were being formulated for the first of a series of section membership meetings which will be held thruout New York City to reorganize the party on a shop and street nuclei basis.

The plainclothes man, representing New York's so-called "Finest," appeared on the scene when the office was a bee hive of activity in making the final arrangements to assure the successful carrying out of the reorganization. He came blustering in and demanded to know what sort of a meeting was going to be held that evening, and who would be the speakers and chairman. He stated that he had been informed that circulars had been distributed advertising it.

Comrade Jack Stachel, district organization director, informed the detective that no circulars had been distributed, as it was not a mass meeting, but a membership meeting of Workers (Communist) Party members which was called to discuss matters that concerned them only. This did not seem to satisfy the detective but after a brief argument he left.

STUDENTS ENROLLED IN ENGLISH CLASSES TO MEET FRIDAY EVENING

English classes open Friday at 1902 W. Division St.

All students enrolled at the Chicago Workers' School for classes in elementary and intermediate English will meet Friday, Nov. 20, 8 p. m. at 1902 W. Division St. A general examination will take place with definite assignments and selection of permanent dates of meeting.

WORKERS SCHOOL STARTED CLASSES IN CHICAGO ON MONDAY NIGHT

The Chicago Workers' School opened as per schedule with 27 students in attendance at the class in "Capital, Volume No. 1" conducted by Earl Browder. Most of these students were young workers engaged in various industries, 14 belonging to trade unions. A preliminary examination revealed that all but two had studied the classic pamphlets "Wage, Labor and Capital" and "Value, Price and Profit." 11 had read parts of "Capital" and 5 had read the first volume.

175 Students Enroll.

The total enrollment to the school has now reached 175 with more coming in daily. The capacity of each class is 25 students which has already necessitated the organization of additional classes. For the subject "Elements of Communism" a third class is being organized to be conducted by Oliver Carlson and meet every Tuesday night at 19 South Lincoln St.

Each class selects a students' committee, who together with the instructors will take care of the needs of the classes and help maintain the necessary discipline. Classes begin on the dot of the time set, opening with roll call. Those not present on the hour will be recorded absent and failure to attend two sessions without such reasons, as sickness, etc., will be eliminated from the class for that semester.

A great number of our most active trade unionists have not as yet availed themselves of this opportunity for education. Undoubtedly many feel themselves too busy with active work and thereby perhaps overlook the fact that particularly for their activities will such courses become beneficial. Yet it could easily become possible for them to make such arrangements that committee meetings be disposed of earlier in the evening and the members still attend the school.

Non-Party Members Enroll.

Some non-party members have enrolled. All workers regardless of party affiliation who are interested in revolutionary proletarian education are welcome in the Chicago Workers' School.

Monday, 8 p. m., Capital, Volume 1, instructor, Earl Browder.

Tuesday, 8 p. m., Imperialism, instructor, Manuel Gomez.

Tuesday, 8 p. m., Elements of Communism, instructor, Oliver Carlson.

Wednesday, 8 p. m., American Social and Labor History, instructor, Wm. F. Dunne.

Wednesday, 8 p. m., Aims and Purpose of the Y. W. L., instructor, Max Schactman (at 1902 W. Division St.)

Thursday, 8 p. m., Elements of Communism, instructor, Max Bedacht.

Friday, 6 p. m., Elements of Communism, instructor, H. M. Wicks.

Friday, 8:30 p. m., Public Speaking, instructor, H. M. Wicks.

Friday, 8 p. m., DAILY WORKER Correspondents' Group, instructors, Dunne, Engdahl, Carlson (at 1113 W. Washington St.)

Sunday, 10:30 a. m., History of International Youth Movement, instructor, John Williamson.

All classes unless otherwise noted are held at 19 South Lincoln St.

Classes in English.

Classes in English, both elementary and intermediate meets first time Friday, Nov. 20, at 1902 W. Division St.

Class in "Imperialism" Meets.

The class in imperialism at the Chicago Workers' School, met for the first time Tuesday night under the direction of Manuel Gomez, secretary of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League. Comrade Gomez talked over with the class the general outline which will be followed in the course and led a preliminary discussion on the history of theories of imperialism. Instruction will not be by means of lectures, but by the development of discussion in the class, on the basis of assigned reading. The first text to be used will be "Foundations of Imperialist Policy," by Michael Pavlovitch, the first two chapters of which have been assigned for next Tuesday. Lenin's great work on "Imperialism, the Final Stage of Capitalism," will be used as the text after the class has gone over five chapters of Pavlovitch's book.

Comrade Gomez pointed out that in the present stage of capitalist development, when capitalism has embraced the world, the study of imperialism has become a necessary condition for correct working class strategy. Hand in hand with the economic analysis of imperialism will go a study of the actual correlation of foces in the struggle against imperialism—method of approach to the national liberation movements of the colonies and semi-colonies, etc., with particular stress on those movements which are pitted against the imperialism of the United States.

A committee of three to take charge of the technical details of the class and to form part of the general school committee of the Chicago Workers' School was elected from among the students. It consists of Comrades Wayne Adamson, Lydia Beidel and Natalie Gomez.

The registration books are still open for those wanting to enroll in the class on imperialism. Prospective students must not fail to attend next Tuesday night's class, at 19 So. Lincoln street, when the first two chapters of "Foundations of Imperialist Policy" will be taken up in detail.

Furriers Take Advance Stand

are constantly improving their standard of life and living; and

Whereas, The government of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is a government of workers and peasants which is fighting the battles of the workers and peasants against the system of exploitation; and

Whereas, Many European governments, in spite of their bitter opposition to the Soviet system of society, have been compelled to open diplomatic and commercial relations with the Russian government; and

Whereas, The present administration at Washington, by thus far failing to give recognition to Soviet Russia, has greatly injured that country as well as the United States; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the convention of the International Furriers' Union declares its sympathy and support of the government of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and in favor of full recognition of the government of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and for the establishment of full diplomatic and commercial relations between the United States and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

Against Class-Collaboration.

WHEREAS, In the bitter struggle going on in all the industries between the workers and their employers over the division of the products of labor, experience teaches that in order to defend their interests the workers must have powerful trade unions following a militant fighting policy and animated by a clear conception of the fundamental antagonism of interests between the workers nad the capitalists; and

Whereas, There is a growing tendency on the part of the trade unions to turn away from this fighting conception and policy and to accept the theory of the identity of interests between capital and labor, which means to follow a policy of class collaboration, to subordinate the trade unions to the interests and control of the capitalists and to destroy their militancy and usefulness to the working class; and

Whereas, This growing policy of class collaboration manifests itself in such schemes as the Baltimore and Ohio plan, which carries with it the degeneration of the trade unions into little better than company unions and the abandonment of trade union conditions won by long years of bitter struggle, and by the establishment of labor banks, workers' insurance companies, etc., which, having nothing in common with true co-operative enterprises, serve only to subjugate the trade unions to the capitalists connected with these institutions; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the International Furriers' Union repudiates the whole program of class collaboration, as exemplified by the "B. and O." plan, labor banking, etc., and declares in favor of a militant policy of struggle against the employers; and be it further

Resolved, That as a first step towards the strengthening of the fighting forces of the trade union movement, we propose the amalgamation of all the craft unions into a series of industrial unions, and the launching of a general campaign to organize the millions of unorganized workers.

Amalgamation Is Demanded.

WHEREAS, The employers thruout the nation have solidly united, being bound together by a solidarity of interest and organization which leaves no room for divided action or desertions, and moreover, they are supported by the government, the courts, and the press, in any union-smashing undertaking they engage in; and

Whereas, They are carrying on a vicious attack upon the labor movement, singling out the various unions and forcing them to engage in bitter struggle for self-preservation; and

Whereas, These unions, because they are divided against themselves along trade lines and are thus unable to make united resistance against the employers, constantly suffer defeat after defeat, with heavy losses in membership and serious lowering of the workers' standard of living and working conditions; and

Whereas, The only solution for the situation is the development of a united front by the workers, thru the amalgamation of the trade unions, so that there will remain only one union for each industry; therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge the American Federation of Labor to call a series of conferences of representatives of the various unions in the respective industries for the purpose of launching movements to amalgamate these unions in the respective industries into single organizations, each of which shall cover an industry.

Organize the Unorganized.

WHEREAS, Only a small percentage of the great working masses are as yet members of the trade unions, great numbers being still unorganized in nearly all the industries; and

Whereas, This state of affairs not only militates against the unorganized, who are helpless, but against the organized as well, who find themselves severely handicapped in their struggle for better conditions by the ever-present army of unorganized; and

Whereas, The organization of these great masses of unorganized workers is fundamentally necessary in order to strengthen the unions to resist the bitter onslaughts of the capitalists in their great "open shop" drive t destroy every semblance of trade unionism in every industry in the country; therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention of the International Furriers' Union instructs the officials of our union to begin an energetic campaign for the organization of the unorganized workers in our industry and calls upon all other international unions and the American Federation of Labor to unite for a common campaign to organize the unorganized worker of the United States.

Pittsburgh Negro Labor Congress to Hold Mass Meeting Sunday Night

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 18—A mass meeting arranged by the American Negro Labor Congress of this city will be held Sunday, 2:30 p. m., Nov. 22, at the Humming Bird Inn, 2157 Center Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

The following speakers who have just returned from the congress held in Chicago will report on the work accomplished there and on the future tasks of the Negro workers in this country: Wm. H. Scarville, member of the national committee American Negro Labor Congress, who is well known to the Pittsburgh workers; Charles W. Fulp, president of Local Union United Mine Workers of America No. 2012; W. C. Francis, secretary Pittsburgh branch of the American Negro Labor Congress; E. H. Careathers, treasurer Pittsburgh branch American Negro Labor Congress; A. Rodriguez, who is well acquainted with the problems of the Mexican workers and Tom Ray of the United Mine Workers of America

Admission is free and all workers of Pittsburgh and vicinity are invited to attend. Take car No. 82 to Elmore street.

Bridgeport Workers—Attention!

Comrades of the Workers Party at Bridgeport' Conn., will hold a rescue party for The DAILY WORKER on Wednesday evening, Nov. 25, at their hall, 211 Spruce street. It is to be a package party, with dancing and music—and life-preservers if necessary, not to mention coffee.

Willimantic Strikers Need Warm Clothes, Financial Assistance

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Nov. 18. —As the strike of the American Thread Co. goes into the 37th week, the suffering of the strikers, 80 per cent of whom are women, has increased. Thruout the summer the strikers lived in a tent colony on land donated to the United Textile Workers' Union by a number of those in sympathy with the strikers. With the coming of colder weather the union has had to rent homes in order that the strikers may find shelter against the cold weather which strikes this section of Connecticut early in the fall.

Over 350 families are on the strike rolls of the United Textile Workers Union receiving small weekly allowances of from $5 to $7 from the commissary.

Despite the hardships that the strikers are forced to undergo there has not been a single desertion from their ranks and there will be none as long as they are able to keep a roof their heads to protect them from the New England weather, declares the strike committee head.

The strikers are badly in need of warm clothes for the winter months and also financial assistance. All assistance should be sent to the Strikers' Defense Fund, Mary Kelleher, Hotel Hooker, Willimantic, Conn.

CHRISTIANS IN SYRIA APPEAL FOR WARSHIP

Sarrail Hints Britain Has Hand in Revolt

BULLETIN.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, France, Nov. 18.—"England's consular agents in Syria are not strangers to rebellion," declared who razed Damascus in the slaughter that has aroused Syria and Arabia. This remark was made in his testimony today before the chamber of deputies. When asked to explain his cryptic statement he refrained from further comment, but did state that he did not believe England was responsible for the Syrian rebellion. It is generally considered that he blurted out the opinion that is being inculcated in French governmental circles, preparatory to a fight against England in the council of the league of nations when the question of the French mandate in Syria comes up.

BEIRUT, Syria, Nov. 18.—Syrian rebels are consolidating their power in all Syria and the French, though still holding Damascus, because of the reluctance of the rebels to storm that city, are making a last stand here today. This city is now the center of operations and a drive has been launched against the French here that may rout them within the next 24 hours. Everything between here and Damascus is in the hands of the rebels, with desultory fighting still going on in Lebanon.

French troops are being transported to Sydon on board gunboats and advices reaching here from France are to the effect that thousands are embarking for Syria daily.

French from Damascus have been arriving in Beirut until today, when the insurrectionary troops of Syrians and Druses shut off their entrance. They have been forced to turn back and are wandering in a bewildered and disorganized condition over the territory. The chiefs of the insurrection have given orders to their troops not to molest them unless they attack the rebels or attempt depredations.

Missionaries Want Warships.

The missionaries who were beaten when they tried to assist the French in the butchery of the rebels have begun to whine. Dr. George Ford, of New York, one of the so-called medical missionaries, has appealed to the American counsul here for the dispatch of a warship to the port of Hafia. An American destroyer according to information, will be sent from Beirut, to join the French gun boats that already are menacing Hafia.

Insurrection Growing.

There are between 25,000 and 30,000 rebels under arms, many of them equipped with rifles and munitions captured when the French were driven from their base of supplies in Lebanon the other day and new recruits are swarming in from Arabia. The new attacks of the christian missionary bands has again infuriated the Mohammedans and their agents are again spreading hatred of the imperialist nations and their subjects thruout the world of Islam. The insurrection is rapidly gaining, just as it has gained from the day of the storming of Damascus.

Missionaries, have fled from Sidon to Tyre and many of them have gone into Palestine, where they hope to find safety behind the British lines.

STUDENTS PLAN FIGHT AGAINST ARMY TRANING

New York City College Paper Attacks R.O.T.C.

By SYLVAN A. POLLACK.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 18—The opening gun of a campaign to discontinue compulsory military training for the students of the College of the City of New York, was fired by a mass meeting of over 300 students which was held in the main college building.

Referendum on Military Training.

A committee was appointed to present a demand to the student council for a referendum on the question of continuing the compulsory courses in military training, which were the subject of unfavorable comment in the armistic day issue of The Campus, the undergraduate publication.

Most of the speakers at the meeting, which was called by the officers of the Social Problems Club of the college, were opposed to the courses.

The editorial in The Campus, quoted from the manual used by the department in which details of warfare are given to students of military science and was prefaced by the admonition to "memorize carefully." The editorial entitled, Certain Maxims of Military Science, follows:

"To be memorized carefully by the Reserve Officers' Training Camp students upon this seventh anniversary of the signing of the armistice that ended the war:

"Being quotations for the Manual of Military Training, textbook of the two-year course in military science and tactics prescribed for all the students at the College of the City of New York.

Develop Desire to Kill.

"'The object of all military training is to win battles. . . . The principles of sportmanship and consideration for your opponent have no place in the practical application of this work. . . . This inherent desire to fight and kill must be carefully watched for and encouraged by the instructor. . . . America needs invincible infantry.'"

In a mock review of the textbook in which the names of the authors are given as Colonel John W. Lang and Major James A. Moss, Felix S. Cohen, editor of The Campus, and the son of a professor at the college, wrote:

"It is unfortunate indeed that the college cadets do not read the book. It is easily understood why the Reserve Officers' Training Camp officers do not compel them to read it."

Allows Wine and Beer.

ADISON, Wis., Nov. 18—To have wine and beer in one's home is not an offense under the Severson law adopted by the Wisconsin legislature. It is valid even to have in one's possession contrivances for the making of wine and beer. It becomes an offense when wine and beer are "sold or manufactured," are some the conclusions in a decision by the Wisconsin supreme court in a "home brew" case from Iowa county.

Picture of Miners' Hard Life

hated the mines, he said, and his attitude was the tolerant one which the male who knows better displays toward the idiosyncrasies of his womenkind.

Youthful Optimist.

The strike? The miners didn't care if it lasted five years. The union could stand it and most of the miners had money. Some of the day men were getting "hardup" but he thot everybody had enough to eat. His mother owned her own home, the girls worked for the silk company and the family had 23 geese.

The "company" had you arrested if they found you "picking coal" but you could "always get coal cheap from the Eye-talians."

What the Italian method of procuring coal was the youthful optimist did not explain.

All the standard religions and many still more weird creeds flourish in Hazleton altho the Roman catholic church predominates. On every Sunday, in the whole state of Pennsylvania, the churches have a free hand. All places of amusement are closed and by every device known to the salesmen of salvation the masses are herded into the temples and made to listen to the 57 different varieties of heavenly balm purveyed in as many tongues.

Godly by Accident.

In Hazleton, as in the rest of the state, sheer lack of any other place to go on Sunday doubtless accounts for the attendance at the religious services to some extent but the throngs of men and women going in and out of the churches is nevertheless amazing—and appalling.

Irish, Slovak, Italian, Lithuanian, Pennsylvania Dutch and American—all are represented. Old peasant women from the south and east of Europe with their shawls bound over their gray hair are seen side by side with broad-faced flappers whose hair is as short as their skirts. Gnarled old miners in wrinkled Sunday black with their faces bearing the blue scars left by falling coal are there with their sons clad in the very latest creation of Hart, Shaffner and Marx. (No advertising intended).

That that composite of all superstitions and their medicine men called "the church" has a terrible grip on the workers of this community is plain.

Crowds for Bible Pounders.

Its auxiliaries—the Y. M. C. A., the Catholic Women's Club, the Y. W. C. A., the Knights of Columbus—all have spacious quarters on the main street. The Salvation Army has its own big building and the open air services of its warriors draw a crowd that would make the lassies of the tambourine on West Madison street expire in sheer delight.

In the chief hotel the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs' emblems hang in the lobby together with the insignia of another organization called the "Quota Club" which is a new one on me but evidently eminently respectable.

It is clear from the above that the Hazleton middle class is well-nigh perfectly organized. About the only money which gets out of the city is that which the Lehigh Valley Coal company and other operators receive in dividends. No miner's money escapes.

But Business is Bad.

The purchase of foodstuffs has fallen off about fifty per cent since the strike, the merchants say, and in clothing and semi-luxuries the decrease is as high as eighty per cent.

The local sharks grumble among themselves but so far have done little else than have prayers offered up for a speedy settlement.

The miners have confidence in their union. I have talked with dozens and they laugh when one asks if the operators can break the union. They cite the Pennsylvania mine law which prohibits anyone without two years experience and certain other qualifications "working at the face." Even miners who are class conscious, with training in the old socialist movement which flourished here years ago, scoff at the idea that the union can be broken in the anthracite.

Faith in Union.

For upwards of a quarter of a century the union has stood between the miners and the coal barons. What improvements in wages and working conditions have been made have come thru the union. To these miners, altho to many it is only some indefinite agency which collects dues and calls strikes and which they suspect of trickery and curse at times, it represents a power which they know from experience the operators hate. "The union," in the terminology of the thousands of men of all nationalities who dig the anthracite, is something entirely distinct from John L. Lewis and the rest of the officials.

Union Faith Greatest.

It is a little hard to put into words, this impression one gets about the union from these workers but anyone who talks to them now will soon come to understand that "the union," with all its defects, its cumbersome and graft-ridden machinery, and in spite of its social-patriotic leadership, is the biggest factor in their lives.

The churches and the slimy social scum which envelopes all these mining communities many be able to hide the class struggle behind this very peaceful strike for a time but if the anthracite operators adopt the time-honored methods of the American coal barons and attempt to mine coal without the union, under government protection, there will be a battle here in the anthracite which will add a red chaper to American labor history.

Counter-Revolutionary Polish Priest Hailed Martyr by Plute Press

In an attempt to chloroform the Polish workers as to their conditions in America and the conditions of their brothers in Poland, the Polish-American clergy, whose influence is being undermined by the class-conscious workers in America, have imported Archbishop John Cieplak to bring the Polish workers back to the folds of the black international of Rome.

Cieplak is being heralded as a martyr by the American capitalist press for his refusal to turn over the gold and jewels which his church had accumulated to the Russian Soviet government to aid the famine stricken workers and peasants. Cieplak not only refused to turn over the treasures which his church had gathered from the rich in the czarist days, for "services rendered" but also urged others to resist the Soviet government which was trying to use these treasures to save many workers who were members of the Roman Catholic church from starvation. Cieplak was arrested for this counter-revolutionary activity.

Tried and Sentenced to Death.

The Soviet government later commuted his death sentence and shortly after released him.

He is now touring America telling the Polish workers to return to the faith of the catholic church and to trust to god "to solve the problems of Poland."

He is now in Chicago. Cardinal Mundelein has issued instructions to the clergy of Chicago to extend to this Polish priest the same honors that were extended Cardinal Mercier of France and has also given Cieplak a suite of rooms in the rectory of St. Mary of the Angels' Church.

CHICAGO I. L. D. BAZAAR TO AID ZEIGLER MINERS

Workers of All Nations on Program

From Dec. 10 to 13, inclusive, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday afternoon, North West hall on the corner of North and Western avenue will be the scene of a bazaar organized by the Chicago local of the International Labor Defense to help finance the defense of the Zeigler miners who are the victims of a conspiracy hatched by the coal operators aided by Frank Farrington's reactionary machine and by the legal arm of Governor Small"s administration.

Funds Needed.

While entertainment will be a big feature of the bazaar and representatives of the workers and peasants of many countries will participate in the festivities dressed in native costumes, the bazaar committee impresses on the workers of Chicago that funds are vitally needed if Henry Corbishley, the progressive mine leader of Zeigler, his brother Frank who is indicted on a fake murder charge, and several other members of the union, are to be saved from long terms in prison. Without money to secure competent defense workers are completely at the mercy of the capitalist courts.

The following program is promised by the arrangements committee: On Friday night, Dec. 11, the Lithuanians, Italians, Germans, Hungarians, Finns, Greeks and Bulgarians will hold the fort. What they can do in the line of amusement needs no word varnishing.

On Saturday night, December 12, the Russians, Ukrainians, Polish, Jewish and young workers, will do the entertaining. The young workers will keep the orchestra busy, incidentally.

On Saturday afternoon, Dec. 13, the Scandinavians will join hands with the Czecho-Slovaks, Letts, South Slavs and Americans. This is a great combination when it gets to brass tacks. Entertainment on each of those days will be provided by talent from the different language groups.

Grand Opening.

Thursday night, December 10, is the grand opening. Donations are requested and they should be sent or reported to the local International Labor Defense office at 23 South Lincoln St.

Collect Articles!

Over $1,000 worth of articles were collected before last year's bazar. This figure is expected to be doubled this year. Chicago members of the International Labor Defense are urged to approach storekeepers for donations.

Admission tickets have the aims of the International Labor Defense printed on the reverse. The recent revival of government persecution of the workers as seen in the order for committment to prison of Gitlow and Anita Whitney, the forthcoming trial of Fred Merrick and his associates in Pittsburgh and of the Zeigler miners, makes it imperative that every worker should put his shoulder to the task of helping raise funds to meet the new onslaught.

British Tories Hold "Newspaper" Meet at Melbourne, Australia

MELBOURNE, Australia—(By Mail)—Aristocratic owners of influential tory newspapers in Britain and the various British dominions attended the Empire Press conference, whic was held recently at Melbourne. Nominally a conference to improve the system of news gathering thruout the world, the Empire Press conference is in reality an imperialist propaganda stunt whereby efforts are made to convince the people that their chains of slavery are not so irksome as would appear at first sight. Most of the tall-hatted gentry who attended the conference know nothing about newspapers; many of them wouldn't know the front from the back of a printing press if they saw one.

In between sessions they delivered lectures to select audiences on imperialism and capitalist patriotism. They are not mingling with the ordinary working slave. Such a display of democracy would be beneath their dignity. It is only fair to say that the great mass of the population have no sympathy whatever with the imperialist propaganda which they are shooting forth.

I. W. W. to Hold Benefit in Minneapolis for Class-War Prisoners

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 18—A mass meeting has been arranged by the local I. W. W. for the benefit of class war prisoners on Sunday evening Nov. 22, at 8 o'clock, at their hall, 115 Nicollet Ave.

John Gabriel Soltis has been secured to make the address. He will speak on the subject of "Our Debt to the Class War Prisoners."

The purpose of the meeting is to raise funds for a Christmas remembrance of the working class champions in the bastilles of America. All workers, who recognize that an injury to one is the concern of all, are invited to be on hand at the meeting.

Red Front Fighters Celebrate

of its revolution.

The first flag used by the Red Front Fighters of Berlin was also displayed for presentation to the "Deutsches Proletariat," the fourth division, of the Soviet Red army.

The most spectacular moment of the demonstration came when Ernest Thaelmann, first chairman of the Red Front Fighters, and the candidate of the Communist Party for president in the German elections last April, led delegations of the Red Marines of Hamburg and of the Halle Red Front Fighters down the center aisle and up on the stage, escorted by a company of Berlin Red Front Fighters, bearing fifty-four large red banners.

Workers Jam Hall.

So dense was the overflow crowd outside that it was an hour before the Red Front Fighter' fife and drum corp of over one hundred pieces, could get into the hall. Hundreds were forced to stand. As many women as men were present, and many of both sexes wore the uniforms of the Red Front Fighters.

Comrade Leow, second chairman of he Red Front Fighters read the message of greeting to the Moscow workers, which will accompany the beautiful Red banner to the Soviet capital. The banner, which bore in gold the emblem of the Red Front Fighters, a raised clenched fist, was then unfurled for the first time.

Send Greetings to Moscow.

The greeting to the Moscow workers said in part:

"To the working class of Moscow:

"On the eighth anniversary of your successful revolution the Red Front Fighters of Germany send you this banner from the organization, which in times of stress has encouraged and in times of gladness has brightened the ranks of the German proletariat. The banner is a symbol of the revolutionary class solidarity which binds the German workers to the Russian proletariat. Greetings and hope from the millions of German workers accompany our flag.

Against Locarno Pact.

"Against the Locarno pact, we place the demand for an independent Communist Germany, organized together with the first workers' state. Over the borders we extend our hands to you.

"The class conscious working class will conquer capitalism and embrace the banner of freedom.

"Long live the work of Lenin.

"Long live the First Proletarian State of the World.

"Long live the International Red Class-front in the Fight Against Capitalism.

(Signed) "Thaelmann, Leow."

Thaelmann, who recently recovered from an illness, was greeted with tremendous cheers. "The German social democracy has, in an alliance with the bourgeoisie," said Thaelmann, "helped to complete the security pact with the allies, in order by that means to encircle Soviet Russia and prepare a war against the Soviet state. As the Berlin elections showed, the Berlin revolutionary workers are prepared to resist this war with all their forces.

Alliance With Russia.

"We will permit no alliance with the capitalist robbers of the west. We will have an alliance with Soviet Russia."

Comrade Kasper, a fiery speaker who acted as the official representative of the German Communist Party, drew forth a demonstration when he said, "Should the German bourgeoisie make an attempt against Soviet Russia, then the German proletariat will rise against them." This statement was given added force by the cheers of the Red Front Fighters, of which there is a well trained nucleus of more than 15,000 in Berlin alone, and which is supported by hundreds of thousands of factory workers.

Kaspar emphasized the deep political significance of the presentation of the banner. He declared that the Locarno pact was an alliance of the German bourgeoisie against Soviet Russia.

Smash Imperialist Drive.

"France and England have the right at any time to march their troops thru Germany," Kaspar declared. "They have the right, with their weapons in their hands, to march against Soviet Russia. The red front of the revolutionary proletariat will smash this united front of imperialism. Not alone is the sympathy of the workers with Soviet Russia needed, but the fight against the international capitalist class must be organized."

Comrade Richter, of Halle, one of the original organizers of the Red Front Fighters, brought the greetings of the Halle workers.

Comrade Johannes R. Becher, one of the well known German authors who served a term in prison for his revolutionary writings, recited one of his poems, "Ode to the Red Flag."

The spokesman for the red marines of Hamburg was given an ovation. The Hamburg red marines stood on the platform in their uniforms during the meeting, as did the flag bearers in their red front uniforms.

Greetings From Red Army.

Comrade Maerkisch, the chairman of the meeting, then introduced Comrade Leow, who read the greetings to to the German workers' division of the red army. When Comrade Leow said, "All those in sympathy with Soviet Russia raise their hands," all of the thousands in the hall responded, and a tremendous triple cheer, "Rot' Front, Rot' Front, Rot' Front!" went up.

The communication to the 4th division of the Soviet army stated:

"Fellow Fighters and Comrades:—The Red Front Fighters of Berlin and Brandenburg send you, on the eighth anniversary of your successful revolution, the first banner used by the Red Front Fighters of Germany. The class conscious workers of Berlin feel themselves one with the soldiers, workers and peasants of the first proletarian state. Your fight is our fight. To you who bear the name of our class, we send our banner as a fighting greeting from the Berlin Red Front Fighters.

"(Signed) Thaelmann, Leow."

Chilean Voters Resent American Interference in Tacna-Arica Dispute

ARICA, Chile, Nov. 18.—Feeling is becoming intense against American interference in the Tacna-Arica dispute. The Chileans are angered at the actions of "Black-Jack" Pershing and the American marines who are "fixing" the plebiscite so that Peru will gain the disputed territory.

Thousands of Peruvian voters are being brought into the Chilean territory, to stage demonstrations in behalf of the Peru gaining Tacna-Arica. American financiers are backing the Peruvian government which intends to allow the Americans to transport nitrates over their country to the ships on the coast.

A Peruvian newsboy, selling the daily newspaper, Lagos del Sur, which is a propaganda organ for the Peruvians was beaten by a crowd of Chileans and his papers taken from him and burned.

An American marine who rushed to the defense of the Peruvian was stoned and beaten by the crowd.

The paper has been forced to move its printing establishment to the steamer Ucayili.

Canadian Legislator Assails Ku Klux Klan

VICTORIA, B. C., Nov. 18.—In a resolution introduced by Francis A. Browne, labor member of the British Columbia legislature from Barnaby, the ku klux klan is assailed as an alien terrorist society having as its purpose the perpetuation of the religious hatred and substitution of lynch law for "constituted" authority.

In the resolution it calls upon the legislature to take action to bar all members of the klan from holding public office and membership in the legislature.

In his attack on the klan he stated that the klan appeals to the mentally deficient and has an appeal for the decaying American civilization, whose vulgar tastes are sated by the foolery of the nightgown parade.

Furriers for a Labor Party

The adoption of a resolution for a labor party by the Boston convention of the Furriers' Union is truly an expression of the growing demand for a political party of labor separate from the old party entanglements within which the labor movement of this country has vegetated in impotency.

This resolution must be made the basis for a concerted effort on the part of organized labor to energetically proceed to the creation of such a party. It is far more significant that it comes from an international union than from the various delegate bodies, central labor bodies and state federations. These delegate bodies are composed of local unions, owing allegiance to international unions first, and only secondarily and in a remote manner to the delegate bodies.

A labor party resolution in an international union commits the entire union to that policy. The basis is here laid for the calling of a conference of international union representatives for the purpose of issuing a call for a national labor party conference. To prepare for this step every class conscious worker should strive to commit his own international union to the policy. The starting point to influence the internationals must be the local unions.

Widespread endorsement of the Furriers' resolution by local unions and central labor bodies will aid materially in driving the international unions to action. Every progressive trade unionist should introduce a resolution of endorsement in his local union.

The Furrers' resolution, which appears on the first page today, also assures the question coming up in the next convention of the American Federation of Labor, where an effort must be made to blast the petrified leadership of that organization out of the path to the development of effective class political action on the part of labor. In the last convention of the A. F. of L. the most bitter opponents of a labor party had to admit that the time will come when such a move will be necessary. Being experienced machine politicians with their ears to the ground, the A. F. of L. officials catch the rumblings that indicate the rank and file of labor is striking out on new lines.

With a number of the international unions taking aggressive action in a labor party conference the old machine would be forced to yield to the demand or face extinction.

The creation of a labor party based upon the unions will be the greatest advance the labor movement can possibly take at this time. It will more effectively than anything else destroy the direct connection between the trade union leaders and the capitalist class. Every militant worker must strive toward that end.

Ignance Jan Paderewski, gymnastic piano thumper, and one time scullion for a gang of thieving Polish priests in the service of France, when he tied to function as prime minister of Poland, a government created to assail Soviet Russia, is in trouble over a little matter of $4,000 income tax due the U. S. treasury. The enormous sum upon which this tax is based was obtained thru American audiences listening to him perform on the piano. Incidentally many of these "music lovers" were radicals. Very poor ones, tho, when they patronize such specimen as Paderewski.

Down with Gangster Rule!

Gangsters and gunmen known to be backed by business agents and other officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union are conducting a reign of terror against the membership of that union in order to beat them into submission so they will not resist impending wage cuts that are being prepared for them by the officialdom.

On Friday night of last week members who tried to get the floor in the union meeting to discuss the proposed $25 assessment were assaulted after they left the union hall. On Sunday armed thugs with revolvers in their hands invaded a meeting of rank and file members who were assembled to discuss means of resisting wage cuts. Among these invading gunmen were business agents of the union. Their names are known, as are also the names of those who aided them in their thuggery. Loyal union members were severely beaten.

These dastardly attacks must be stopped. Within the laws of the union there should be sufficient means to dispose of this menace. The gangsters should be expelled from the organization. If they are not dealt with in such a way as forever to stop this sort of thing, the rank and file must adopt means of defense against these attacks.

When a hall is secured by members they have a perfect right to protect it from invaders. Unless action is summarily taken against these sluggers the rank and file should inform the Amalgamated officials that the next assault will be met with such fierce resistance, using the weapons that are used against them, so that there will be no question of identifying the gangsters. The scars of battle placed upon them will mark them as long as they live as paid sluggers of the labor fakers and employers.

After all the years of the existence of this republic the United States senate has still to decide the question of whether its members represent the government or the state from which they come. By the time we kick these fozzil inhabitants of the old men's home in Washington into the garbage can of history they may discover just what function they perform.

While we have no objections to seeing a dragon of the ku klux klan go to jail, we extend condolences to the intelligent victims of capitalist justice who are compelled to associate with him. It adds new emphasis to the term durance vile.

While the warfare between the police bootleggers and the independent bootleggers in Chicago was going merrily on, Mayor Dever was explaining to a Bostonian audience that the Chicago police departmenet had reached a high degree of efficiency. Efficiency in what?

When Will Cotton Goods Be Cheap?

Soviet Primers No. 6.
The Sort of "Soviet Propaganda" that the Government is Telling Its Own Peasants.

Cotton grows only in very hot countries, whether there is also much water. With us it grows only in Turkestan and Southern Caucasus. Since these lands are very dry, it needs flooded regions, where the water can be turned into the cotton fields from time to time. Altogether Turkestan has 440 million acres. But of these only six and a half million are arable, and only about four and a half million of these are irrigated.

Forty or fifty years ago the Russians conquered Turkestan. They conquered it for the sake of cotton, for our cotton industry was beginning to grow. First they made alliances with the Turkestan khans to oppress the peasants, but at last the Russian robbers grabbed the land completely, in order to have all the profits themselves. There began an orgy of cotton speculation. Officers, adventurers got fortunes over-night on cotton lands. But actually the production of cotton fell sharply by about three quarters, the very year after the conquest.

AFTER this came cotton manufacturers, buying up huge estates and importing American seed which produces a better cotton. They gave this out to the peasants and cotton production increased. But the big estates did not prosper; cotton demands careful attention and the cotton manufacturers soon found it more profitable not to grow cotton themselves with careless, hired labor, but the rent lands to the peasants and buy cotton from them at low prices.

These peasants work harder, longer hours by far than even the Russian peasant. More than half of them have less than 5 acres of land, but this is all they can work. For they are often without horses but must do all the work by hand like a garden. Already in February they begin to weed out the old plants; they keep working till the second or third harvest in October or November. On every two and a half acres of land they must work 148 days with hand work. Of course if they have horses and machinery, even the simplest, such as ploughs, iron harrows, cultivators,—they can work three or four times as much. And if they have tractors,—it is especially to Turkestan that we must send tractors, for they pay for themselves on cotton three times as fast as on wheat, because the cotton crop is worth so much more per acre.

Hard Times Hit Turkestan.

THERE follow pages of fascinating description of the life of cotton growers, all designed to bring the Russian peasant closer to his mid-Asian brother. But we must pass swiftly to the effect of the revolution on cotton growing, which fell from 850,000 acres in 1917 to 125,000 in 1922.

This cotton catastrophe was caused first, by the flight of big cotton growers and buyers from the revolution, then by the civil war that raged in Turkestan itself tearing up irrigation ditches, then by the long years of separation from their market in Russia, when cotton could not be sold at any price. Last of all came the famine and men died like flies in Turkestan and turned from the growing of cotton to the growing of bread.

Organizing for Victory.

BUT already, in 1922, when the acreage under cotton had fallen to its lowest ebb, to one-tenth the prewar, the organization began which was to lead on the victory. A central cotton committee was organized, which encouraged the Turkestan peasants to form cooperatives, and gave out advance payments on cotton crops to those whom cooperatives indicated as honest and reliable. Taxes on cotton land were temporarily removed, and as an added inducement for every acre planted to cotton, one acre of the growers grain land was also exempt from tax.

These measures began in the spring of 1922, too late to affect the number of acres planted, but in time to encourage extra care of the crop. The result was a crop of 400 pounds to the acre, in place of the 250 pounds received the year before. The following year cotton planting surpassed the plan set down, and in 1924, it went to 700,000 acres. Of these 625,000 acres were organized under the control of cooperatives, which now unite 250,023 Turkestan households in 910 organizations.

THE irrigation works began to improve slowly, in spite of lack of money. The acres under water had been cut in half by the destruction of war, but now the local inhabitants themselves contributed four million roubles worth of labor, and raised by local collections 700,000 roubles in cash for materials, to which the central government added six million roubles. The amount of land under irrigation increased thirty per cent the first year.

A fight also began with the locusts. Here it was necessary to make treaties with neighboring governments, Persia, Alganistan. For locusts observe no boundary lines; they fly right over them. For sixty years the czar's government made war treaties against "internal and foreign foes" but never against these locusts which are a very bad foe. These we succeeded in destroying on 200,000 acres.

Our plan for the next five years calls first for restoring old irrigation works and building new ones to reach seven and a half million acres, considerably more than prewar. For this 92 million rubles are needed; of this the local government gives 4 million in cash and 14 million in labor, and the rest is given by the central government, unless we can get some concessionaire to give part of it. When enough money is available, there are 15 million acres in Turkestan that can be irrigated for cotton and 3 million for other crops.

The Turkestan peasants also need horses. Before the war they imported 30,000 head per year from China, Mongolia and Afganistan. We are importing this year for them 50,000 to make good the great losses.

New Great Works for Turkestan.

WE must give Turkestan grain so that she may produce for us cotton. Before the war she imported a million poods of grain. Since the famine year it is hard to transport this grain from the Volga regions But now we are beginning a railroad from Turkestan to the grain region of Semirechenck. And when this rail road at last reaches into Siberia, to exchange Siberian grain for the cotton and fruits and rice and wine of Turkestan, then the problem of Turkestan food will be solved.

We are planning textile factories in Turkestan. The czar's government though only to exploit the people there, and take their raw materials to the center. But to the Soviet Union the interests of the Turkestan peasants and workers are as important as any other workers and peasants. The present project is a factory of 300 looms and 10,000 spindles. Already one of the factories near Moscow has been given to the Turcoman republic, and Turcoman workers are there now as apprentices, learning the business so that they may establish it in their own country. Then it will not be necessary on our one-track railroads to bring raw cotton to Moscow and take manufactured cotton back to Turkestan, but the Turkestan factory will produce goods for its own people. And a few thousand factory workers in Turkestan will have a deep effect, not only on that republic, but on the neighboring related countries of central Asia.

Besides this we are taking tractors to Turkestan. Already a few hundred have gone there, and tractors pay for themselves quickly on this valuable cotton land. By 1928 we shall have several thousand. Even the poor peasants themeselves are organizing to buy tractors. From one district they collected 10,000 roubles, and this made the first payment on 30 tractors, by the terms which we grant in Moscow.

BUT the most important change of all for the future life of Turkestan is the new governmental districting. Formerly there were three republics here, each with its language, customs and laws. When the czar mixed them all in one, great disturbance of work resulted. But now the Soviet power has given to the Usbeks their republic, to the Kirghiz theirs, and to the Turcomen theirs, besides three more little autonomous districts of different tribes. This means that each people, knowing each other like a family, understand each others ways and can expand their husbandry jointly. And together with this, are now hundreds of young Turkestaners, learning in the technical schools of Moscow, and also of their own republics, and 26 have been sent abroad to Berlin,—to learn how better to organize the industry of their country. Already these young folks say that in five or ten years you will not recognize the land any more.

Step by step all these measures will take effect in our production of cotton goods. Already a change has begun. In 1924 we had to buy 3 million poods of raw cotton in America. In 1925 this was already reduced to 800,000 poods. And already in 1926 we expect a surplus 500,000 poods of raw cotton and in 1927 of 2,200,000 poods. For our factories cannot expand as fast as our cotton growing. Unless we should get money from concessionaires for textile factories, we shall begin to export some raw cotton and buy back cotton goods from Europe.

HOWEVER, even our factories have their program for expansion. By 1927 they will double the production of 1924. Then we may expect conditions to be nearer prewar conditions, in the cost of cotton goods as compared to wheat.

But now some peasant asks: "Why have we learned all this? Does it make our taxes less? Or our life easier? Or are we to wait till 1928 for a shirt?" But it is very useful for the peasant to know the facts, and not to be turned this way and that by the words of the kulaks! They must know the life ofthese Turkestan cotton-growers, who live much worse than our Russian peasants. They must know that the city workers, however they may wish, cannot at once change entirely the price of cotton goods.

And they must know, above all, their oneness with the millions of Turkestan and Caucasian peasants, the cotton growers who give them clothes and to whom they give bread. They must understand the mutual interests of the whole great army of workers, and the role and problems of each separate group in the building of our common socialist society.

Chicago—Grand and Free

'Till upon that inland sea,
Stands Chicago grand and free,
Turning all the world to thee,
Illinois, Illinois.

This stanza from the state anthem of Illinois symbolizes the illusion the association of commerce is endeavoring to create regarding the incomparable grandeur of Chicago. The five-day celebration of the 21st birthday of the association was heralded to be an invoice of Chicago's resources and prospects. The first two days were filled with perfervid eulogy of the exploiters of labor; the bankers, the industrialists, the merchants and their religious apologists in the churches.

Beneath all the stilted palaver one fact stands out clearly. That is the efforts of the LaSalle street banking group to bring industry and the outlying banks of the Mississippi valley under their domination. Combination leading to monopoly is the keynote. With the banks dominating, coordinated drives can be launched against organized labor in this city. It is a challenge to organized labor to prepare to fight.

From the tone of the advocates of a lake-to-ocean waterway, Chicago is not free, tho is may be grand. The "eastern interests" are in a reprehensible conspiracy against the meat packers and the butter-and-egg (not yegg) men in order to stifle the development of this majestic metropolis. Instead of turning in this direction, all the world is against Chicago. The valiant crusaders of the association of commerce will push it back to Chicago. Wave after wave of calamity may roll over them, but still they will stand with unbowed heads. Babbits and he-men, all, they defy the world.

There is one achievement of Chicago that is overlooked by the boosters. It is the only city of its class in the world that is so provincial. It has certain characteristics all its own. Its citizens rise to eminence over night and occupy the headlines of the press for weeks at a time. A trusty gun and a few well-spent bullets and a Chicago luminary bursts upon us. All gunmen are super-criminals. The minutest details of their affairs of the heart, their melodramatic devotion to their poor old mothers who are sure their boys are all right; every act, expression and thought are recorded in the columns of the "world's greatest newpaper," the Chicago Tribune.

Just as the gunmen are super-criminals, the bootleg booze is all high power stuff. The bankers are super, the Marshall Fields are high power merchants. Everything is superlative; nothing is done on a small scale.

That is the business conception of Chicago. Stupid, vicious, blatant, the so-called "Chicago spirit" is a true reflex of the industrialist group struggling against the menacing power of finance-capital and losing its struggle.

In spite of the Tribune's unabashed espousal of babbitry, because its support is derived from babbits, in spite of the ambitious schemes of the LaSalle street bankers, Chicago will yield to the domination of Wall Street. Its waterway from the lakes to the ocean may eventually be realized, but this inland city will never become the port of the United States. That is only the rarebit dream of Chicago babbits when they fall into the night's stupor after partaking of the water of everlasting life supplied by the super-bootleggers of the city.

In one thing only is Chicago, like the rest of the country, defective. That is in labor organization to combat the provincial bandits of Chicago industrialism and the power of Wall Street.

Morris Kaufman, deposed president of the Furriers' Union, used gangsters to maintain power and so aroused the membership of his organization that he dared not run for re-election. This should be a warning to Sidney Hillman of the Amalgamated.

So well pleased is King Victor Emanuel of Italy with Count Volpi's achievement of selling Italy to Morgan that he has conferred upon that worthy the Annunziata knighthood.

The Sham of "American Education Week"

By JOHN WILLIAMSON

NOT content with the general form of capitalist propaganda conducted in the everyday form, we now witness each year a special week termed, "American Education Week" under the auspices of a triumvirate, well known individually as labor-hating and scheming organizations, namely the Bureau of Education (a department of the government); the National Association of Education (an organized department of the vested interests who subsidize "our" educational institutions and thus take care that those who are entrusted with teaching the children of the working class, must not think for themselves but only give a sterotyped version as handed out by the N. E. A.) and last but not least, we find the American Legion—a combination of officers of the army—a co-partner in this scheme of concentrated propaganda.

Commissioner Tigert, writing in one of the many propaganda sheets issued for this occasion, sums up the situation a follows, "Every week should be Educational Week; but at least one week in the year should be set aside to emphasize certain phases of education, to discuss ways in which state and local conditions may be improved, and to acquaint the public with progressive educational movements." And what are these "certain phases" which must be "stressed." It is concentrated propaganda in favor of the boss class, against the workers, the building up of faith in institutions in which the workers have no voice, the conjuring up of false illusions for the workers child, the future toiler of tomorrow. Educational Week is divided into seven separate days, each with a different name and program. These include such names as "constitution day," "patriotism day," "for god and country day" and such other claptrap.

What a sham to speak of the constitution guaranteeing "our" rights. Year after year we find the so-called rights of the workers being trampled under the foot and the gun of the United States government. What rights have the striking anthracite miners today? When they attempt to meet to discuss their problems at a time when the bosses are trying to reduce their wages and break up their union, the result is that their meetings are broken up and the leading workers, active in the strike are thrown into jail without any pretense of "rights" or "constitution."

Fake Freedom.

WE hear such sweet sounding phrases as "Our constitution guarantees these rights" meaning liberty, freedom, etc. Ask the hundreds of workers in the jails of California, Washington, Pennsylvania or Maine what guarantee of freedom they enjoyed? Without the pretense of justice or fairness we find these workers railroaded to jail because they fought for the interests of the working class against the boss class, the representatives of whom are today speaking such sweet sounding phrases.

To the workers of Panama who recently found themselves confronted by the bayonets and guns of the U. S. marines the slogan of "Ballots, not bullets" will be received with rightful rage. When the millions of exploited native workers of the Philippines, Porto Rico, Haiti or the many other Central American countries where American capital has been ruling with the gun and bayonet, demanded the right to determine their own form of government the answer was a blood bath for the workers and natives concerned.

Share Factories.

The schools of America are not the "foundations of democracy" as proclaimed in this literature but are the training schools for the future working class of America where the children are taught mere phrases without meaning and only given enough technical education to enable them to be efficient slaves in the interests of the boss. Day after day their plastic minds are conformed to the standard teachings which are stereotyped by the leading "educators" such as are supervising "Education Week." They are taught to pay reverence to a flag which symbolizes—not freedom—but a dollarocracy which drips with the blood of the workers of America, Europe, Asia and South America. They are taught to believe that they must be obedient slaves in industry so that they may some day emulate the Rockefellers and Morgans, altho it is well known that the vast majority of the school children must enter industry and there work for meagre wages under the most vicious conditions.

The millions of young workers engaged in the industries of America—the millions of child laborers toiling in the cotton mills of the South, spell hypocricy and deceit, to every line of "American Eudaction Week."

The workers of America, young and old, must mobilize their forces against this attempt to further intensify the propaganda and lies of the bosses of America. We must counter their slogans and propaganda with our working class slogans and demands, and intensify our efforts to organize the workers, adult, youth or child into labor unions of America and into their respective political organizations.

What Price Glory.

A REVIEW.

If you are in tragic-comic mood, and your crtical senses are not too acutely attuned, an entertaining evening can be spent at the Studebaker, seeing "What Price Glory."

We have heard and read of the horrors of war in terms of mass butchery, but here we having portrayed, in vivid fashion, the physical and psychic reactions of the individual under the terrific strain of fire. It is a distinct triumph for the social psychologists, this re-creating of the individual by the inexorable force of circumstance.

While Messrs. Anderson and Stallings must be accredited with a great deal of courage in so honestly portraying phases of war that we have been vaguely aware of, but do not care to discuss, they might have probed more deeply in the souls of those vague, unknowing victims, massed for destruction, who don't quite know what it's all about.

Louis Wolheim is superb. His portrayal of the hard boiled, courageous drunken captain, with an acute sense of fair play, is a masterpiece. Vividly portraying, yet not overplaying, Wolheim at all moments dominates the stage.

William Boyd, as the equally hard-boiled top sergeant, living hard and clean in terms of his own morality, supports Wolheim ably.

The only feminine character, Charmaine, the innkeepers daughter, portrayed by Jeannette Fox-Lee, a charming bit of flesh who is in love with life, will not be forgotten.

A good book on Communism will make you a better Communist.

Roumanian Boyars Murder Max Goldstein

BUCHAREST, Nov. 18.—The bourgeois paper, Dimineata which one can certainly not accuse of having anything in common with Max Goldstein who died in the Doftan prison writes that he broke off the 40-day hunger strike on the urgent request of his sister. The prison director agreed that the prisoner would be fed according to medical instructions.

Ten days afterwards, however, the family of the prisoner received the information that the guards did not give Goldstein any food on the order of the prison director. The prison doctor Floru was informed of this fact and undertook an examination of the completly weakened Goldstein in the presence of his sister. The sister stated that Goldstein told, during this examination, that he had not received any food for the last ten days, a fact which was also proved by the medical examination.

Immediately, after the visit of the doctor, the agony of Goldstein began and he died still on the same day. Dimineata demands the strictest investigation of the case and declares that nobody has the right to pass a death sentence against Goldstein in this fashion after the court had sentenced him only to prison for life.

Navy Yard Draftsmen Demand Wage Increase

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Navy yards of the country face a shutdown or wholesale laying off of employes unless draftsmen are given increased pay, the navy wage board has been told by representatives of the navy yard draftsmen.

CO[illegible]MUNISTS DEFY FASCIST TERROR

COALDIGGERS HAVE HARD TIME IN MINE STRIKE WHILE UNION HEADS PLAY OPERATORS' GAME

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

ARTICLE VII.

HAZLETON, Pa., Nov. 19.—Ask anyone in this city where the headquarters of the United Mine Workers for this district is located, how long the strike will last and most of them will tell you:

"Until the operators dispose of their surplus coal."

But a new opinion is slowly making headway since the breakdown of the negotiations started by Pinchot. The belief is taking shape that the operators do not want any kind of a settlement with the union except one that will ruin it as a weapon of the coal diggers.

In other words, some sanity is beginning to creep in to the minds of people who hitherto had been regarding the "suspension" more or less as a temporary disagreement between friends.

Among the best informed of the miners, those closest to the national and district officialdom, this belief in a much longer and more bitter struggle than was expected at first finds confirmation.

Orders have been issued in the last day or so to local unions to discontinue relief to all except the most needy and urgent cases. Hitherto the local unions have been allowed, except in special cases, to make their own regulations for strike relief and some locals have practically emptied their treasuries.

There is no acute distress in the anthracite fields as yet, but this strike has to be fought under adverse weather conditions contrary to those

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

SINCE the late Dean O'Bannion, gunman, florist and gentleman of many other qualities, became the repository of enough lead to sink a battleship, there was no greater diversion than following the antics of the Chicago police dodging the shadow of Martin Durkin, automobile thief and war hero who shot a government detective and a policeman and scared the rest of the police department. The citizens are vastly in greater danger of getting shot up by the police than they are of getting robbed or killed by gangsters and burglars.

DURKIN made a living separating automobiles from their owners, ever since he returned from making the world safe for democracy. He was over in France during the war and getting praised in the capitalist press while radicals who opposed the war were getting into jail. Evidently Martin came to the conclusion that if it was proper for him to shoot Germans over in France in order to save the loans of the House of Morgan, he would be justified in doing a little killing here to save himself from getting killed or at least from a jail sentence. But he did not have the dope straight. The war is over and good heroes are a drug on the market. They are committing suicide every day, while the "Huns" are now welcome on Fifth avenue, New York and on the Gold Coast of Chicago.

THE first to fall before Durkin's gat was a gentleman by the name of Shanahan who participated in the raid on the Communist convention at Bridgeman. Somebody else can shed my tears over his demise. Immediately the cops gave chase and looked into garbage cans, milk bottles and tall hats for the missing bandit. Finally they got a tip that he was to visit a certain house one night. Captain Schoemaker, reported to be the greatest policeman in the United States, surrounded the house with enough policemen to dry up the headquarters of the Genna alcohol gang. Durkin and his wife walked into the house and before the smoke of battle cleared, Durkin had killed one policeman and the policeman killed or wounded everybody else except Durkin, who is breaking his sides laughing at his pursuers—perhaps on Michigan boulevard.

A FEW evenings ago another police officer announced that he was going to capture Durkin that very night. To show how clever he was he had the story on the front page of an afternoon newspaper with

COKE MINERS RAZZ FAGAN FOR SPEECH

Want to Fight Bosses, Not Progressives

By A. JAKIRA.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MARIANNA, Pa., Nov. 18.—Several thousand miners from various parts of the coke region gathered together in mass meeting in this city Sunday, November 15, to express their solidarity with the men who are out on strike against the attempts of the Bethlehem Steel corporation to enforce the 1917 scale. The mass meeting, held in open air, was arranged by the Union Mine Workers of America. Philip Murray and Fagan, president of the Union Mine Workers, District No. 5, were present to address the meeting.

The police and the armed sheriffs were conspicious by their absence while the thousands of miners were gathering in trucks and busses, full of enthusiasm and determination to fight to the very limit for a living wage and for the union. Every one was anxious to hear what the head of the Miners' Union of District No. 5, had to say about the situation. Every one was waiting for the president of District No. 5 of the U. M. W. to outline before this historic gathering a plan of action against the outrageous actions of the operators.

Wants No Fight With Bosses.

After speakers addressed the huge gathering in Italian and Croation, Fagan mounted the platform and opened his speech with a plea for unity of all factions in the organization. He then proceeded to "praise" the U. M. W. of A. for its being a peaceful organization always ready to meet the operators at a "round table" to discuss agreements in order to avoid a fight.

He followed this up by further

WHERE IS THE POLICY OF HILLMAN IN "THE AMALGAMATED" TAKING THE MEMBERS AND THE OFFICIALS?

By BEN. GORDON.

The latest developments in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers are not at all surprising. At least not to those members who take an active part in the organization, who have been watching closely the acts and accomplishments of our union in the past 20 months.

The most disgusting incidents in our union are the latest sluggings of our brothers and sisters that took place at last Friday night's general membership meeting, and was followed up at the Sunday morning gathering.

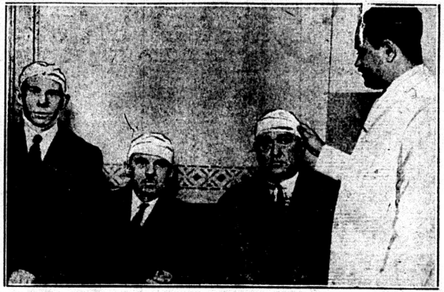
Who Is Responsible?



HERE is a reproduction of a photograph taken following an attack made on many members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America meeting in a public hall in Chicago last Sunday. It shows only three of the many victims.

The attack was not made by the hired sluggers of the employers. It was made by armed thugs, flashing revolvers and carrying blackjacks, under the direction of officals of the union.

But it is not enough to charge that these minor officials are guilty of this criminal and dastardly attack on the members of their own union.

Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, had just spent nearly a week in the city. He was in the Ashland (Carmen's) Auditorium last Friday night, when similar attacks were made on numerous members attending the union meeting to consider the raising an emergency strike fund, an aftermath of the strike against the International Tailoring Company.

Sam Levin, manager of the Chicago Joint Board, and also a member of the General Executive Board of the union, was in the Ashland Auditorium and knew of the sluggings taking place in the same building.

So did Sidney Rissman, assistant manager of the Chicago Joint Board, and another General Executive Board member.

Hillman, Levin and Rissman, while condoning the vicious beating up of union members at last Friday night's meeting, thru their failure to repudiate such tactics, also expose themselves to the charge that they were responsible for the murderous attack Sunday morning, two days later, on these members of their own union.

It is not sufficient to blame minor officials.

The members of the union must join in looking higher up to find an answer to the question:

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Attack Mine Safety Law As An Aid to Scabbing

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 19.—The drive for the repeal of the Pennsylvania miners' license law has begun. All open shop organizations on the Atlantic seaboard are today in receipt of a resolution passed Tuesday by the Manufacturers' Association of West Philadelphia which says: "Resolved, that the Manufacturers' Association of West Philadelphia invites the entire citizenship of Pennsylvania to join with it in an urgent demand for the repeal of such laws as give the United Mine Workers of America a labor monopoly in the anthracite industry, and that other existing evils which characterize the production of anthracite coal be eliminated by making effective the principles laid down in the anthracite award of 1903, to the end that anthracite coal may be made available to the public on a basis of efficiency, reasonable costs and continuity."

The resolution states further that the miners' license law which requires a minimum of two years mining exeperience before men are allowed to work at the face, "is unreasonable, discriminatory, indefensible and wholly un-American."

The immediate purpose of the drive against the miners' license law, which has saved the lives of thousands of workers since its passage, is to force Pinchot to call a special session of the legislature for its repeal.

This new move of the bosses is interpreted as an indication that speedy settlement of the strike is probable, altho such open shop organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers, the Founders' Association and the National Erectors' Association, declare that it is "designed to bring early peace in the anthracite fields."

Speaking for the miners here last night, Chris Golden, president of district nine, said that "the men in the anthracite fields will lie down and die rather than accept neutral arbitration of the present controversy with the operators."

ENEMY OF RED INTERNATIONAL OF LABOR UNIONS ALTERS HIS STAND AT I. W. W. CONVENTION

"I believe that the I. W. W. has everything to gain and nothing to lose at this time by affiliation with the Red International of Labor Unions."

The above is the closing sentence of the report of Gordon Cascaden, an old and influential member of the Industrial Workers of the World, to the 17th general convention of that organization, in an effort to correct the harm done by a previous report in 1921 against affiliation to the R. I. L. U.

Copies of the report were delivered to each delegate on Monday, but a dead silence has greeted it at the convention, and he was not given the floor to elaborate or explain, under a rule seemingly made for the occasion. After some effort The DAILY WORKER has obtained a copy, which is much too long to publish here in full, but which may be summarized as follows:

Progress or Die.

The I. W. W., like everything else, must go forward or backward. Like other American movements, it is passing thru a crisis. Reference is made to the long contact he had with the I. W. W., which "moulded his life."

Reference is made to the report of the general executive board in 1920 to the convention that year, favoring affiliation to the Communist Interna-

POLICE RAID MINERS' HALL; SLUG PICKETS

By GEORGE PAPCUN

REPUBLIC, Pa.—(By Mail)—State police this week raided strike head quarters of the coal miners here, following the beating up of pickets at Tower Hill No. 1 mine and the arrest of a striker on the highway.

No strikers were arrested when the raid took place, tho copies of strike leaflets and of The DAILY WORKER were confiscated. When one of the police saw the article in the Nov. 11th DAILY WORKER telling of Gov. Pinchot's proposed strike mediation, he said, "Here is something about our dear governor."

The "dear governor's" police are active beating up strikers on the picket line, besides arresting one on the public road on the charge of carrying concealed weapons. This charge was made, despite the fact that all strikers have been instructed not to carry

TERRIFIC FIGHT RAGES IN THE ITALIAN PARLIAMENT AS MAFFI CHALLENGES MUSSOLINI

ROME, Italy, Nov. 19.—Serious disorders broke out in the chamber of deputies this afternoon when the Communist deputy, Maffi, rose and hurled defiance at the Mussolini regime, as a result of the fascist chief yesterday demanding complete domination of the government, proclaiming himself responsible only to the king and practically destroying the parliamentary form of government.

In a bitter speech Maffi declared that the demonstration for Mussolini in the chamber of deputies yesterday was a mechanically staged affair and did not at all represent the sentiment of the country towards the premier. Fascist deputies and their supporters created a terrific uproar and fist fighting ensued in which the chamber was thrown into a general melee.

The Communist deputy was finally forcibly ejected from the chamber after being terribly beaten by the bandit gang under the leadership of Mussolini. He fought well against terrific odds and it was only the overwhelming numbers of fascist deputies and their hangers-on that enabled them to eject him.

Reign of Assassination.

The proposal to abolish parliament is nothing more than a brazen effort to stifle all criticism of the murderous rule of fascism. The affair of the murder of the socialist deputy, Matteotti, determined Mussolini to take drastic steps to prevent a repitition of it. In the Matteoti case a parliamentary struggle ensued which gave the outer world a glimpse of the total depravity of the government. Also it was the presence in parliament of Matteotti with incriminating documents of graft and governmental thievery against Mussolini and his lieutenants that caused the fascist chief to order the assassination of Matteotti before he could expose the government.

Mussolini hopes, thru the dispersal of parliament, to be enabled to conduct his campaign of assassination unchecked by any exposures.

Bill Will Pass.

The new and drastic bill proposed by Mussolini will unquestionably pass, and only a small group of Communists and a few liberals will combat it, tho they admit they have no chance of defeating it.

In his speech yesterday Mussolini indulged in the fustian and bombast that has caused him to be ridiculed as the braggart of Europe. He told his fascist thugs that deputies in parliaments outside of Italy were insulting "this people" (meaning fascism). "I tell you," bellowed the tyrant, "that no regime can be menaced from abroad because as soon as this menace rises the nation rises as one man. I will not menace any government but in my capacity as chief of this government, I warn the entire world."

Even the saner elements among the fascists could hardly suppress smiles at this vain glorious boasting, as they know the position of Italy precludes it menacing any nations other than the weaker European powers, and that, at best, it can only be the pawn of larger and more powerful governments.

Communists Will Fight.

The Communists have been steadily gaining in influence among the masses of workers in Italy and they are prepared to become completely illegal and prepare for the armed struggle against the fascist regime. Other opposition activities, particularly those of the yellow socialists and liberals are likely to be shifted from Italy to adjoining countries, as the result of the drastic legislation laid before the chamber of deputies last night by Premier Mussolini, it was stated today.

This action is being planned despite the fact that Mussolini has also proposed legislation which would deny citizenship to Italians who operate against fascismo from foreign bases and would confiscate the Italian property of such persons.

The newspaper Impero states that maximalist socialists are planning to transfer to Paris their daily newspaper Avanti, which is scheduled for suppression.

Sign Tariff Agreement.

MADRID, Nov. 19.—A temporary six months commercial agreement between Spain and Germany has been signed. The treaty provides for a reciprocal reduction of tariffs.

Small Try Surrender.

Five of the persons indicted by a federal grand jury here as participants in a $9,000,000 beer syndicate surrendered here and prepared to give bonds of $5,000 each.

MUSSOLINI TERRORISM GETS $100,000,000 OF LOOT FROM J. P. MORGAN

According to an announcement from New York yesterday, the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. and a group of other bankers controlled by Morgan have arranged a loan of $100,000,000 to the fascist dictator of Italy. This is the first definite result of the Italian debt settlement and it is worthy of note that the loan is made at the identical moment Mussolini is launching a more vicious terror against the people of Italy than ever before.

The workers of America should most vehemently protest against this government supporting the blood-streaked bandit who waded to power thru oceans of blood of the working class and now holds power as the agent of American imperialism.

REBELS STILL GAIN AGAINST FRENCH FORCES

Avalanche of Lies Flood the World

BEIRUT, Syria, Nov. 19.—Steadily advancing in Lebanon the rebel forces fighting the French invaders march from victory to victory. In spite of the flood of recruits being sent in to aid the French butchers, the hordes of natives from the south pouring into the rebel armies far more than offset the French.

The French forces here are desperate and the pen prostitutes on the capitalist press of the United States, France and Italy, are sending out lurid tales, containing not one syllable of truth, to the effect that American women and children are being held prisoners by the rebels. This cannot too emphatically be branded a lie out of whole cloth.

The stories wired from this part of the world to the Chicago Tribune by George Seldes are monstrous fabrications concocted for the purpose of preparing the way for the invasion of American forces now lying menacingly in Syrian and Lebanon ports, anxious for an excuse to aid the French maintain their domination over Syria.

No Rebel Prisoners.

The rebels are not holding any prisoners and if there are any American women and children being held they are detained by French mercenaries with the full knowledge of the conspirators representing the American government who are doing everything within their power to create a situation that will give the American forces a chance to join the French in their attempted looting of Syria and Lebanon.

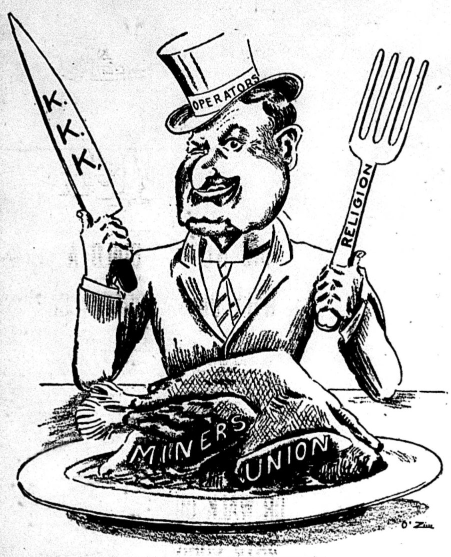
A THANKSGIVING DAY DREAM



ENGINEERS AND FIREMEN DEMAND WAGE INCREASES

Brotherhoods Out for War-Time Pay

General chairmen of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen went into session here to draft their demands upon the railroads of the United States and Canada for a return to the scale of wages which prevailed during the war.

The new contract will also ask for charges in working rules and conditions.

The wage increase which will be demanded is approximately 7 per cent more than was granted in the ago when 5 per cent of the 12 per cent lopped off by the United States railroad labor board in 1920 was restored. A demand for the full 12 per cent will be served on those roads on which the New York Central scale has not been put into effect.

Switchmen Meet Next.

The switchmen's organization will meet here in about two weeks to formulate similar demands, according to a call issued by the union president.

Backs Trainmens' Demands.

This meeting of the Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen follows the conference held by the general chairmen on the western roads of the conductors and trainmen. The present conference of the firemen and engineers declares itself to stand behind the fight of the trainmen in its demands to return to the war-time basis.

Rebels in Syria Still Gain Against the Forces of France

Syrians now in progress.

Such a course has been recommended by Lieut. Col. Cecil L'Estrange Malone, former M. P., and well-known war aviator.

French efforts to secure British support for their campaign against the Djebel Druses in Syria is believed to be the purpose back of a conference held this afternoon between Foreign Minister Austen Chamberlain and M. D. Jouvenel, French high commissioner designate for Syria.

M. D Jouvenel is understood to have made a plea for close co-operation between the French and the British in the Near East.

The British have taken action to prevent the rebellion spreading into Palestine, but it is doubtful whether they will consent to taking any action beyond the limits of the frontiers of their own mandates, as British policy is to discredit France and take the mandate for herself.

An Enemy of the Red International

tional. Also that "the convention itself sent out a call for a world convention of militant labor organizations to be held in Moscow in 1921." Cascaden was publicity representative at the 1920 convention and sent this call out.

Cascaden tells of how thousands of I. W. W. rushed to Russia, aided and are still aiding the revolution, suffering privations in the red army and in the long, painful reconstruction. It is right in this economic reconstruction period that the I. W. W. should be most helpful and friendly. The organization is reminded that it supported the revolution at its beginning. Cascaden holds that it was the "difference" between those in America who supported it, that "started the present semi-official opposition."

Two Points Caused It.

Reference is made to the high opinion of the Russian Bolsehviks of the old I. W. W. But Cascaden, as delegate to the first congress of the R. I. L. U., says his oppoosition to the R. I. L. U. was based at that congress on two proposals. One the organic connection between the Red Internationl of Labor Unions and the Communist International of political parties. Second, on the proposal of the congress to recognize the One Big Union of Canada as the "real revolutionary force in that country."

These differences and how they no longer exist are recited in detail, and the hostility deplored which was based on them. Full documentary proof is given to show that the organic connection between the economic R. I. L. U. and the political Communist International was ended and only a necessary co-operation established at the second congress.

I. W. W. Has Ignored Change.

This change had been recognized by the French and other syndicalists, who promptly affiliated. But the I. W. W. had ignored that their main objection to affiliation was removed. Considerable documentary proof is given to show that Russian unions exercise great power in the Soviet government and are not "dominated" as the enemies of that government imply.

As to the One Big Union of Canada. Its refusal to endorse the R. I. L. U. upon the motion of its delegate to the first congress, its opposition to industrial unionism, etc., proves, says Cascaden, that he was right in his stand against it at the first congress.

Opposes Anarchists.

Cascaden sterly opposes the anarchist international of Berlin. Its influence and that of the yellow socialists he feels caused the attacks he deplores—"for example, an attack on William Z. Foster in the official organ of the I. W. W. at a time when he was about to face trial. It was a reprint from a menshevik paper." Justus Ebert was responsible for that, he says. Other attacks on Soviet Russia he cites in the Industrial Pioneer and the Industrial Worker.

As far back as January, 1923, Cascaden asserts, he had opposed this sort of slander on Soviet Russia, and defended it in many articles since For four years he had studied the question from November, 1923 to November, 1924, in France and England, surveying the world movement and consulting with all sides, with the result:

"I believe sincerely that the Russian revolution is one of the greatest events of all times." Upon this basis he "recommends to the I. W. W. that it go half way to restore its previous association with the Russian revolutionists, the Red International of Labor Unions and the Communist (Third) International."

Berlin Supports I. W. W. Splitters.

Cascaden shows that Russia's enemies are the enemies also of the I. W. W. Referring to the Anarchist International he says:

"Nor can we associate with the professional anarchist politicians of the 'International Workingmen's Association,' who damn every Marxian program. They condemn the I. W. W. They give support to a small group who left the organization and begged a capitalist court to please grant them an injunction.

"The I. W. W. should consider affiliation with the Red International of Labor Unions. It should seek affiliation on the same terms as the French—with autonomy. Already Section 2 of the 1921 program regarding the relationship between the two internationals has been eliminated.

". . . It would give support to left wing labor organizations everywhere. It would also bring about a recovery of the I. W. W.'s prestige as a great force in the world labor movement.

"If you of the I. W. W. got control tomorrow, what would you do? The same as in Russia. You would have to organize the police, the secret service, the army. You would proclaim a dictatorship and you would jail the mensheviks and others opposed to the I. W. W. or Bolshevik program Would you make mistakes? Yes Would you retreat? Yes. Then consider Russia.

"Soviet Russia, the Red Union and the Third International are nearer to us than any other workers' movements. Support them. Back them and then, many believe, the I. W. W. will carry aloft once more in North America the red banner of the proletariat in the great struggle between capital and labor that is drawing near.

"To you, fellow workers, I appeal for on my report on the First Congress of the Red International of Labor Unions, a number of members of the I. W. W. made their decisions regarding Soviet Russia."

CIVIL WAR IN CHINA VICTORY FOR LIBERATION

Imperialist Tools Lose Everywhere

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PEKING, China, Nov. 19.—After hard fighting, the army of Feng Yuhsiang commanded by General Teng Pao-san, has captured the city of Paoting-Fu, capital of the province of Chihli from Chang Tso-lin's troops. This city lies 100 miles southwest of Peking.

Reaction Losing South.

In South China, also, the forces of counter-revolution are in retreat. Their generals, Chen Chiung-ming and Teng Pen-yin are in precarious condition, according to Teng's own wire to Peking asking for a cruiser to be sent against the liberation forces he terms as "reds." This is the provinces of Pakhoi and Honan.

In Kwantung province, Chen's army has been completely driven out toward Fukien, where the nationalist liberation army is preparing to attack.

At Tsingtao the fifth Shantung division of Chang's army mutined, and when the brigade of 3,000 white guard Russian monarchist troops tried to attack them with armored cars, promptly killed the whole three thousand, only a few escaping.

Most of the Fengtien Manchurian troops in Shantung are natives of Shantung and will doubtless all go over to Wu Pei-fu's advancing armies. The whole population favors anybody against Chang Tso-lin.

Karakhan Tells of Struggle.

MOSCOW, Nov. 19.—Prior to his departure for Peking, M. Karakhan, the Soviet ambassador to China, said that while the army of General Chang Tso-lin, the Manchuria war lord, probably was greater in strenght than any other, the sympathies of the people were on the side of General Feng Yu-hsiang, "the christian general."

"There is widespread dissension among General Chang's forces," declared M. Karakhan, "while there is no friction whatever in General Feng's army. Whole regiments of Chang's army are deserting and going over to General Feng. Feng's army shows high discipline and great defensive ability."

The ambassador said that in spite of the insignificant numbers of men in the Canton army, the Canton government was a very stable one. "This army," he added, "is united under the revolutionary leadership and constitutes one of the strongest elements for the independence of China."

29 Suppressions of Newspapers in Month by Polish Landlords

WARSAW, (By Mail.)—During the month of September as many as 29 suppressions of different White-Russian, Ukrainian and other papers were ordered by court decisions. Besides confiscations a number of arrests were effected and trials of editors conducted. Thus, the editor of the White-Russian Dilo, D. Palico was arrested. The editors of Tribune Rabotnicha and Tygodnik Rabotchi and of other monthlies, Newbauer, Inovolski, and Novakovski were sentenced to 2 and 4 years of hard labor.

The oldest White-Russian paper Krinitza, which had existed for about 20 years and withstood all the blows of the czarist and German-occupationist censorship, was confiscated. The editor is charged on 10 counts.

The paper of the Independent Peasant Party, Valka Orechi was suppressed, as well as the Warsaw weekly Predvestnie.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 19.—Labor department studies of retail food prices show an average increase of 1.5 per cent between Sept. 15 and Oct. 15, and of 8.5 per cent during the twelve months ending on the latter date.

Protection of Children in Russia Is Product of the 1917 Revolution

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, without having read the attack in the Chicago Tribune on the care of children in Soviet Russia, the editor of the Russian Review, issued from Washington, D. C., publishes an article on children's health protection in the Soviet Union, in which this initial declaration is made:

> "The systematic protection of the health of children and youth in the Soviet Union is a product of the revolution.
> "Before the revolution . . . . the question of physical and psychological treatment of the abnormal child was entirely ignored and left to private charity.
> "After the revolution of 1917 the protection of children's health became a concern of the state."

The Chicago Tribune will not publish that.

• • • •

That is the change, greeted with joy especially by the younger generation in the Soviet Union, that the Tribune is trying to hide from the workers of this country by gross exaggeration of the fact that there are still a few homeless children, orphans, who may be found leading wayward lives in the great Russian cities, that have not yet been lifted completely out of czarist degradation resulting from capitalist misrule.

One of the first acts of the Bolshevik revolution, in November, 1917, was the establishment of the Department of Children's Health Protection for both normal and abnormal children.

By 1918, when the world war was coming to an end, enabling the imperialist nations to turn their attention to war on Soviet Russia, this department had already undertaken the task of creating standardized children's health institutions "to serve as models for similar establishments in the provinces."

• • • •

The farce of physical examinations and medical advice is gone thru with in the schools of some American cities. But this only results in telling parents what ails their children. It gives parents no help to take care of their children, or effect a cure. To urge that this be done is labelled "pure Communism." Soviet Russia in practice shows this charge to be true. It gives the children the actual care they will never receive in any capitalist country.

Russian children are not only told what ails them, defects inherited from czarism, but every effort is made to banish all defects. Dispensaries have been established, where specialists may be consulted. But these are only the centers "for the work of all physicians looking after the health of the children." Thru these dispensaries contacts are made with the broadest masses of the population, "by means of dispensary service, the assignment of children to institutions, dietetic feeding, day sanatoria, medical aid, home visiting and so on."

There are forest schools for frail children, specially equipped colonies for serious cases, children's summer playgrounds, and to arouse interest propaganda weeks for the protection of the health of school children.

• • • •

There is a mistaken notion that life on the farm is healthful. In the United States it has been shown that the standard of health conditions in rural communities is below that in the cities. This was also true under czarism. Soviet Russia is devoting special attention to the protection of the health of the rural workers.

No one could ever imagine American capitalism issuing a decree that employment of youth under 18 years of age without a preliminary medical examination is prohibited. That is a Soviet decree.

One result has been the organization of 24,820 workers' physical culture clubs thruout the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic (Soviet Russia proper).

• • • •

A new race of human beings is developing under the red flag of the revolution in Russia. The upward struggle is not only for the strong. Even the weakest get every possible aid and encouragement.

Under capitalism the old adage applies: "The race is to the strong, let the devil take the hindmost." Such a policy degrades all.

On the question of health alone the mighty heel of Soviet rule presses ever harder upon the neck of capitalism.

STRIKING MINERS FIND TOM RAY A VICTIM OF ATTEMPTED FRAME-UP

By A. JAKIRA.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 19.—An attempt has been made—and defeated—to frame upon Tom Ray, progressive miners' leader who is active at Republic, Pa., in the miners' strike.

A framed-up document was "found" alleged to be addressed to Ray, purporting to show him to be an employe of the department of justice.

But a committee of the strikers, elected by them, after a thoro investigation established beyond a shadow of a doubt that the letter was faked, and the committee is now investigating whether the mining company or the reactionary union officials are responsible for the frame up against Tom Ray.

Tom was recently bitterly attacked by union officials for his active part in the progressive miners' movement, and company agents, also, are trying to discredit the Workers Party in order to break the strike.

Two Negro Workers Killed as Beam Snaps While Wrecking Hotel

A. HOFFMAN.

(Worker Correspondent.)

ALLENTON, Pa., Nov. 19—While at work wrecking the old American Hotel here, the third floor collapsed and instantly killed Morris Johnson, Negro, and knocked A. Oakley, another Negro unconscious who later died on his way to the hospital and severely injured the leg of William Stoudt, a white worker who was taken to the Allentown Hospital. All three of these workers are laborers.

Louis A. Potruch, head of the company which had charge of razing the building, attempted to throw the blame for the accident on the men for not properly propping up the rotten beam which gave way before carrying on their work. The workers for this company call this the worst slave-driving concern in Allentown and blame the accident onto the speed-up system the company uses.

This company is also known for its attempts to force workers to work on Saturday afternoon for straight pay and if the worker refuses he is fired immediately. Oftentimes, groups of ten and fifteen workers are discharged by this company for this reason.

weapons and were searched before leaving the meeting place.

Miners here have hordes of stool-pigeons to deal with. One of them, Frank Kushman, was elected for a short time to be president of the strikers. It didn't take long for them to find him out, however, and when he began to interfere with their picketing he was kicked out of office unanimously. He returned back to work the next day and tried to get the men to go with him, but he was unsuccessful.

an eight column headline. The details of the plan were given minutely, so that Durkin would have no excuse of calling his enemies "dirty dogs" for not giving him a sporting chance. Durkin is still at large and perfectly safe provided he can spend about 25 cents a day on the newspapers. About the only function those wonderful policemen can perform efficiently is breaking up radical meetings or arresting and slugging striking trade unionists.

WE also had the famous Druggan and Lake case which opened up the scandal in the county jail. There was a big splurge for awhile but it has quieted down. Why? Because every government office from that of the state's attorney to the police department is involved. The warden was found guilty of having accepted "gifts" from the two millionaire bootleggers. His only defense is that he has a "cement" head and could not reason correctly. We never saw the blockhead who could not think a roll of bills looked good. This same warden boasted of being active in the raids on the anti-war agitators in 1917. His head was all right for that kind of work.

His own business would keep a respectably large establishment busy. Yet hundreds of officials of city and state accepted his invitation because he controls enough gats to turn defeat into victory in a tight election. Great and glorious democracy!

EVEN those with short memories remember the cyclone that raged thruout the country when it was learned that Albert B. Fall, secretary of the interior turned over naval oil lands to the two oil magnates, Doheny and Fall. Fall got a hundred thousand dollars from one of the burglars and a herd of cattle from the other. At least this much was discovered when detectives went on his trail. He is still at large. So are the burglars, Doheny and Sinclair. A few goats were thrown to the wolves. Publicly the capitalist politicians denounced Fall for his conduct and privately said: "It's too damn bad the poor devil was caught with the goods. He needed the money."

WHEN it happens that a man of great wealth goes to jail in the United States, "the earth trembles, the sky darkens, the dead arise and appear to many." This means that they never go to jail unless they rob bankers. The bankers are sensitive lads. Even the governor of Indiana could not get away with robbing the bankers. When you compare the ease with which millionaires violate their own laws, rob the public domain as well as each other, and get away with it, how can anybody with some gray matter between the ears have anything but a feeling of disgust for the hypocritical babbits who pose as patriots? But let a working man get entangled in the law, particularly if he is trying to help his fellow workers and see what will happen to him.

PATRIOTISM indeed is the last refuge of the scoundrel. There are few greater scoundrels in South America than former President Allessandri of Chile. He was one of those mainly responsible for the slaughter of thousands of men, women and children during the strike in the nitrate fields of Chile some time ago. At the present moment, there is a serious dispute between Chile and Peru over the settling of a boundary disagreement by plebiscite. This man Allessandri was asked by somebody whether he intended to run for public office. He replied in the negative on the ground that he would devote his whole time to patriotism. Not even Calvin Coolidge could do better than that.

WORKER
CORRESPONDENCE

INITIATION TOO HIGH, BUT UNION WON'T LET WORKER PAY $75.00 FEE IN PARTS

EDITOR'S NOTE: This story shows how important are the so-called "little" incidents that happen in the every-day life of workers,—for instance, being forced to paint a floor with a brush "hard as a brick or with half the hairs gone"; and splashing the paint in one's eyes, knowing all the time that this petty boss-inefficiency is part and parcel of the huge boss-inefficiency of capitalism, against which workers are kept from fighting by labor-fakers who insist that they can't even join a union unless they pay a $75 initiation fee, all in one lump.

"Nothing that happens to the workers in unimportant," as Comrade Wm. F. Dunne says in his pamphlet on Worker Correspondents. "It is by paying attention to all the ordinary woes of the working class that Communist journalism demonstrates its class character. It is only in the Communist press that the workers find a knowledge of their smallest grievances, understanding of the causes of these grievances and the connection of them with their struggles as a class."

• • • •

BY A WORKER CORRESPONDENT

NEW YORK, N. Y., Nov. 19.—The painting trade should be well-organized with every worker in the union. But I am sorry to say that many do not belong. The reason is that the union wants $75 cash, and in one payment, for new members. That keeps many painters out.

The other day a prospective union member wanted to pay $10 a week, but the secretary told him "Nothing doing,—$75 cold cash." It is claimed that they may raise the fee to $150.

This is a Killing Trade.

This trade is an unhealthy trade—it is a killing trade and gets many workers. There should be a six-hour day and a five-day week for all unhealthy trades so that we workers could live a little longer.

I have been a painter for the last four years. Most of the time I am out of work. When I do work, I work mostly for small bosses who have only a few days' work. A painter sure has to kill himself to make his $10.50 a day (which only union men get). Next to experience, speed is what counts most—speed, speed, speed!

Three Hours Exploitation—$19.00.

The bosses make from $10 to $20 a day clear profit from us workers. It took me three hours to shellac five large floors the other day on West Broadway. The boss gets from $5.00 up for a floor, material costs $3.00 and labor power costs $4.50. This boss made at least $19.00 profit from my labor of only three hours. What about the other five hours I slaved and was exploited?

The bosses are never satisfied with how much workers do. We painters must work with brushes often not fit for use. They give us brushes hard as a brick, or with half of the hairs gone. When you work with brushes like that, it means that you lose your efficiency. They also splash and paint goes into your eyes. Many times we have to work in flats which are dark and all lights shut off.

Nothing We Can't Do!

The time will come when all workers will know what the class struggle means and then great masses will get together—and then there will be nothing we can't do.

FEAR OF INJURY DRIVES LABOR OUT OF FOUNDRY

Loss of Union Deprives Men of Protection

By A Worker Correspondent

COSHOCTON, Ohio, Nov. 19.—Since the J. B. Clow and Co., pipe foundry, succeeded in breaking up the Moulders' Union with the help of scabs in the 1922 strike, working conditions in the shop have been getting worse and worse. Some of the best moulders have had to quit because they could not stand the new speed-up pace and because of lack of protection from hot sand dust and gas from shake-outs in pits and moulding floor.

The men are in constant danger from big casting and from big ladles of red hot iron carried over them by electric cranes. The crane operators have the most nerve-wrecking jobs. Gas and dust is thickest up above where they operate cranes. This aggravates the danger of hitting some one under them.

Common laborers, who have the dirtiest work and are the poorest paid, have been ordered to speed up more or get fired. When a fellow worker was killed this fall by a big flask falling on him, the foremen would allow the men five minutes' stoppage of work to pay respects to their dead shopmate on the funeral day.

As the place is full of stoolpigeons, it makes it hard for the workers to take united action to resist the company's methods. But it is expected that some organization will be formed soon, as dissatisfaction is growing by leaps and bounds.

No Talking in Shop, New Studebaker Rule

By A Worker Correspondent

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Nov. 19.—No worker can leave his bench to talk to a shop-mate, not even for a few seconds, according to the new ruling just introduced at the Studebaker Auto plant. Evidently the rule is a preparation against any attempts at protesting recent wage-cuts and new speed-up methods. Besides, conveyor systems are being installed, making conditions even worse.

There are no unions to help the workers resist, and hope for progress is further held back by the workers' religious fanaticism.

Workers to Fight Machine Speed-Up

By A Worker Correspondent

MILWAUKEE, Wisc., Nov. 19.—Workers in the International Harvester Co. plant here are preparing to resist a new speed-up system which they fear will be installed in accordance with the company's plans to increase their output from 75 to 150 tractors daily.

An additional building is being put up for the purpose of lengthening the assembly line. Workers are not taking the news with cheer. They understand that when the increased output begins, the company will not hire extra men in accordance with doubling of the work, but instead will drive the present force harder.

When that argument begins at lunch time in your shop tomorrow—show them what the DAILY WORKER says about it.

FORD WORKERS FORCED TO AID 'CHARITY' FUND

Collection Taken Up By Shop Foreman

By A Worker Correspondent

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 19—The Ford organization (so it calls itself) has endorsed the Detroit "Community Fund" to show how liberal Mr. Ford is. And also to show the world that his employees are treated so well that they also feel liberal. But if you are working for the company, you can tell a different tale.

The Foreman Collects.

In the tool room of the River Rouge plant on last pay-day, the foreman left the following note with the leaders under him: "Notify your men to come prepared tomorrow to donate to the Community Fund." And the workers were warned to come prepared, whether they wanted to or not. Next day the tool room foreman was sent man to man collecting.

Stool-Pigeon on the Job

But this wasn't enough for the big boss, who wears the star, so on the following day he had a stool pigeon (so-called service man) to whip the men into line in front of his desk.

I lined up with the rest to see how it was done. There were 6 or 7 men ahead of me, and the stool pigeon was telling the men to have their money ready; even those who had given the day before. One man ahead of me handed over 50c.

The boss said, "What's the matter, can't you give any more?"

He answered, "No, I have a family and an invalid sister to support."

Boss, "Is this true?"

Worker, "Yes."

Boss, "What's your name and address?; we'll investigate this"

Worker, "Go ahead!"

Not Compulsory.

When my turn came, I asked him: "Is this compulsory?"

He hummed and hawed for a while; then he said; "No, but we are trying to get two dollars from each man."

I answered that if it was not compulsory, I was not going to give anything, as I had been sick for several months, and nobody had helped me.

He took my number, and said, "Try to have a dollar here tomorrow."

This is the bosses' method of intimidating the workers and of forcing them to pay for the evils of capitalism.

WAGE CUT LOST, SCHOOL BOARDS TRY SPEED-UP

Squeeze $30,000 Out of Janitors

By A Worker Correspondent

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 19.—An organized protest supported by all head janitors in the public schools here, recently prevented the board of education from enforcing its proposed 10 to 20% wage-cut in the janitor-engineer department. Wages now run from $100 to $130, depending on the length of service, so it is readily seen how disastrous any cut would be to these workers.

Board Uses "Business" Methods.

However, the board is made up of business men and so regards the workers—teachers and janitors—as merely sources of exploitation. The only difference it that in this case the profits go to the taxpayers; but they come from the same class as the school board.

Balked in their attempt to cut wages, the board is forced to practice other means of "economy," as it has announced its intention of "saving" $30,000 in engineer service. This is despite the fact that the school enrollment is larger than ever before and that new operatives should be required.

Workers Lose Free Time.

Instead of getting new help, the school board crams 10 to 12 hours of work into the alleged eight-hour work day. In addition, the men are required to attend classes to study the "housekeeping" of public buildings. This requires a great deal of home-reading, so that the men are at work almost all their waking hours in order to keep their low-paid jobs.

Tho many individual expressions of discontent are heard, many of the men do not understand their class-interests sufficiently to join the Janitor-Engineers Union.

New Occupational Disease.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Nov. 19.—The Kent county board of supervisors to-day declined to buy deputy sheriff James Mol a set of false teeth. Mol, official tester of the county's dry squad, claimed poison liquor he tasted loosened his teeth and asked the county to provide him with new ones.

A good book on Communism will make you a better Communist.

FACING BABBITTS, DEBS OVERLOOKS RUSSIAN WORKERS

By A Worker Correspondent

COLLINSVILLE, Ill., Nov. 19.—The big business and little business combined to advertize Eugene V. Debs when he came here to speak, he didn't have much of an audience. And the audience didn't have much of a speaker.

Poor Debs is in his "second childhood" in the labor movement,—he is about a generation behind. Tho he came right in the week of the anniversary of the Russian revolution, not a word of it did he mention, not a word of what the Russian workers and peasants have accomplished the past eight years.

He told, what every one knows, that capitalism breeds criminals and an army of unemployed,—but he did not tell how to change it.

Also, Debs devoted a large part of his talk to the coal miners and the anthracite strike, but he did not refer to the betrayal of the United Mine Workers of America by their fake-leader, John L. Lewis.

Magic Buttermilk! Inherit It, and Get Rich Over-Night

By A Worker Correspondent

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 19—The other day I came across an excellent example of how "superior brains" win their way to "success."

An old man who owned a "buttermilk" route in North Minneapolis employed at the rate of $16.00 a week a young man to do the work for him.

One fine morning when the lad came to join the old fellow to start out on the route, he found that he had died, without even making arrangements for an heir or without leaving a list of customers.

The only one who had any line on these was the young understudy, who was thus suddenly elevated from a $16 a week job to the ownership of a route bringing an income of $65 a week, with the satisfaction of being able to hire some one else to do the work.

CORRESPONDENTS' CLASS TONIGHT! STARTS AT DAILY WORKER OFFICE

"The way to learn to write is to begin," says Wm. F. Dunne in his pamphlet on Worker Correspondents.

And it is just for the purpose of getting workers "to begin" that the class for worker correspondents is being organized, to start tonight at The DAILY WORKER office, 1113 W. Washington Blvd.

Workers must write while they are learning how to write,—this is the principle on which the class will be conducted. And they must learn, as well, to realize that of all the news which the Communist press carries, the most important is that which deals with the conditions of the workers in industry.

At least fifty workers from the shops and factories of Chicago and Pullman are expected to join the class. Any worker who is interested may come to the first meeting tonight or may register at the Workers Party office, 19 outh Lincoln St.

The class is to be held weekly, conducted by J. Louis Engdahl and Wm. F. Dunne, editors of The DAILY WORKER, and Oliver Carlson, circuit lecturer for the Workers' School in Chicago.

No Workers Party in Phoenix; Labor Fakers Rest Easier

By A Worker Correspondent

PHOENIX, Ariz., Nov. 19—Workers in restaurants, shoe shops, barber shops and grocery stores here have to work 12 to 16 hours a day. This is the reason that there is so much sickness among the poor people. And it is very hard to get work. There are many cases where men offer to do work just for shelter from the cold but they cannot get that.

Here there are labor union fakers the same as in the east, only they live more comfortably as there is no Communist organization and they have nothing to fear.

Street car conductors and motor men get paid only 35 cents an hour. And there is no place in town that you can get a meal for fifty cents that will satisfy you. Not even men that are working can afford a good, square meal a day.

Communism Strong, Says I. W. W. Sailor

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Nov. 19.—Communism grows stronger than ever in England, according to the report of a sailor, member of the I. M. T. W., just back from there and amazed to read accounts in the capitalist press that the Communist Party was decreasing.

Economic forces are cooperating with the Communists to expand their ranks, he pointed out. He declared, however, that it is necessary for the party to issue many dues-exemption stamps, due to the terrific inroads of unemployment.

BUKHAREST, Roumania, Nov. 19.—The Roumanian government is urging Czecho-Slovakia and Jugoslavia to hold an early conference of the littel entente at Belgrade. The date proposed is November 30.

NONUNIONISTS DEMAND AID OF UNION MINERS

Officials Refuse Plea for Organizers

By GEORGE PAPCUN,
(Worker Correspondent)

NANTICOKE, Pa., Nov. 19.—Faced by a committee representing 500 striking non-union miners, officials of the U. M. W. A. at West Brownsville, W. Va., were forced to promise to "investigate" the strike in the Connellsville coke region.

They tried to avoid doing anything by saying that "they had too many strikes on their hands," and that they didn't have enough organizers. It was only under strong pressure that they promised "investigation."

Communists Help Organize.

The conference between the strikers and union officials came about as a result of the Workers Party attempt to break the non-union miners' opposition to the union, and to get the unions' help in the present strike. Miners in the coke region oppose the union because of its officials' betrayal in the 1922 strike.

A week ago, you couldn't mention union to the miners here; but propaganda of the Communists has been effective in bringing the miners to realize that they couldn't afford to stay out of the union merely on account of labor-faker Lewis.

Demand Admittance.

"Non-union miners, demand admittance into the union," this is the slogan of the Workers Party and Young Workers League around which the miners have rallied. The party demands also that union miners fight for organization of non-union fields and for a general strike in union and non-union fields for agreements to cover the whole industry.

Demands of the committee from the union officials were for financial and moral support in their strike, for organizers to be sent into the non-union field, and for a general strike.

THIRTY FIRED; FAIL TO VOTE BOSSES' TICKET

By A Worker Correspondent

YORKVILLE, O., Nov. 19.—Thirty workers employed in a plant of the Wheeling Steel corporation have been discharged, following the recent election for mayor, because they failed to campaign and vote for the corporation candidate. It didn't make any difference to the bosses that their tool was elected, anyway.

Another accusation against these workers is that they voted for a workers' candidate!

"White Collar" Boss Pays Workers at 'Rate of 1½c Each!

By A Worker Correspondent

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 19.—There are hundreds of "white collar" slaves in Troy, for Troy is the home of the white collar industry. But it isn't the slaves who wear the collars. They just make them and press them. None of the workers are organized, tho there is great need for it, as is shown by the fact that wages in most of clothing concerns average around $20 weekly.

Foreman and Clark, the clothing manufacturers, have a piece-work wage system, paying, for instance, from 1½ to 2 cents each for collar pressing, with 3 cents for overcoat collar pressing. For handmade buttonholes, the workers get on an average 4 cents.

Even Steel Trust Forces Slaves to Give "First Aid"

By A Worker Correspondent

GARY, Ind., Nov. 19.—Workers of the steel trust forced to give thousands of dollars to the Red Cross: this is the ironical situation in Gary industries this week, with the annual American Red Cross roll call taking place. So labor must pay for injuries inflicted by the boss system.

It was curious to note the twisted smiles on the faces of the men as foremen or clerks approached them on the subject of paying the dollar enrollment fee. Not being able to spare the fee, they were intimidated for one reason or another: fear of offending the boss, mostly.

HOW NOT TO BUILD A UNION (OR) WHY BOSSES PREFER CRAFTS

By HERMAN A. WILLIAMS
(Worker Correspondent)

How 825 union members became only 150 in the short space of two years is plainly shown in the history of the local House-to-house Circular Distributors' Union.

As agreements signed by this union with boss distributors expire at the end of this month, it is now a good time to take inventory. Why did such a decline in membership take place? What wrong policies were pursued that pauperized the membership, instead of building it into a militant body, with at least 1,000 members in Chicago and the possibilities of 150,000 thruout the country? The following facts give answer:

In the month of September, 1923, three A. F. of L. organizers appealed to local bill distributors to form a union. By December a total of 825 members were enrolled. But what union were they enrolled in? The answer to this question is the key to the trouble.

Altho the organizers knew that bill distributors should belong to the International Alliance of Bill Posters and Billers of America, which is granted all rights to outdoor advertising, nevertheless they disregarded this and secured the charter from William Quinn of the Flat Janitors' Union. As a result the boss distributors found an excuse to say that, inasmuch as the union was not chartered properly, it could not be recognized.

A Year Later—a New Charter.

When a committee of the boss distributors called on President Gillson of the International Bill Posters to ask for information, it was told that, in the first place, he knew nothing about the union, and that in the second place he would not grant it a charter. However, after much wrangling, a charter was finally granted in December, 1924, at the national convention in St. Louis.

One Scabs on Another.

Notwithstanding this, however, two union bill posting concerns refused to recognize the Distributors' Union, the Thomas Cusack Co. and the J. R. Johnson Distributing agency. Altho Johnson himself carries a bill posters' union card, no effort is made to penalize him, nor is a move made by the bill posters to force Cusack to hire union distributors.

Eliminate Craft Divisions.

Workers must force the American Federation of Labor to change its tactics. Craft antagonisms must be eliminated and the interests of the workers, instead of the organizers, be served. Only when this is done can the unions face the bosses with a united front!

That worker next door to you may not have anything to do tonight. Hand him this copy of the DAILY WORKER.

COME ACROSS OR WALK OUT, SAYS 'CHARITY'

Workers 'Held Up' to Compensate Robbers

By A Worker Correspondent

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Nov. 19.—Workers in many local shops lost their jobs this week because they refused to contribute to collections taken up by the Federation for Social Service. This organization consists of the red cross, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., the salvation army and the boy scouts. Extra pressure was brot to bear on the workers, due to the fact that husbands of its leading women members are factory owners or managers.

How the "charity" is carried on at labor's expense to make up for the bosses' robbery is illustrated in the Studebaker automobile plant. When the workers gave only $1 after being told to give at least a day's wages, the foreman furiously called the men together again, bawled them out, and told them that the list would go around again and that this time they had better give $5 or be fired.

After much deliberation, the men decided to give $2, as the very best they could do. When the foreman again saw the list, he became almost crazed. Frothing at the mouth, he called the men together again and the spit actually flew four feet! Hollering and cursing, he threatened to fire any man that refused to give the other $2 immediately.

Altho the workers were forced to give, they have since denounced this hold-up with great bitterness.

Take this copy of the DAILY WORKER with you to the shop tomorrow.

DETROIT WORKERS PARTY HOLDS TAG DAY SUNDAY TO ASSIST DAILY WORKER

DETROIT, Nov. 19.—At its last meeting, the Jewish branch of the Workers (Communist) Party decided to hold a Tag Day for The DAILY WORKER on Sunday, Nov. 22. Twenty-eight comrades volunteered to solicit contributions and a committee has been elected to secure the cooperation of as many other Workers (Communist) Party members in Detroit as possible.

All comrades must volunteer their services for Sunday to aid The DAILY WORKER! All volunteers are to meet at the Oakland Labor Temple, 9197 Delmar Avenue, at 9 o'clock sharp Sunday morning and the territory they are to cover will then be assigned to them.

Training School for Young Workers League Started in New York

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The training school of the New York league will open Wednesday evening Nov. 25. The following courses will be given in the first term:

1. Marxism-Leninism; 2. History of the proletarian youth movement; 3. League and party problems; 4. Organization management.

There will also be a class for Young Worker correspondents.

A special course will be given to train leaders for the Juniors' movement. The course will consist of the following topics:

1. Marxism-Leninism; 2. Phychology and Pedagogy; 3. Nature plays and talk; 4. American history.

JAPANESE SWORD DANCE TO BE FEATURE AT DAILY WORKER RESCUE PARTY

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.— At The DAILY WORKER Rescue Party to be held this Friday evening, Nov. 20, in Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East 4th Street, New York, one of the special features will be a Japanese Sword Dance. This will be given by comrades from the Oriental branch which is part of the Downtown Section under whose auspices the affair will be conducted. The Japanese Sword Dance will be accompanied by special oriental music, and is an entertainment that in itself will be worth the price of admission.

Then there will be an auction of original drawings by some of this country's greatest cartoonists, some of which have appeared in The DAILY WORKER. Preceding the auction there will be a public exhibition of these drawings so that all may examine them.

The program will be followed by a grand ball.

Daily Worker Builders' Hike Changed to Nov. 29

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—The DAILY WORKER Builders' Club hike to Jamaica Woods in New York, which was to have been held this Sunday, has been postponed for one week to Sunday, Nov. 29, on account of a meeting of Y. W. L. functionaries which the Y. W. L. has been instructed to hold this Sunday to take up the matter of league organization.

The Y. W. L. will cooperate with the DAILY WORKER Builders Club in this hike, and the Juniors are also expected to come out in force. If it rains there will be no hike this time. (Everybody agrees that one free bath such as the participants in the hike enjoyed last week, is enough.)

All the readers of The DAILY WORKER are invited to go along on this hike thru Jamaica Woods. We meet at 1 a. m. Sunday, Nov. 29, at the headquarters, 108 E. 14th St., or meet us at the end of the B. M. T. line at 168th street in Jamaica at 11 p. m.) Bring your lunch, altho we shall also have a commissary department and expect to bake a bushel of potatoes at the camp fire in the woods.

YOUNG WORKERS WILL HOLD BRANCH MEETINGS ON FRIDAY EVENING

The general membership meeting of the Young Workers League which was originally arranged for Friday has been called off and instead all branches will hold their regular meetings.

At these meetings, arrangements for immediately beginning mass work will be taken up as well as further steps for the complete reorganization of the league.

The meetings will be held as follows:

Branch No. 1, Downtown; Br. No. 2, 1910 W. Roosevelt Rd.; Br. No. 3, Community Center, 3201 S. Wabash Ave., 8 p. m.; Br. No. 4, 3118 Roosevelt Rd.; Br. No. 5, 19 S. Lincoln St.; Br. No. 6, 1902 W. Division Street.

What the Party Has Done in the Anthracite

A Statement by the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party.

IN order that the party members may be fully informed in regard to the policies of the party and the work which has been carried on during the anthracite strike thus far, the Central Executive Committee submits the following statement:

The situation in the anthracite coal fields was first considered by the Central Executive Committee early in the month of August, prior to the opening of the fourth national convention. It being certain at that time that the strike would be called, the Central Executive Committee outlined its policy and determined upon certain concrete actions to be taken immediately in order to prepare the ground for active participation by the party in the strike and to extend its influence among the miners and aid them in their struggle. It was decided to issue a pamphlet on the experiences of the miners in their past strikes and to immediately publish a manifesto on the impending strike. Unfortunately, the work of preparing for the party convention interfered with these preliminary efforts to prepare the ground for the establishment of the party influence among the miners.

At the first meeting of the political committee of the Central Executive Committee after the national convention, the anthracite strike was taken up and considered fundamentally. The political committee adopted measures to at once mobilize the party forces for active participation in the strike and also to arouse the interest of the masses of workers outside of the strike region in the struggle in the anthracite. It was the view of the political committee that the demand for a wage increase by 158,000 miners was the beginning of a stiffened resistance by the workers against the attack of the capitalists on the workers' standard of life. It had resolutions expressing its viewpoint prepared for introduction into the labor unions thruout the country and instructed the party organization to arrange mass meetings to carry on agitation along the same line. The manifesto of the party was issued which was circulated by the hundreds of thousands thruout the country.

In the anthracite region itself, the C. E. C. called a meeting for the mobilization of the party members, sending a member of the C. E. C. to take charge of this meeting, together with other responsible party workers. After the meeting the party manifesto was distributed broadcast among the miners of the anthracite region and work was begun in the local unions in support of policies which meant a real fight for the interests of the coal miners.

Criticism has been made of the fact that a series of public demonstrations were arranged in the anthracite under party auspices. The C. E. C. declares that it was a correct policy at that time for the party to appear publicly before the miners as the exponent of their demands, as the defender of their interests, in the series of public meetings which were arranged. It is a correct policy for the party to raise its own banner in a time of workers' struggle whenever the possibilities for thus raising its banner exist.

The public appearance of the party in the anthracite strike thru mass meetings and leaflets aroused the rage of the coal operators and the public officials who eat out of their hands as well as the reactionary officials of the United Mine Workers of America. All the forces at the command of the operators, the government and the union bureaucracy were mobilized against the party. Public meetings were broken up and speakers arrested.

The party was fighting for the miners' demands thru the public meetings which it was holding. The suppression of the party's open activities confronted it with the question of a free speech fight. If the party had initiated a free speech fight for its right to hold public meetings after this attack, it would have isolated itself from the striking miners' and their demand to carry on a fight for the right of the party to hold meetings. The C. E. C. realizing this danger decided against the policy of making a free speech fight and decided to direct the activities of the party to the work of raising in the local unions the demands for calling out the maintenance men and a 100% strike, that there should be no settlement without a wage increase for the miners, that a general strike of all coal miners, including the bituminous miners, be called, and for the resistance of a settlement by arbitration.

In spite of the fact that the coal operators, city officials and union bureaucrats have whipped up a red hysteria in order to prejudice the miners against the Workers (Communist) Party, the party influence upon the miners has been increasing. The party has had three organizers in the anthracite practically continuously since the strike began. In spite of all prohibition these organizers have been addressing meetings of the miners and presenting a progressive program for the winning of the strike. Besides the party manifesto, three leaflets voicing the progressive demands have been distributed in the anthracite. Recently the C. E. C. sent Comrade Dunne to the anthracite fields to write a series of articles for our party press on the situation in order to arouse the workers generally to the importance of this strike and bring them to the support of the miners.

Criticism has been made of Comrade Gitlow's article in the November issue of the Workers Monthly. The criticism is based upon the following section of one of the paragraphs of this article, which covers three and a half pages of the Workers Monthly:

"The anthracite coal strike is a conspiracy between the officials and the coal operators. It will benefit only the coal interests. The strike will not benefit the miners out on strike. It will cause untold hardships to the workers in the eastern states that depend upon anthracite coal. The anthracite strike is the logical outcome of class collaboration."

These sentences, taken by themselves, are incorrect and a wrong interpretation of the party policy could be made from them. Regardless of the treacherous aims of the bureaucrats the strike of the workers must be regarded as a manifestation of the class struggle. With the correct policy the strike can be developed into a powerful offensive against the capitalists. It is quite true that the strike policy of the union bureaucrats will not benefit the miners, but a strike based upon the policies of the Progressive Miners' Committee makes the strike a real struggle in the interests of the workers no matter how much suffering may be incident thereto for the strikers or other groups of workers.

The sentences referred to must be read and connected with the whole article written by Comrade Gitlow in order to judge this article correctly. No one will be so foolish as to accuse Comrade Gitlow of holding the view which might be inferred from these sentences torn from their context.

Comrade Gitlow's whole argument was against the class collaboration policy of John L. Lewis in the United Mine Workers of America, that is, against the strike policy of Lewis and not against the strike of the workers. The policy of the union bureaucrats in conducting the strike is such that unless the workers mobilise against this policy, they will not benefit by the strike. Such is the meaning of the basic study of the whole anthracite situation which Comrade Gitlow makes in his article.

At a later point in the article Gitlow says:

"The Progressive Miners' Committee revived many of the issues which were once advocated by the United Mine Workers, but which had been relegated to oblivion since the assumption of the presidency of J. L. Lewis. The six-hour day and the five-day week and the nationalization of the coal mines are among the demands once made by the United Mine Workers. These together with other proposals were raised by the progressive miners in an effort to make the anthracite coal strike a real struggle in the interests of the workers. Some of the other demands were a minimum wage, a general strike of all the coal miners, unity of the railroad workers with the anthracite workers, no settlement without an increase in wages and calling out of the maintenance men to prevent the prolongation of the strike."

Comrade Gitlow's whole argument as well as the work of the party in the anthracite field was to show the miners that they, themselves, must make their fight in such a way as to defeat the coal operators and the union bureaucrats and win real results for the miners thru the strike.

The party has already achieved results in its work in the anthracite in spite of the fact that it has met the greatest obstacles and has had to fight coal operators, government officials, and union officials in order to raise the slogans which will mobilize the miners for a fight which will bring a victory for the men who work in the mines.

After two months of the strike the miners are more ready than ever before to listen to the proposals of the party for the winning of the strike. The party will continue to mobilize all the forces at its command in the anthracite region and thru sending organizers to the field in an effort to aid the anthracite miners to win their demands, including an increase in wages, and thus give the signal for the American workers for a general resistance against the attack of the capitalist employers and for the improvement in their standard of life, thru higher wages, shorter hours and better conditions of work.

MARQUETTE FINNISH DISTRICT CONVENTION INDORSES CENTRAL EXECUTIVE AND REORGANIZATION

ISHPEMING, Nov. 19.—The Marquette Finnish district convention just concluded its sessions after a successful and instructive gathering of the most active Finnish comrades in the district.

Reorganization of the party on the basis of shop nuclei was unanimously indorsed. Not even the slightest opposition was manifested to the Central Executive Committee resolution and reorganization program.

The convention took a determined and clear cut stand against the resolution of the Chicago Finnish branch which proposed that the property now owned by the Workers (Communist) Party branches should be owned by the newly organized workers clubs instead of the party fractions. The exact plan of the party fractions exercising this ownership was refered to the national conference of the Finnish language fractions of the party for elaboration.

The editorial board of the Tyomies was criticized in a special resolution on the ground that it was too lax in its attitude towards the party convention, that it has shown a too cool attitude towards party reorganization. The statement of the Tyomies editorial board questioning the removal of Askeli and defending him was also repudiated by the convention.

The convention further instructed the resolutions committee to prepare a statement against the resolution being circulated by the Minneapolis Finnish branch as a step against the party.

Then the delegates considered thoroly ways and means of developing increasing party activities, strengthening the Young Workers League, financing the work, cooperative movement activities, and increasing contact with and influence over the masses.

Comrade John Miller was the representative of the Central Executive Committee to the convention. He presented the report of the Central Executive Committee and made a very effective plea for party reorganization, unity, and the line of the Communist International.

Comrade Martilla was elected as delegate to the national conference of the Finnish language fractions.

American Business Increases.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The department of commerce announces that American foreign trade for the first 10 months of 1925 totalled $7,449,000,000, an increase of $518,000,000 over the same period of last year.

Imports for the period were $3,454,600,000, a gain of $747,000,000 over 1924, and exports were $3,995,100,000, an increase of $344,000,000.

Peace Reigns Again.

HAZARD, Ky., Nov. 19.—All is quiet in Hyden, 18 miles from here, where two armed mobs were reported on the verge of battle, according to word to authorities here.

The trouble arose when an officer was shot in an after election brawl and the alleged slayer surrounded himself with a score of followers to resist arrest.

CHICAGO TO CELEBRATE 1905 RUSS REVOLUTION SUNDAY, DECEMBER 20

On Sunday, Dec. 20, all over the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics celebrations will be held in honor of the revolution of 1905 and to commemorate the first revolutionary uprising in Russia of the Decembrists, one hundred years ago. A special committee appointed by the Central Executive Committee is charged with the preparation of these celebrations. Books, pamphlets, posters, moving pictures, etc., are being prepared for this great event.

In the city of Chicago preparations are also under way for the celebration of these same events. A group of veterans of the revolution of 1905 together with Russian labor organizations is arranging a mass meeting and concert on Sunday, Dec. 20, at 2 p. m., at Shoenhofen Hall, cor. Milwaukee and Ashland Aves. Speakers will also include some of the veterans of the revolution of 1905.

All workers are invited to participate in this celebration. Reserve the date: Dec. 20, at 2 p. m.

In the evening, a banquet of the old rebels is planned.

Resolution of the Workers Party on the Decision of the Comintern on the Situation in the German Communist Party

THE Workers (Communist) Party of America, fully conscious of its duty, makes all efforts possible to advance on the road to its bolshevization. It fully realizes that as part of the world Communist Party its strength will enhance the strength just as its weakness will increase the weakness of our International party.

The Workers (Communist) Party also realizes that in the process of its inner strengthening and the raising of the level of its revolutionary quality the aid, the advise and support, of our international party the Comintern, as well as the active interest of our brother parties are indespensable. The problems of our party are those of the International the problems of the International are ours.

True to this concept the Workers (Communist) Party of America has been watching with keen interest the recent discussion and developments of the Communist Party of Germany. The continuous encroachments of the American imperialists in Germany tend to increase among the broad working masses of both countries the consciousness of the need of united action of the international proletariat for the overthrow of all capitalist dictatorship. The growth and development of the powerful section of the Communist International in Germany has thus become a matter of special concern for the Workers (Communist) Party.

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party of America sees in the last decision of the Comintern on the situation of the Communist Party of Germany a tremendous step forward in the bolshevization of our International. It agrees with and accepts unreservedly these decisions of the Comintern. Our own experience has strengthened us in the conviction that only a rigorous execution of the proposals of the Communist International will insure the bolshevization of the Communist Party of Germany and will make it the leader of the German working class.

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party declares that it sees in the advise and instructions of the Communist International the invaluable help that can grow out of the experiences of the Communist Parties of the whole world embodied in the Communist International. At a time when the ebb in the revolutionary tide tends to create an unhealthy pessimism which is very conducive to the development of opportunist deviations it is of double importance that the Communist International should make available to its affiliated parties this exeprience.

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party declares itself to be in full accord with the declaration of the Communist International against the pessimism of the Ruth Fischer-Maslow group and its leftist allies, against the latter's neglect of trade union work, against its opportunist deviations, its narrowness in directing the party work, the attempt to revise and destroy Leninism, and its dangerously wrong attitude to the Communist International.

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party of America welcomes the change of the composition of the leadership of the Communist Party of Germany as an effective guarantee for the loyal application of the new methods of work by the membership.

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party expresses its confidence in the new leadership and feels certain that under its guidance the Communist Party of Germany will make rapid strides toward its bolshevization and the winning of the working and farming masses for the victorious proletarian revolution in Germany.

Signed: Central Executive Committee, Workers (Communist) Party.
C. E. Ruthenburg, general secretary.

CANDIDATE ON LABOR TICKET WINS IN LIMA

Second Labor Candidate Comes Close

LIMA, Ohio, Nov. 19. — Corbin S. Shook, candidate for city commissioner won in the election here Tuesday and Edwin Blank, the other labor party candidate, came within 51 votes of being elected. There were three commissioners to be elected and the election of one laborite and the excellent showing of the other one has aroused great enthusiasm here among the class conscious workers.

This victory lays the foundation of permanency for a local labor party. The campaign permeated most of the local unions and the rank and file of labor here is certainly not of the opinion that independent political action thru a labor party is not advantageous to the workers.

Two republicans were elected to the other places on the commission. Shook received more votes than any of the other candidates in the campaign.

Labor Fakir Beaten.

A labor fakir, Lawrence Long, was defeated, running behind Blank, the second labor candidate. Long is an active member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and thought his trade union affiliations would enable him to secure the labor vote on the old gag of "reward your friends," but even his own brother members turned him down for trying to defeat the labor party candidates.

Australian Labor to Resist Deportation

SYDNEY, Australia, (By Mail).—On September 9, representatives of all the labor councils thruout Australia held a conference at Sydney to decide what action should be taken by the organized workers in the event of the anti-labor federal government deporting any of the trade union leaders because of their helping the British strikers in their fight against the shipowners.

After a week's conference behind closed doors, the conference on behalf of all the unions in Australia issued a manifesto accepting the deportation legislation as a direct challenge to the labor and industrial movement of Australia, and recommending that in the event of the attempted deportation of any unionist, no worker should in any way assist in giving effect to such deportation order. The sea transport workers were called upon to give loyal assistance in this direction.

Regarding the British seamen's strike in Australia, the conference reported: "We recognize that the fight against the British shipping combine by the British seamen is of prime importance, and we therefore call upon all unions to give the fullest moral and financial support and, if necessary, to levy their members to finance the struggle.

"We recommend that all unions be called upon to pay a levy of one and a quarter per cent a week of the earnings of the workers, the system of collecting or donating the levy to be left to the unions. This not to apply to workers earning $10 a week or less."

Grant Roads Petitions.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 19.—Announcement was made by the Illinois commerce commission that it had granted full authority to the North Shore and Western railway and the Evanston Railway company for improvements and extensions proposed in 33 recent petitions for double tracks, connecting lines, additional right of way and certain discontinuances in Evanston.

An Answer to Hillman's Policy

Why the slugging and terrorism in Chicago?

Why Was Chicago the Best?

Our officials are forever boasting of the fact that Chicago is the best unit in the Amalgamated. We have a united organization, plenty of money to carry on future "wars." Not at all like New York.

As to the few "left wingers" as they are called: "They do not amount to anything," say the officials.

"We need not pay any attention to them," say the officials. But, again, why have our members been slugged?

To answer this question we must go back a little into the history of about 20 months.

Up to about two years ago the Amalgamated in Chicago has had more or less of an aggressive policy.

Old Policy of Struggle.

If a demand for a cut in wages came along, the membership knew about it and a fight was put up.

If the employer tried to put something over on the workers, our shop chairman or business agent was on his feet to put up battle.

Our impartial machinery functioned more or less within the realms of the agreement. The officials, generally, saw to it that our agreement was put into effect.

When The Change Began.

Ever since President Hillman came forward with his readjustment policy some 20 months ago, the union policy took a different turn. That was the key to class collaboration to stop putting up a strong defence for our conditions and, instead, to settle all differences, thru negotiations, bargains, etc.

In other words—our officials put forward this soft-pedal policy of compromise.

Nice Name for Bad Things.

What followed from this sort of a policy was just this: Readjustments, which are another name for wage cuts.

These were put into effect, all workers being affected by it. Our shop chairmen no longer fought in the shops for the workers with the same vigor as before.

Our business agents no longer cared as before to take up our complaints, often stating, "Oh, what's the use? We'll lose out anyway. You should be satisfied that you have a job."

No Longer "Impartial."

Our impartial machinery was also affected by this policy, and in every decision handed down, partiality was written all over it, in favor of the employer.

When the First of May came along a new agreement was signed, and at our ratification meetings we were told that this agreement is the same as that of three years ago.

But we soon found out that not only are wages being cut by way of "readjustments," but actual straight cuts were taking place, as in Alfred Decker & Cohen's shops, and others.

We found that certain promises were made to employers that we did not know of at the time we ratified this new agreement.

Even Cutters Are Cut

The cutters, who until last May were more or less immune from this wage cut readjustment policy, found themselves in the same condition as the tailors. They are today producing from five to ten per cent more work for the same wage.

Those of us who had courage to stand up at local and shop meetings demanding explanation for this lack of fighting policy on the part of the officials, were called "destroyers," "disrupters," and "traitors to our union."

Not Easy.

It may be said that it is not easy for our membership these days to fight for their interests in locals. Our membership today fears more the officials of the union than they do the employer, because to fight in local, to fight the officials means their jobs are in danger.

Jobs are not so easy to be gotten these days, especially by those who are not "good boys" or machine men.

A great number of our members are even afraid to vote at meetings, for fear that they would get in wrong with the business agents.

Don't Vote At All.

As a result, when a proposition comes up that the membership is not in favor of, they generally obstain from voting at all.

The foregoing shows the basic policy of the present machine. Its special application is seen in the membership meeting called last Friday night.

No discussion was permitted. The $25 assessment proposition was crudely railroaded.

What's the Answer.

Why was there no discussion permitted? Because the officials feared that the members would speak their mind.

They feared that the membership would demand the abolition of this wage cut readjustment policy.

Why was the International strike called 57 days later? Why did our officials wait until the busy season was over? permitting the firm to finish there season's work? Why do not our officials fight for our conditions? —and may be more questions.

Flowers Hide Betrayal.

Our officials are pretty much on the alert. They come well prepared, for they knew that even flowers and Hillman's oration or the chairman's flowery speach could not make the membership forget these things.

Our officials were determined to have it their own way, so they prepared the strong arm squad to keep "order" and any one who dared to speak was "attended to."

As a result, some of our members, who were only suspected of wanting to speak, were met at the doors by the strong arm squad—and were beaten up.

This was followed up by the Sunday's affair with guns and gangs,—lead by business agents.

It Won't Work.

These tactics will not suppress the membership from fighting against wage cut in the locals. This terrorism will not lead our union "onward and forward," the words of Hillman.

These tactics lead towards demoralization of the membership and the collapse of the union.

Other unions have tried it. In the Furriers' Union Kaufman finds himself today without a crown.

Sigman, of the I. L. G. W., is in the same fix as Kaufman, and if Hillman and the rest of officials follow the same tactics, they may succeed in demoralizing—and to wrecking the union, but they will also succeed in discrediting themselves as did Kaufman and Sigman.

Steal Cigarettes.

STREATOR, Ill., Nov. 19.—Merchandise value at $3,000 was stolen from the warehouse of the Eby Loser Tobacco company here. The truck, loaded with loot including 40 cases of cigarettes, was said to have been seen going toward Peoria, Ill.

Another Investigation.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—An investigation to determine whether the fire which destroyed the Clyde liner Lenape off Lewes, Dela., was of incendiary origin was launched by the steamboat inspection service of the department of commerce.

Wants Trade Pact.

MADRID, Nov. 19.—The importance of hastening negotiations between the United States and Spain for a new commercial treaty was urged by vice-President Castedo of the National Economic Council.

COKE MINERS RAZZ FAGAN FOR SPEECH

praising the U. M. W. of A. for having sent not less than 80,000 coal diggers to the slaughter-house during the world war to fight for "democracy," stating that the U. M. W. of A. was in a position during the war to tie-up every industry in the country and thus prevent America from going into war. The union for "patriotic" reasons did not take advantage of its power at that time, but instead did everything possible to help make the war a success.

After a brief denunciation of Charlie Schwab, head of the Behtlehem Steel corporation, who also took an active part in the world war and is now waging a new war against the miners and their union, Mr. Fagan proceeded to bitterly attack and denounce the progressive miners and the Workers Party.

In his rage against the progressive elements of the Miners' Union, he forgot all about the situation in Marianna and the iron fences around the mines here. He forgot to mention the eviction of the miners from the company houses and about the armed guards who were protecting the scabs against the striking miners.

Only two days previously armed hirelings of the company were using tear bombs to disperse a group of miners and their wives and sisters, but Fagan had not a word to say about this. Only two days ago a striking miner, who had served in the army during the world war, was beaten up by the police, and was now standing on the platform holding the American flag with his head still bandaged, but the president of the Miners' Union of District No. 5 had forgotten even to mention this.

Miners Show Hot Resentment.

Instead, he indulged in a tirade against the progressive miners and the Workers Party, misrepresenting facts, and telling all kinds of lies in order to achieve his aims. This was too much for the men who had gathered together to organize for a struggle against the 1917 scale and for the preservation of the union.

Shouts "It is a lie," "We challenge you to prove it." "We came to fight the operators and not the militants in our union" rang thru the audience preventing the speaker from continuing his tirade. Some of the machine men responding with shouts, "Throw them out," meaning the Communists and the progressive miners.

The situation became too tense and Fagan hurriedly concluded his speech without mentioning a word about the situation in Marianna and in other parts of the coke region.

The meeting was called for the purpose of organizing against the onslaughts of the Bethlehem Steel corporation and other coal companies. It was turned by Fagan into a meeting against the progressive elements in the union who have been demanding action and not words from their officials. That is exactly what the Bethlehem Steel corporation is anxious to see Fagan do. Nothing could please the Bethlehem Steel corporation more than did the action of Mr. Fagan at the meeting last Sunday.

NEW ZEALAND WORKERS ORGANIZE INDUSTRIAL UNIONS TO SECURE BIGGER INCREASES FROM BOSSES

By W. FRANCIS AHERN

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

WELLINGTON, New Zealand, Nov. 19.—Thruout New Zealand there is seething discontent among the wage-workers, organized and unorganized. This discontent is due to several causes—namely, economic insecurity, bad conditions of employment, and the wages now being paid not being sufficient to maintain a fair standard of living. Added to the foregoing, there are the conditions of employment. In many industries there has been no improvement in the conditions of employment for a number of years.

Low Wages Cause Discontent.

The primary cause of the industrial discontent at the present time, however, is the low basic wage. It cannot be expected of a worker to be contented when he finds that after working the whole week round he cannot buy a sufficient amount of the necessities of life for his wife and children. The basic wage rate is $18.48 for a 44-hour week, $19.32 for a 40-hour week, and $20.16 for a 48-hour week. This has just been increased by 2 cents per hour, making the rates $19.36, $20.24, and $21.12 for a 44-, 46- and 48-hour week respectively, but the workers cannot get this increase until their union secures it by application to the arbitration court.

Organize Industrially.

Recently the New Zealand Alliance of Labor demanded a commission to go into the question of providing a higher basic wage, but the government refused to appoint the commission, contending that a higher basic wage was not permissable—that industry could not carry it. Since arbitration seems to have failed them badly, the New Zealand workers are devoting more attention to the question of organization on industrial lines, feeling sure that when industrial organization completely displaces craft organization they will secure some improvement in the economic position.

Fight Operators' Game in Anthracite

which prevailed in the strike of 1922 which lasted five months and three weeks but which ended early in the fall.

The anthracite miners are not inured to long strikes with the bitter opposition to which thousands of bituminous miners are accustomed. From 1910 until 1912 there was no strike and the 1912 strike lasted only about three weeks. There was no suspension of work except in sporadic instances and in isolated cases, as in Cappellini's district, until 1922.

The anthracite mining communities are therefore fairly stable and the employment is of a comparatively steady character.

Business Men Worried.

The abnormal nature of the present struggle so far as the middle class elements are concerned—and every mining community has a well-developed cockroach capitalist group—is shown by the manner in which they whistle to keep up their courage, so to speak. Every event that by any stretch of imagination can have a bearing on the strike is given a favorable interpreation. The local prophets specialize in collection of such data and its purveyors always find interested listeners.

One day the rumor is that the mules for a certain mine have been brought back to the camp from their pasture where they have been sojourning since the strike—in much more comfort than the miners. This is considered an infallible sign that the mines are soon to open.

Then another optimist will produce alleged evidence—in these cases the local station agent is considered an authority—that "coal cars are being called back from the south." This arouses even more hope than mule rumor.

The statement that the local iron-works has received an order for a dozen or so mine cars—which a couple of good mechanics can turn out in a week—is sufficient to bring a gladsome glint into the eyes of the butcher, baker and candlestick maker.

A local chamber of commerce was on the point of staging a celebration the other day because the coal company in its town was rushing work on a set of load scales.

Helpless Middle Class.

So it goes.

There could be found nowhere a more classic example of the helpless role of the middle class when the forces of the workers and capitalist clash. They are caught between two fires.

The missiles of the master they accept in good part and display the bruises as badges of honor.

But the abrasions caused by the missiles of the miners arouse a resentment which the local shopkeepers have a hard time concealing and which will burst out just as soon as the coal barons give the word.

The greatest myth in the anthracite district is that the operators are losing money by the strike.

They cannot lose a dime unless the maintenance men are called out and their properties begin to deteriorate in consequence. There is lots of stored coal for them to sell. Just how much there is no one is in a position to say but so far no one has suffered much except in the fancy prices that have been extorted.

The fear of an "anthracite famine" in the immediate future is put out only for public consumption in order to give a plausible excuse for government intervention against the miners.

Out to Spring Old Gag.

It is possible, and indeed quite probable, that Lewis would welcome government intervention which would relieve him of responsibility and allow him to use his old excuse—"we cannot fight our government"—for not calling out the maintenance men.

One of Pinchot's experts has given out figures on the amount of anthracite immediately available. Undoubtedly the estimates are conservative but they place the amount of anthracite held by consumers in bins at 32,000,000 tons. There are approximately 8,000,000 users of anthracite and this would give an average of 4 tons per consumer—surely nothing like a "famine."

The coal held in reserve by the operators and their sales agencies is estimated at 10,000,000 tons.

79,000,000 tons of anthracite were mined in 1924 so that the coal in reserve and the amount held by consumers, a total of 42,000,000 tons, is more than half of the total production for 1924—certainly not a serious situation considering the availability of substitutes.

In addition to this the operators are sneaking out, in defiance of the union officials or with their consent a considerable amount of anthracite from breakers and washers which adds to the stocks on hand.

All of the above points to but one conclusion:

Call Out Maintenance Men!

That no decisive victory can be won by the miners unless the maintenance men are pulled out.

Barring government intervention in the form of "arbitration," the consumers will be made to worry along somehow until spring. The surplus stocks of the operators will be found surprisingly elastic if it necessary to allay public discontent.

Summer will come and go and the winter will find the miners starved out while the properties of the operators will be in the best of condition due to the thotful care of the union officialdom in keeping the maintenance men at work.

FUNDAMENTALIST GETS AN ANSWER TO HOLY INSULT

Calls Cop Instead of Turning Cheek

By L. P. RINDAL

(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Nov. 18.—This city of ostracized angels is called the "white spot" on the map of this glorious land of by and for the plunderbund. Why? Probably because this burg of white terror has railroaded more innocent "reds" to the "penitentiary" than any other municipality in the country. "White" but savage acts of this kind come, I suppose, under the hypocritical term: "The white man's burden."

Supporters of Terrorism.

Plaza is the only point on said wonderful spot where open air meetings have been tolerated—to a certain extent—when conducted by real representatives of the useful workers. Religious fakerdom, however, seems to have the key to the city at all times.

People backing organizations like the bible institute; midnight missions; the K. K. K., the bitter Better American Federation; the C. of C. and M. & M., real estate hogs; employment sharks; the American legion; grafting officials and policemen; movie czars; beneficiaries of booze, prostitution, dope and gambling; profiteers in climate and hot air, and other all around parasites and crooks are all trying to make the color scheme on the old Plaza to harmonize with the "whiteness" of the rest.

Fear Russian "Experiment."

These hopeless efforts are spent by hypocrites in the name of "Jerusalem Slim" and patriotism with plenty of dollar marks stamped on it, or, rather because of fear; fear of the Russian "experiment" as they call it; fear of yellow, black and other imaginary perils with or without color; they are even fearful of Comrade Queen Silver's magazine—with the picture of an innocent looking baby monkey on the cover; they are afraid of their own shadow; they see in it the symbol of the real devil keeping house in their own black hearts. Therefore, it is no wonder that they are scared to death over the onward march of Communism—the real thing.

Woman of Brave Spirit.

At last a fearless person of the "weaker" sex—a heroine if you please—has appeared on the scene where heretofore hundreds of huskies of the opposite sex have shamfully submitted themselves to humiliation spewed out of the mouth of James Merry of bible institute. Mr. Merry used to brag about his "christian" deeds—that of causing men and women to be arrested and thrown into the nasty dungeons of barbarious California, an act which no doubt pleased his bloodthirsty god of the old testament—just as much as it was praised by his earthly supporters.

The brave woman refered to is Comrade Grace V. Roser of Inglewood, Calif. She has been arrested many times, and a few years ago her stock of radical literature—1,500 dollars worth—was destroyed by the authorities. Not long ago, she was forced to give up her literature stand at the Plaza also. What kind of a rat was back of that? James Merry? The writer just likes to know. On Sunday, Oct. 25th, Comrade Grace V. Roser, her devoted daughter, Queen Silver, and a man named Henry, were all insulted again by this "holy" man who characterized them all as "degenerates" and everything else that is bad in the English language.—Bang—Bang — Bang.—

Direct Action on "Christian."

". . . The chain landed on my left eye, struck my right jaw and wrapped itself around my neck. It left two bruises and one large swelling. My glasses shot into the crowd. I attempted to seize the chain, but two men of the rougher element interfered." Jimmie says to the capitalist press.

Mr. Merry, a follower of the lowly Nazarene, did not turn the other cheek. A battery complaint was issued against Grace V. Roser on Nov. 6th. She had a hearing on Nov. 9th in Judge Bullock's court. Queen Silver "the girl evolutionist," 14, noted far and wide as author of the lecture: "Evolution From the Monkey to Bryan," defended her devoted mother "Modern Portia," as called by the press, is a member of the Y. W. L. The case was set for Monday, Nov. 3, at 10 a. m. No bail was demanded.

Nature of Defense.

The right or wrong of the evolution or fundamentalist doctrine is not the question, says Queen, but whether the public speaker has a right to [illegible] another. The defense will be that direct action was justified. After all, an iron "necklace" around the neck of an English fundamentalist ought to be as honorable a decoration as the iron cross on the breast of a German junker,—especially when placed there by a real American with real Red Indian blood in her veins.

World's Fastest Railroad.

PARIS, Nov. 19—The world's fastest train will begin operation in May when the French Nord system inaugurates a three-hour service between Paris and Calias on the London route. The instance of 186 miles is to be covered without a stop. The trip will be made with new English built steel cars drawn by giant American-made locomotives.

EXHIBIT OF DRAWINGS AND CARTOONS BY REVOLUTIONARY ARTISTS WILL BE FEATURE AT NEW YORK RESCUE PARTY

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Original drawings of many of the cartoons that have appeared in the Workers Monthly and The DAILY WORKER and also a number of original drawings by revolutionary artists that have never been published, will be on exhibition at The DAILY WORKER rescue party this Friday evening at 66 East 4th Street, Manhattan Lyceum, New York, and will be auctioned off to the highest bidders for the benefit of The DAILY WORKER.

This collection includes some of the most powerful cartoons ever published, works of art that will be handed down to posterity as mementos of the struggles of today. It will be worth the price of admission merely to see them.

Besides the auction of cartoons and drawings, a first class musical program and entertainment will be given, including the famous "Japanese Sword Dance," and the evening will conclude with a grand ball. Make note of place and date: Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East 4th street, New York tonight, Friday, Nov. 20.

How Andre Sabatier Died During Strike Against French Wars

PARIS, (IRA)—(By Mail)—During the protest strike against the Moroccan and Syrian wars, the worker André Sabatier in Suresnes, near Paris, was killed by the revolver shot of a factory engineer. The demonstration which ended with the murdering of a worker, a brave revolutionary, took place in the following way according to statements of eye witnesses:

At two o'clock in the afternoon a group of workers marched thru Suresnes in order to participate in a meeting in Putean. When they came to the Radio Electric factory where the workers did not strike, they called: Down with the war! Join the strike!

Immediately the police interfered and dispersed the demonstrators. Later on another group of 30 workers came to the building and appealed to the scabs to give up working. The workers were just going away when a man in uniform, without any reason, directed the factory hose against the workers. Indignant at this unexpected brutality, some workers approached the gate of the factory in order to tell to the uniformed man to stop immediately.

Suddenly a shot was heard and with bleeding head, the worker Sabatier, fell to the ground. His comrades, his mother and sister who were at his side, wanted to help him up but they were prevented by the hose that was directed on them. The indignant workers shouted: Stop the water! One of us is lying here dead: He has been shot!

The water was only stopped after the demonstrators began to throw stones against the factory. The engineer who had fired the shot, said calmly to a policeman "I have only acted in self-defense."

The workers went away furious and a policeman said: "You can't make omelettes without breaking the eggs!

This was the memorial speech of French fascism for the still warm dead body of a murdered worker.

Australian Military Budget Increases

MELBOURNE, Australia,—(FP) — Nov. 19. — In the prewar year, 1913, the expenditure on naval and military defense in Australia was estimated at $14,800,000, and for 1925 the estimate is $22,000,000. For 1926, the estimate is slightly higher. In 1914, the Australian people were told that the war was a war to end war, but it has not ended war, nor has it led to a decrease in "defense" expenditure.

DETROIT A. N. L. C. WILL HOLD PROTEST AGAINST TRIAL OF OSSIAN SWEET

DETROIT, Nov. 19—A mass meeting protesting against the trial of Dr. Ossian H. Sweet and ten other members of the race will be held at Liberty Hall, Monday, Nov. 23, 1516 Russell street, Detroit, Mich., under the auspices of the American Negro Labor Congress.

Lovett Fort-Whiteman, national organizer of the congress, will speak.

The slogans raised by the American Negro Labor Congress for this meeting are: Against segregation! Against prejudiced juries! Against mob rule!

"Dr. Sweet and his co-defendants are on trial for the crime of defending their own homes against a brutal mob inflamed with race-prejudice," said Whiteman in reference to the Sweet trial. "These eleven members of the race are victims of a system which tolerates and even furthers segregation and mob rule.

"Of the jurymen empanelled, only one was a Negro. This man was immediately dismissed. It never occurred to the court that Negroes should be allowed to sit on this jury.

"The American Negro Labor Congress is demanding the right of every man to live where he pleases, without discrimination as to race or color. We demand that Negroes be allowed to sit on juries, and that in cases where members of our own race are tried, the jury be composed of at least one-half of Negroes."

Admission to the meeting will be free.

Denies Guilt.

BOSTON, Nov. 19—Col. W. A. Gaston, denied that he had sent telegrams to Charles Ponzi regarding Florida real estate. He said: "I do not know the man, never have met him and am not interested in him. My only interest in southern real estate is in Kelsey City, Fla., bought some years ago."

Furriers for Russian Recognition

The Boston convention of the Furriers' Union, besides adopting the labor party resolution, took decisive action on many other questions affecting the American labor movement and the labor movement of the world. The resolution in favor of recognition of the Soviet Union is particularly noteworthy, coming, as it does, on the heels of the ignoble red-baiting convention of the American Federation of Labor. For one thing it proves conclusively that Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, does not speak for organized labor in this country.

The resolution is a rebuke to the continuous truckling of the federation bureaucrats before the predatory interests of this country. The Greens, Wolls, Lewises and other labor lieutenants of the capitalist class follow the policy of the government, which is the open and avowed servant of the House of Morgan and Standard Oil. Their own policy in relation to Russia will change if ever the interests of their capitalist masters change. The reactionary officialdom have no interests separate and apart from the interests of the capitalist class.

Against this vile treachery the awakening rank and file of labor endeavors to drive forward the movement to a definite policy of standing upon its own feet, voicing its own demands, fighting its own battles, instead of defending the interests of the capitalist class, voicing its demands and fighting its battles. The Furriers' resolution on Russia indicates a breaking with the leadership of betrayal and a swing toward a policy in the interests of labor, instead of the defense of the interests of capitalism.

It also proves that the delegates to that convention, representing the rank and file, realize the fact that the Russian government is a government of the working class and that it is essential that the working class of the whole world struggle against the world-wide conspiracies of the international brigands whose aim is to crush labor everywhere.

Other unions should follow this lead and launch within the unions a new drive for the recognition of Soviet Russia.

Secretary Wilbur Next

Since the inauguration of the Harding regime in 1921 the cabinet members of the United States government have been a sorry lot. Teapot Dome and the department of justice scandals turned the light of publicity upon the venality of Fall, Denby, Roosevelt and Daugherty, driving these political sattelites from office amidst nation-wide execration. Their successors are not faring much better.

The wreck of the dirigible, Shenandoah, which was sent on a flying tour over state fairs last fall and resulted in the death of Commander Zachary Landsdowne and a number of his crew, is involving Denby's successor, Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, in a scandal that threatens to drive him from office.

Evidence has been presented to the court martial trying Col. William Mitchell, tool of the airplane manufacturers, for insubordination, to the effect that Wilbur sent an emissary to the widow of the commander of the Shenandoah who endeavored to intimidate her so that she would change her testimony branding the navy department as guilty of murder in trying to stage a political show for the farmers of the middle west.

Thus Wilbur, a Coolidge appointee, whose exemplary virtues were to erase the blemish placed upon the department by Denby, is exposed as an unscrupulous politician who is so low that he does not hesitate to take advantage of the wife of the dead commander in order to save the face of the Coolidge administration.

It is such acts as these that many times turn the attention of the workers toward the government. The first reaction to such low practices on the part of the government officials is to create a loathing of the individual. A closer examination into governmental affairs reveals the fact that individuals are part of a gigantic machine that exists only for the purpose of holding the working class in subjection to the capitalist class. While the contempt for the individual culprit is not effaced it extends to the government itself.

Parliament Ratifies Locarno

As we expected, the British parliament ratified the Locarno "security pacts." In every sense of the word they were "security" pacts for Britain. The new alignments growing out Locarno bring Germany under the influence of Britain. In the struggle against France and the United States this is a distinct advantage and, considering the composition of the British parliament the ratification was inevitable.

Most significant were the remarks of the British foreign secretary, Mr. Austen Chamberlain, who engineered the Locarno conference, in relation to Mr. Ramsay MacDonald. Opening the debate after his motion for ratification Chamberlain praised MacDonald, saying that laborite had paved the way, "in preparing the European atmosphere, which made the accomplishment at Locarno possible." Thus, MacDonald, the pacifist laborite, is openly acclaimed by the imperialist conspirators who are creating new alignments in Europe preparatory to the next world slaughter. When the next war bursts in all its fury upon the world we may find MacDonald bemoaning the passing of pacifism. But the damning fact cannot be effaced that it was MacDonald's leadership of the British laborites that blazed the path for Chamberlain and Baldwin and that his defense of empire while prime minister was more effective in protecting the interests of the imperialists, particularly in the colonies and semi-colonies, than even the avowed representatives of imperialism now in control of the tory government.

The Italian Debt Settlement and the Struggle in Europe

By H. M. WICKS.

IN the kaleidoscopic swirl of events in international politics forces lying dormant come into play over night, smouldering antagonisms suddenly develop into acute crises. Happenings in one part of the world have immediate repercussions in other parts. The Italian debt settlement cannot be considered apart from these events. In fact, the recent events in Europe had much more to do with the soft terms of settlement granted Italy than the mere internal situation in Italy.

American finance capital penetrating ever more deeply into the economic life of Europe involves this country in all the contradictions and crises of the Old World. The ever-accelerated pace at which American capital is being exported has forced the administration at Washington to turn from the consideration of domestic affairs to foreign affairs. The most important senate committee today is the foreign relations committee of which Senator Borah is the chairman. Because Borah is the spokesman for that element in the republican party still defending the 1920 ideology of the group that elevated Harding to the presidency on a policy of isolation as opposed to the Wilson policy of actively participating in Europe thru the league of nations every step of the administration carries with it the danger of accentuating the internal party conflict.

When the Coolidge administration endeavors to formulate and apply the political consequences of American participation in European affairs stubborn resistance is met from the Borah group.

Realizing the political implications involved in the cancellation of portions of the European debts in order to clear the ground for more investments of finance capital, Borah tries to thwart the administration by insisting that all European obligations be met. Important concessions will have to be made to his group to avoid an open fight against the debt settlements in the coming session of congress. Concessions on the Coolidge-Mellon tax plan have already been made. Further concessions may be made in the form of accepting into the republican party councils the insurgent group of the middle west. Whether these concessions will be sufficient to pacify the opposition within the party is questionable.

Opposition Forming.

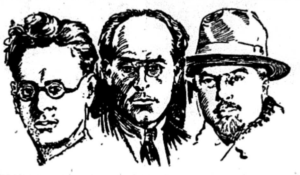
ALREADY opposition to the Italian debt settlement which amounts to a 75 per cent cancellation of the principal and interest of the debt is manifesting itself, not thru the words of statesmen, but thru the powerful publicity organs of industrialism in the middle west. That foremost spokesman of the harvester trust, the Chicago Tribune, asserts in an editorial of November 17, that the settlement of the Italian debt is a means of "making things easier for Mussolini." The high moral indignation expressed, as a cloak to conceal the economic interests involved, is typical of this organ. Says the Tribune:

"Congress shortly will be called upon to ratify the Italian debt settlement agreed upon in Washington a few days ago. The settlement throws three-fourths of the debt into the Atlantic Ocean (?). We give Italy sixty-two years to pay back a fourth of what she would owe with interest. Our debt commissioners looked into the question of Italy's ability to pay and said we should settle for 25 cents on the dollar because that was all we would ever get.

"The accounting may be correct, but we think congress had better go slow in giving its approval to the terms. Mussolini's behavior is not calculated to inspire our confidence. He is the government of his country. He has stifled the opposition in parliament by terror and assassination; he has suppressed every newspaper in Italy which has attacked him. He has tried to prevent the rest of the world from learning the truth about Italy. He now proposes to enact a law which will deprive Italians abroad of their citizenship and their property in Italy if they so much as murmer against Mussolini's regime."

Not one of these charges is new. Communists have emphasized the unspeakable depravity, the monstrous savagery, the brutal ferocity of the braggart despot of Italy. No one should be deceived and imagine the Tribune, organ of the McCormick interests is an opponent of fascism. It rails at fascism in Italy only because the economic group it serves fears the revival of Italian industry will adversely affect American industry in the world market. At the same time it eulogizes fascism in the United States. It praised the fascist organization created by Charles G. Dawes as a strike-breaking agency. Its editorial comment reeks with fascist propaganda—for the United States.

Communist Victims of Mussolini



FROM left to right: Comrades Grieko, Terrachini and Peluso, imprisoned by Mussolini during latest outbreak of fascist violence. Cancellation of 75 per cent of the Italian debt paved the way for new Morgan loans to finance the bestial savagery of Mussolini's brigands against the working class of Italy. American taxpayers shoulder the burden of the 75 per cent cancellation by being forced to raise interest on the liberty loans that financed the original Italian loan.

So the industrialist group will endeavor to block the ratification of the agreement, it unquestionably will pass. On this question the line-up will be identical with the line-up on the world court issue. The democratic party, under the leadership of its eastern section, dominated by the House of Morgan, unquestionably will support the administration. The administration will try to avoid a conflict over this issue with Borah, not because the struggle will endanger the ratification of the settlement but because it will widen the breach between the groups in the republican party.

The Triumph of Morgan.

EVENTS transpiring in Europe and the rest of the world paved the way for the crisis in the republican party that changed it from a party of the industrialist group in this country to a party of finance capital in a period of five years. Coming into power in 1920, under the industrialist slogan of isolation from Europe, it has become the instrument for realizing the identical goal that the democratic party of Morgan was striving for. This was not due to treachery to the group that dominated it in 1920, but is to be explained upon the basis of the changing economic situation in the world.

In 1920, the republican party was the political expression of Standard Oil and the steel trust. The rapid ascendency of bank capital, which originally organized the steel trust, to a dominant position in that group, added to the power of Morgan. While that movement was transpiring within the borders of the United States another factor was operating to involve Standard Oil in the European maelstrom. That was the world struggle for oil against the British trust, the Royal Dutch Shell, that had succeeded, thru stealthy persistence, in gaining control of most of the undeveloped fields in the whole world. In this titanic struggle Standard Oil became involved deeply in European entanglements. In the struggle against Britain for Mosul oil, the Standard Oil concern united with the French combine. The fate of France became closely bound up with the interests of Standard Oil. The National City Bank, dominated by Standard Oil, participated in the heavy export of capital to European nations that could be utilized in the struggle against the British oil combine. The investments of the Rockefeller banks followed the trail blazed in Europe by the Morgan bank combine. Thus, on foreign soil, was created a unity of interests between Standard Oil and the House of Morgan. The orientation of the republican party toward Europe followed the penetration of Standard Oil into the old world.

So the two groups that stood opposed on the political field of the United States in 1920 stand together on one policy and one aim in Europe today—that is to secure domination of European governments so that their political power will keep pace with their rapidly developing economic influence. The increased political power in turn will aid them in new economic conquests.

Must Smash Barrier.

THE one barrier to world supremacy of American imperialism is Great Britain. And the British ruling class is fully aware of the American threat to its existence, so it strives with every means at its command to block the gigantic power of the U. S. A. This is the fundamental political question in the world today. In this struggle between the two groups other nations are mere pawns, much as they may strut upon the stage of history and translate the interests of one or the other great powers into their own immediate interests.

For more than six years the struggle over oil has raged througout the world; sometimes taking the form of diplomatic intrigue, again breaking out into warfare between two small nations being used as pawns in the game. The Turko-Greek war of 1921-22, the recent Greco-Bulgar outbreak, were part of this struggle. The conflict has reached the point where an impasse exists. To advance farther the United States must smash British influence.

The Unequal Settlements.

THE position of the United States as banker of the world makes the question of debts and their settlement one of the means of increasing its power over its rival.

The Italian and American commissions in the recent debt settlement declared that the basis of the settlement was an inventory of Italy's ability to pay; that the industrial life of Italy was at such a low ebb that a 75% cancellation on the total principal and interest was necessary to enable Italy to revive. The British settlement was based upon 24% cancellation. The United States proposed to Caillaux, finance minister of Fance, a settlement of the French debt upon a 40% cancellation, but Caillaux insisted upon a 60% reduction.

Why these unequal settlements?

To understand the real motive behind these settlement proposals we must consider the political events of Europe during the past few weeks. When, a few days after the Locarno conference, it became known that Britain had agreed to grant Germany a 20% share of Mosul oil, with the understanding that Germany was to enter the league and vote for a 25-year extension of the British mandate in Irak, the United States realized that it had to take strenuous measures to defend its own intereests in the oil regions of the Middle East. To resist this new hold of the British Royal Dutch Shell upon Mosul oil, the United States had to gain domination of strong European debtor nations.

The new political situation in Europe accounts for the exceedingly liberal terms granted to Italy. While it was easy for Italy, after Locarno, to obtain a cancellation of three-fourths of her debt to this country, it is doubtful it Britain's debt were still unsettled whether she would now get even the 24% cancellation that she got before Locarno.

Had the facts of Locarno been realized during the sessions with the French mission at Washington it is probable that the United States would have granted her demand for a 60% cancellation. Now that new negotiations are to be opened, through a new mission, it is certain that strenuous efforts will be made to reach a satisfactory agreement, for the reason that France must be saved as an ally of the United States in its struggle against England. If France loses its campaign to crush the Syrians it means that the league mandate for that country will go to England. The control of Syria would tremendously increase the hold of Britain over the oil of Turkey and Persia, because Beirut is the natural terminal for a pipe line from the Mosul fields.

The Dawes Contradiction.

WHEN the United States refused the French proposals the object was to bankrupt France so that a Dawes plan could be imposed upon that country. Not, however, with the collaboration of England, as was the case of the Dawes plan in Germany, but for the benefit of American bank capital alone.

Incidentally the Dawes plan for Germany does not signify a harmonious relation between England and the United States. Comrade John Pepper, in discussing Anglo-American relations, wrote of the Dawes plan in the Communist International to prove that stabilization of capitalism was not the outstanding fact of the world situation. He said:

"It is a very mechanical conception of the Dawes plan to see cooperation only and forget to analyze the conflict which is inevitably brought about by the cooperation itself.

"What interest has America in the Dawes plan? America wants to export capital to Germany and has already invested hundreds of millions of dollars in Germany. Where? In German industry. And what is England's interest in the Dawes plan? England's main interest in the Dawes plan is to fetter Germany with annual payments and with increased taxation, so that German industry shall not be able to compete with British industry by means of low cost of production and by cutting prices."

It is plain that the cooperation in the Dawes plan, for two separate and distinct reasons, cannot possibly benefit both the United States and Britain. With American finance capital penetrating German industries, and reviving them, British industry is bound to suffer. Therefore, at the first opportunity Britain, in its struggle against the United States, is forced to manouver to offset this new menace growing out of one of the many efforts to stabilie Europe. By aligning Germany against the United States in Mosul England gains one advantage. By promising, through diplomatic channels, the support of Germany against France another point is gained.

One thing stands out clarly in the close cooperation between England and Germany—the rapprochement is made for the purpose of creating a military alliance in the world struggle that is impending.

Sacrifice German Interest.

MANY people will consider the heavy investments of the American bankers in both Britain and Germany and contend that this government dare not fight against Britain for fear of losing these investments. But the temporary gains to be derived from continuing amicable relations with these two countries are far outweighed when the world situation is considered. Certainly it is infatile to imagine for a moment that Wall Street will risk its position of world supremacy in order to avoid a temporary loss of interest on investments.

From the viewpoint of the world struggle between England and America, the two giants of world imperialism, special localized interests play a secondary part.

Britain realizes it equally as well as the United States. The open alliance with Germany as the result of Locarno, the determination now becoming clear on the part of England to take advantage of the struggle in Syria as an excuse to strive to expel France from Asia Minor are threats to the United States that cannot be ignored. Britain's determination to secure complete control of Mosul oil is further emphasized by its concentration of air forces at Hinaidi, the world's greatest fighting air base. This will be the point from which attacks will be launched against Turkey in order to subdue that nation and drive it out of the Mosul fields.

Sir Harry Dobbs, high commissioner of the air forces, declares this base can launch 300 planes, carrying 1,500 bombs on each flight, against Turkey, completely destroying Turkish bases and water wells, and routing its army.

Does any sane person doubt for a moment, in face of these alignments, that the United States will not cancel any debt, or all debts of the previous war, if necessary, in order to thwart the designs of Britain?

The imperialist bandits would have us believe that although alliances in the past have always led to war, the present alliances are for the purpose of promoting peace.

Germany sees in the present alignment with England a chance of regaining control of its former territory. France, with the assistance of the United States, hopes, through defeat of Britain to obtain undisputed control of the Rhine and Ruhr; Italy has visions of grandeur through support of Wall Street.

The ramifications of these alliances will be depicted in volumes of historico-economic works. The one outstanding, overshadowing fact is the alignment for the next world slaughter.

The only force that can prevent its consummation is the rise of the workers and peasants of the imperialist nations and the colonies. The one force that can bring peace to the world is the Communist International striving to unite the exploited masses into a solid front against the imperialist conspirators.

But there is much that must be destroyed by fire, and blood before peace can be realized for the world.

Glenn Young's Guards Must Stand Trial for Stealing Automobile

EAST St. Louis, Ill., Nov. 19.—Otis Maynard, of Herrin, former member of the board of supervisors in Williamson county and J. C. Eberhart, constable of Herrin, both of whom were powers in the county when S. Glenn Young was making his klan raids, were indicted by a federal grand jury on two counts in connection with a stolen automobile, U. S. District Attorney W. O. Potter announced.

Eberhardt was known as the "bodyguard of S. Glenn Young." Maynard signed the bond for Young when the latter was arrested on a charge of impersonating a federal officer.

After the Election---A Comparison

By SYLVAN A. POLLACK

NOW that the mayoralty election in New York City has ended, the campaign speeches have stopped, the capitalists newspapers can once again display the usual sex and murder sensations on the first page, instead of the "debate" between James J. Walker, Frank D. Waterman and the Rev. Norman Thomas whether New York should have a Tammany, business or clean adminstration.

The above named, former candidates, can now go back to their respective occupations knowing that they have done their stunts and the people of New York have exercised their "democratic" prerogative and all is once again quiet. Frank D. Waterman has congratulated Jimmie Walker on his election and wished him the best of luck. The Rev. Norman Thomas, probably gave his blessing to the new administration that takes office January first.

Tammany is Satisfied.

James J. Walker, songwriter, jazz king, handshaker and emissary extraordinary of Tammany Hall, the successful candidate can sit back comfortably and count the days passing until January first, when he will take over the office of mayor and give New York a good old fashioned Tammany administration, which the present mayor, John F. Hylan, did not do efficiently enough to suit those that control Tammany Hall.

Back to His Open Shop.

Frank D. Waterman, the republican candidate, multi-millionaire, open-shop fountain pen manufacturer, and one who was nominated by the republican party that desired to "honor" him, for his staunch devotion to that party, can go back and give his full attention to his business of exploiting the workers in his factory at the average wage of eighteen dollars a week and in his spare moments in the cold winter nights, amuse himself clipping coupons.

A Socialist Sky Pilot.

The Rev. Norman Thomas, socialist, supporter of the league of nations, and colleague of the traitors of the working class the world over, can continue in his christian way to delude the working class, giving them the impression that they can gain political power by the use of the present political structure, fooling them with nonsense of democracy, which is only a cloak for capitalist suppression.

Gitlow Goes to Jail.

Compare the present activities of the above mentioned candidates in the recent election with Ben Gitlow, who was the Communist nominee. Not even allowed to have his name on the ballot of sacred democracy, he is today in Sing Sing prison to complete a ten-year sentence of which he has already served over two years, for being a fighter for the working class.

The capitalist government under which Walker will administrate after January first, under which Waterman reaps enormous profits and exploits thousand of workers, and which Thomas hopes to reform by his christian socialism, today, puts Gitlow in jail for working to abolish the economic system that tolerates creatures such as the Walkers as their mayors, Watermans as their exploiters of the workers, and the Thomas' and his kind as misleader of the working class.

For being a Communist, Ben Gitlow is today in jail as is Mathias Rakosi in Hungary, Stanislav Lanzutsky in Poland and as are thousands of Communists all over the world, for the capitalists know that it is only the Communists who are a menace to their rule and exploitation of the workers.

Gitlow is today in the bastille of capitalism, but the day will come when his present jailers will answer to the revolution for their crimes.

FIGHT FOR THE MINERS' BEST INTEREST AND YOU'RE A 'RED' TO ANTHRACITE UNION BOSSES

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

ARTICLE VIII.

HAZLETON, Pa., Nov. 20.—Rough is the road that one travels in the anthracite who has had the epithet "radical" attached to him.

The distinction can be achieved in many ways but with no more certainly than by the method of insisting, if one is a mine committeeman, that the provisions of the agreement relating to pay for extra work be lived up to by the operators at all costs.

Once branded as a "radical" or "red," in the latest manner of decribing undesirables, the miner, if not acutally denied any kind of a job, is forced to take the poorest places in the mine and has to move from one mine to another with the jobs becoming ever of shorter duration.

The tendency of most committeemen, in the face of the fierce opposition of the operator's representative

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE Chicago Tribune carried a front page story last Thursday, informing the public that Mussolini addressed the chamber of deputies in Rome and informed that respectable body that it had no more to do but twiddle its thumbs and take a permanent holiday. The galleries applauded, we are told, and even the deputies upon whom the sentence of political death was pronounced, cheered the dictator to the echo. The story occupied almost a column, the remainder being taken up with a little bulletin in black face type, announcing that the House of Morgan had granted a $100,000,000 loan to Mussolini. This will enable Benito to put thru his latest edict, which completely disposes of whatever little was left of parliamentary government.

THIS is a dictatorship with a vengeance! The great majority of those who read the capitalist press may not understand why the millionaire-controlled government of the United States was so generous in its settlement of the war debt with the Italian government while it haggled like a junk peddler with France. It is common knowledge that the financial situation in Italy was approaching a debacle at the time Mussolini's representatives came to Washington. The alleged plot against the life of Mussolini was merely a dodge on the part of the fascisti to create popular sentiment in their favor until they succeeded in averting the crisis with the aid of American dollars. Needless to say there was no plot, but the fiction gave Mussolini the necessary excuse to deliver crushing blows to the opposition.

THE fascist dictatorship, with its futile program for the abolition of the class struggle under capitalism, a dictatorship of the few over the many makes no pretense of showing respect to what our hypocritical scribblers call the "Anglo-Saxon ideal of government." Yet the very same press that suffers apoplectic fits over the rule of the workers and peasants in Russia looks benignantly at Mussolini's bloody reign of terror. They may not like Mussolini's methods but they are

ANTHRACITE OPERATORS AGAIN REFUSE TO GIVE STRIKERS WAGE RAISE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 20—Anthracite operators still refuse to grant the demands of the striking 150,000 miners of hard coal, say the operators. It was made apparent today that this is the sentiment of members of the policy committee of the anthracite operators' association, who held a secret meeting here at which the general strike situation was discussed. The session was presided over by Samuel D. Warriner, president of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company. All but a few members were present.

100 PER CENT STRIKE ASKED IN ANTHRACITE

Call Out Maintenance Men, Is Demand

(Special to The Daily Worker)

EDWARDSVILLE, Pa., Nov. 20—More than 300 striking anthracite miners gathered here today to hear speeches by B. K. Gebert, and Radwanski, editor of the Novy Mir.

The meeting was arranged under the auspices of Polish fraternal organizations in celebration of the Polish rebellion against the czar in 1905. Radwanski spoke of this rebellion and its significance in the Russian revolution.

B. K. Gebert, who has been working in the anthracite region in support of progressive policies for the miners' strike, devoted his speech to the strike situation. Formulation of the demand for 100 per cent strike and the calling out of the maintenance men with the demand that there be no settlement without giving the workers the wage increase for which they are fighting, was given enthusiastic support by the striking miners present.

The Polish miners are responding to the policies of the Progressive Miners' Committee. Meetings have been held at a number of places and these are securing support which is growing daily among the striking miners.

Capitalist Covt. to Aid Strikebreakers with Bituminous Coal

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 20.—To aid in breaking the anthracite strike by furnishing soft coal to the region which depends on anthracite, the interstate commerce commission today began an inquiry into the "reasonableness" of freight rates on bituminous and semi-bituminous coal from West Virginia, Virginia and western Pennsylvania into the north Atlantic region.

There has been no move on the part of the United Mine Workers' Union officials to meet this danger with a strike in the bituminous fields.

Representatives of the Pennsylvania operators appeared to protest against lowering rates from West Virginia mines to a point where operators in West Virginia would be able to underbid the Pennsylvania operators.

French Arsenal in Flames.

TOULON, France, Nov. 20—The naval arsenal was on fire today. High wind caused fear that the flames might reach explosive magazines. Vigorous efforts were made by civilian and naval authorities to prevent a disaster.

AMERICA SHOWS ITS FRIENDSHIP FOR CHINA; TWO DEAD, NINE HURT

PEKING, China, Nov. 20.—The American legation here today received a note from the Chinese foreign office protesting against the sinking near Chucking of junks laden with Chinese troops by the American steamer, Meljen, and the killing of two soldiers and wounding nine others by the American naval guard aboard the vessel.

The junks were sunk by a backwash from the Meijen, the note stated, after the steamer had ignored frantic signals from the Chinese calling upon her to stop. The naval guard then opened fire on the soldiery, it was added.

AGED WIDOW WITH FIVE CHILDREN SENT TO JAIL FOR STEALING PALTRY SUM

BEDFORD, England, Nov. 20.—Dagmar Campion, aged fifty, the widowed mother of five children was arraigned in court here on charges of stealing goods valued at $3.25. It was her first offense but she was sentenced to a month's hard labor.

SILK STRIKERS INSIST UPON FULL DEMANDS

Mill Owners Threaten to Move Mills

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NORTH BERGEN, N. J., Nov. 20.—Owners of the Hillcrest Silk Mills announce that they intend to move their mills to North Carolina because of failure to beat the strikers into acceptance of the multiple loom system. A strike has been going on for a month, with the workers standing firmly against the proposed introduction of the three- and four-loom system. The threat to move is an old hoax that is always used in silk strikes, following the example of the Patterson silk mill owners who always threaten to move when they cannot beat the strikers. But the Patterson mills are still where they were.

The gesture is made in order to align the petty bourgeois, store keepers, professionals, boot-leggers, and others on the side of the mill owners.

Priest Horns In.

Leonard Borgetti, a priest of the Roman catholic church of our lady of Libera, called a conference of the owners and the strike leaders to try to befuddle the workers into accepting the bosses terms. Albert Weisbord, leader of the strikers who has been arrested twice in the struggle on charges of "disorderly conduct" and is out on bail while the jail sentences imposed upon him are being appealed to higher courts, was the chief spokesman for the strikers at the conference called by the priest.

The priest, while defending the interests of the manufacturers, tried to cloak his real mission by telling the strike leaders that many of the strikers were suffering and for that reason he intervened to end the strike. This is a typical jesuit attempt to endeavor to create dissention in the ranks of the strikers, some of whom are still under the illusions of religious superstition.

They should tell this priest that the question of conditions in the mills, hours and wages of the workers are something entirely aside from his specialty and that he should confine himself to his business and leave the strikers settle their own affairs with the bosses.

Won't Yield to Bosses.

The employers offered $35 per week for men on the basis of individual contracts but insisted upon the multiple loom system. The proposals were presented to a mass meeting of the strikers yesterday and they unanimously refused to consider it, rejecting it by an overwhelming vote. When the rejection was reported, the owners said they would deal no further with the strikers and would remove the mills.

These threats to move mills, and their occasional actual removal, are possible because of the unorganized condition of the textile industry. Where organized at all the unions are merely of a local character and there has not yet been created an organization capable of uniting the shreds of organization. The challenge of removals can be met in but one manner—the amalgamation of the scattered unions into one body, forming the basis for a powerful drive to unionize the whole textile industry of this country.

Ukrainian Student "Disappears" After Beating by Police

WARSAW, (L. R. A.), Nov. 20—There is as yet no news of a Ukrainian student, Vasili Kostinika, recently arrested by the Lvov secret police. Kostinika's disappearance evoked a great sensation in the circles of the Lvov barristers, who questioned the ministry of justice about the unheard of thrashing of Kostinika at a Lvov police station. He was beaten on his heels so strongly that for several weeks he was unable to walk.

ELEVEN DAYS ENDS I. W. W. CONVENTION

Few Delegates Enact New Measures

The 17th general convention of the Industrial Workers of the World closed yesterday, according to statements given out at the headquarters.

The convention began on Nov. 9, and has lasted eleven days. It began with twelve delegates, unseated one, Warren Lamson of the small industrial unions, seated another, Carl Schultes of the Marine Transport Workers, and ended in almost record time for an I. W. W. convention. Last year's convention lasted three weeks.

Sliding Scale Goes Thru.

Among the various actions of the convention the most progressive was the adoption of the "sliding scale" allowing industrial unions to set their initiations and dues within certain limits, to conform with the conditions of the industry and circumstance; also the removal of the clause limiting officials' tenure of office to one year. All this goes to referendum of the members, but only a small percentage ever votes.

The convention refused to send delegates to any international of unions, since it considers the I. W. W. an international in opposition to all others and instructed the incoming general executive board to call a conference of all "administrations" and foreign sections of the I. W. W. to integrate it internationally. The convention, however, reaffirmed the action of the 1922 convention which was never obeyed, instructing the officials to begin and maintain friendly correspondence with all international labor bodies.

A "Friendly" Split.

Mincoff, one of the anarchistic delegates who made this motion, held that the Berlin anarchist international was "close to the I. W. W." in spite of the Berlin group having attacked the I. W. W. and embraced the emergency program split as an affiliated section. Just how "friendly correspondence" is to be maintained with a group that is splitting the I. W. W. was not explained.

Counterfeiters at Work.

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Nov. 20—A gang of international counterfeiters have been found in Bulgaria with plates for counterfeiting 5,000 leva Bulgarian notes and $100 United States gold certificates. In the gang that was arrested, five of them were employed in the state printing establishment.

CHICAGO I. L. D. TO STAGE BIG MEETING DEC. 5

Holly, Minor and Mann to be Speakers

Local Chicago International Labor Defense has called a mass meeting for Friday, December 4, at the West Side Auditorium, corner Racine and Taylor Sts., to protest against the imprisonment of Anita Whitney, of California, and Ben Gitlow of New York, convicted under the state crimnial syndicalism laws. Speakers will be Wm. H. Holly, Robert Minor and Fred Mann. All labor organizations are being asked to participate.

Anita Whitney was convicted under the California criminal syndicalism law for a speech delivered in 1920. Her appeal carried to the United States supreme court, was recently denied, one court refusing jurisdiction.

Benjamin Gitlow was indicted with a number of others in 1919 for his connection with the left wing of the socialist party. Tried and convicted in 1920. He spent over two years in prison while his appeal was pending before he was admitted to bail. In July, 1925, the supreme court finally denied his appeal and sustained the constitutionality of the New York criminal anarchy, law, Justices Holmes and Brandeis dissenting.

On November 10 Gitlow returned to Sing Sing. Unless his release is forced by mass protests, he will have to serve the balance of his sentence from five to ten years.

NEW YORK INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE ARRANGES DEMONSTRATION TO PROTEST GITLOW IMPRISONMENT

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—A protest demonstration against the imprisonment of Benjamin Gitlow is being arranged by the International Labor Defense, New York section on Tuesday, November 24, at Webster Hall, 119 East 11th street, at 8 p. m.

Comrade Gitlow was sentenced to a term of from 5 to 10 years for a violation of the New York criminal syndicalist law in the court of Judge Weeks in New York City, January, 1920. This verdict was later upheld by state supreme court and finally by the United States supreme court. He was first released after 27 months behind bars and must now serve the unexpired portion of his term.

The International Labor Defense is conducting a campaign for the release of Comrade Gitlow. A resolution is now being sent out to all unions in New York City for their adoption, by the International Labor Defense, showing up the nature of the persecution and calling for his immediate release.

The International Labor Defense has called upon all workers' organizations to join in this protest meeting.

Remember, November 24, at Webster Hall!

Come out and protest!

DEMONSTRATION TURNS INTO A CELEBRATION

N. Y. Workers Sing at Horthy Defeat

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 20.—Yesterday morning the largest group hitherto gathered for the purpose of demonstrating against the court martialing of Comrade Rakosi and the other Hungarian comrades by the American-owned Horthy government, met to march upon the Hungarian consulate in New York City, prepared to picket with appropriate slogans and demand the release of our comrades.

Just a few moments before the demonstration was to have begun, Comrade Rose Baron, secretary of the International Labor Defense, New York section, received the following cable:

"BERLIN, Germany. After two days proceeding, court martial declared itself incompetent. World protest of workmen triumphed."

Comrade Baron called together the demonstrants who packed the hall and stood outside the doors eagerly waiting for instructions to proceed. There were some older workers but most of them were young men and women between the ages of twenty and thirty, who had sacrificed their day's work to picket the Hungarian consulate.

She read them the cable, whereupon the crowd broke into song. It was the "Internationale," and expressed their own feeling of triumph that their previous demonstrations and the demonstrations of workers thru all other countries had helped to save the lives of their comrades.

The demonstrants disbanded after pledging themselves to stand ready at any moment—a standing army, they called themselves—to leave their work benches and their shops at the call of the International Labor Defense to demonstrate against the white terror in whichever country it might manifest itself.

BRITISH TRIAL OF COMMUNISTS DRAWS WORKERS

Scotland Yard Steals Defendants' Mail

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The trial of the twelve arrested members of the Communist Party and the Young Communist League of Great Britain is attracting great attention at "Old Bailey" here.

Eject Spectator.

As the court opened one of the spectators remarked, "This trial is a farce anyway." Scotland Yard detectives are very much in evidence at the trial and the spectator who dared to criticize the class character of the justice administered in English courts was promptly ejected.

The attorney for the crown, Sir Douglas M. Hogg, is seeking to prove that the accused "leaders in Britain of an organization calling itself the Communist Party," were trying to "overthrow the British government by fomenting civil war, for which reason they made special efforts to persuade the army and navy to renounce their oaths of allegiance to the crown."

Attack Communists.

In his speech the attorney for the crown attacked the Communists, saying:

"You may persuade people to change to a different form of government or society. If you succeed in persuading the majority of the electors, you will achieve your end. What you may not do is to attempt to stir up your fellow citizens, whom you know you cannot persuade in sufficient numbers forcibly to overthrow the rule of the majority and the government as by law established.

"You have a perfect right to say that property ought to be abolished or the prime minister turned out of office. But you have not right to say to people, 'Steal your neghbor's property' or 'Murder the prime minister.'"

He then read statement after state-

RED INTERNATIONAL CALLS ON ITS SECTIONS TO AID CHINESE AND JAPANESE TRADE UNIONISTS

MOSCOW—(By Mail.)—Upon the return of the Red International of Labor Union's delegation from China and Japan and learning of the progress that has been made by the Chinese and Japanese workers towards organization on the industrial field and having heard of the persecutions which the workers of these two nations are subjected to, the Red International of Labor Unions calls on all its section in the following declaration to take up the matter of direct connections with these unions and aid them in their fight:

"The delegation of the Red International of Labor Unions recently returned from China and Japan, and the Central Council of Soviet Unions referred in their report to the considerable growth and the political maturity of the Chinese trade union movement which is completely at one with the Red International of Labor Unions. At the same time the delegation put us into possession of a number of facts which convince us that the imperialists and a certain section of the Chinese bourgeoisie are striving to suppress the growing workers' movement in the country.

Make Connections.

"The Executive Bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions is of the opinion that the direct connection established between the Soviet Unions and those of China is a great step forwards on the way to winning

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20—President Coolidge today sent the following expression of regret over the serious illness of Queen Alexandra of England, to King George.

"I learn with deepest regret of the critical illness of your majesty's beloved mother, Queen Alexandra and hasten to express the frevent hope, in which the people of the United States wholeheartedly share, that your majesty's anxiety may soon be relieved by her complete recovery."

HEAD OF POLISH DIET TRIES TO FORM CABINET

Financial Crisis Forces Government Failure

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WARSAW, Poland, Nov. 20.—Following the failure of the foreign minister, M. Skrzynski, to form a cabinet, Maciej Rataj, president of the diet has been called upon to form a cabinet, following the resignation of the Grabski cabinet.

It is declared that only a Wall Street loan can save Poland.

Unable To Solve Crisis.

The inability of the Grabski government of Poland to solve the financial crisis which has forced the Polish mark to fall to unprecedented low levels and has forced a number of the largest banks of Poland to the wall caused the cabinet to resign. Tho the inability of the Grabski government to cope with the financial situation was recognized a month ago the Grabski government continued to remain in power awaiting the ending of the Locarno peace pact and the negotiation of some agreement between the allied powers of Poland which they hoped would stabilize their currency.

The problem that confronts the present head of the diet will be one of choosing a cabinet not out of a majority party in the diet, as there are 10 separate parties in the diet, but choosing a coalition cabinet that will be able to represent the domi-

BRITISH RAILROADERS MAY MAKE MUSSOLINI WALK OR STAY HOME

LONDON, Nov. 20—British trade unionists are likely to give Mussolini a warm reception if he persists in visiting England to sign the Locarno treaties, as he is scheduled to do.

John Bromley, secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen declares that the railroad workers are quite likely to refuse to move Benito and his fascist cohorts, if they come.

"Our union," says Bromley, "has not yet considered the matter, but it would not surprise me if some of our members refused to work on a train carrying this dictator. If the volume of murmurings increases, our executive committee may have to consider the question officially."

LEFT WINGERS OF THE I.L.G.W. TO AID GITLOW

All Prisoners Pledged Help of Victors

Triumphant left wingers of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union have not forgotten the persecution of class war prisoners in their joy at the victory over the reactionary leaders of the union.

At the recent banquet of I. L. G. W. members in Chicago, attended by well over 200, one in the audience arose and moved that those in charge of the banquet should draft a resolution demanding the release of Ben Gitlow and all other prisoners of the class war. This was done and a ringing resolution, pledging the support of the garment workers to all imprisoned fighters and the carrying on of the struggle to abolish capitalist society was passed unanimously.

The banquet was held to celebrate the election of left wing delegates to the coming Philadelphia convention of the I. L. G. W. Many left wing leaders spoke, and the applause for the victory lasted for ten minutes, the victory of the policy of class struggle over the policy of class collaboration.

Greetings from the Freiheit, The DAILY WORKER and the Trade Union Educational League were received with enthusiastic applause.

After Comrade Steinberg, manager of the Freiheit had spoken, a rank and filer moved to raise a collection in the audience for the Freiheit. About $100 was collected. The meeting was the most joyful gathering of Chicago's garment workers in many a day.

CHINA FORCES IMPERIALISTS TO SURRENDER

Meanwhile Feng Whips Chang Into Manchuria

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PEKING, Nov. 20.—What virtually amounts to unconditional tariff autonomy has been forced out of the imperialist powers by China, according to the interpretation of a plan accepted by a sub-committee of the committee on provisional measures of the customs conference. Two declarations are to be part of the treaty.

The first declaration is that the other powers recognize China's right to tariff autonomy and to agree to remove all restrictions contained in the existing treaties and agree to abide by the Chinese national tariff laws becoming effective on January 1, 1929. The second declaration is that of China, who agrees to abolish the internal tax on traffic in goods between provinces. This also is effective in 1929.

The foreign delegates were compelled to agree to the two proposals when the chief Chinese delegate threatened to resign and break up the conference.

It seems that Chang Tso-lin has agreed to remove his troops to Manchuria. General Feng is in control and the beaten troops of Chang are retreating from Shantung and southern Chili.

Building Trades Bosses to Resist Shorter Work Week and Wage Increase

At a one-day conference which the National Association of Building Trades Employers held in the Congress Hotel, the building trades employers from many of the largest cities in the United States met and discussed ways and means of resisting attempts of building trades workers to obtain an increase in wages.

At this gathering of employes, many of whom are bitter open-shoppers, a resolution was adopted in which it condemned the 40-hour week of 5 days and declared it would oppose all attempts on the part of the union workers to shorten the work-week.

The conference also adopted a resolution it which it urged that the contractors do all in their power to interest more of the American youth in taking up the building trades and laid plans by means of which they intend to create a surplus of skilled workers and in that manner smash the unions.

Most of the resolutions introduced to this convention of building trades employers was introduced by the open shop section of the employers in Chicago.

the Chinese proletariat for participation in the international movement of the world proletariat.

"The Executive Bureau requests all affiliated organizations to take up direct connections with the Chinese Trade Union Federation in Canton and to do everything possible to prepare the proletariat for an active campaign of support for the young Chinese trade union movement.

Japanese Workers Persecuted.

"In Japan the delegation was greeted with enthusiasm by all workers. And for this the Japanese workers were persecuted, hundreds were arrested and brutally beaten and submitted to the barbarity of the Japanese police. The aim of this was to prevent any fraternization between the trade unions of Russia and those of Japan. The Executive Bureau sends fraternal greetings to the Japanese workers and requests all affiliated organizations to protest against the insolent police regime in Japan.

"Long live the Chinese Trade Union Federation!

"Down with imperialism!

"Long live the Japanese proletariat!

"Down with the police regime of the Japanese capitalists!"

SHENANDOAH COURT OF INQUIRY WHITEWASHES SECRETARY OF NAVY WILBUR'S TOOL, CAPTAIN FOLEY

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The Shenandoah board of inquiry has officially exonerated Captain Paul Foley and will not investigate the charge made by the widow of the late commander of the Shenandoah, Zachary Lansdowne. This action of the board in exonerating its judge advocate and refusing to investigate the charge is an attempt on the part of the court to hide the part that Secretary of the Navy Wilbur played in the whitewashing investigation of the disaster.

Mrs. Margaret Lansdowne, the widow of the commander who lost his life in the wreck, showed that the trip of the Shenandoah was ordered over the protest of her husband and that Secretary of the Navy Wilbur did all he could to hide the fact that this trip was nothing more than a political stunt on the part of the naval authorities.

With the refusal of the court to investigate the disaster and with its exoneration of Foley, one of the phases of the court-martial of Col. William Mitchell, tool of the airplane interests in the United States, which threatened to give the American workers a peep behind the curtains in the navy department and see how the navy heads sacrificed hundreds of young men in order to gratify their political ambitions and to create militarist advertising, has been covered up. The American workers have been denied the privilege of finding out why Wilbur was so insistent that the widow testify before the board of inquiry, according to the wishes of the navy department.

In the exoneration of Captain Foley, the board disclosed how the navy and military authorities have been able to cover up and whitewash many incidents, by stating that the judge advocate of a board of inquiry has the right to question any witness to see if the testimony is "germane" to the issue involved.

ment prepared by the government to prove that the Communists were being financed by Moscow and that their intention was the creation of a state of civil war in England and that this was all being done in "accordance with teachings of Lenin."

Dicks Pilfer Letters.

It developed at the trial in the Old Bailey that Scotland Yard has been pilfering the letters being sent to the Communist Party and the arrested defendants. The Scotland Yard detective testifying attempted to hide the part that the Yard's detectives had played in opening the letters and pilfering them, claiming that it was the postal authorities and not Scotland Yard.

Quashes Fascist Case.

The class character of English justice can be easily seen from the method in which the four national fascists who had stolen a van loaded with conservative London Daily Heralds had destroyed the papers, admitted their guilt and three of them were released by the court on "good behavior" and one was sent to prison for a short period when he was unable to pay a fine of twenty pounds sterling imposed for carrying a revolver. The case was abandoned and the same prosecutor who is now so insistent on sending the Communists to jail, was the one who was instrumental in quashing the case againts the anti-labor fascisti.

CARPENTERS 62 BEGINS BATTLE FOR CONDITIONS

Demands 5-Day Week and $1.75 an Hour

Chicago carpenters are preparing for an earnest effort to reduce the hours and raise the pay. One of the biggest locals, No. 62, with 2,000 members, Thursday night formulated its policy for the new agreement which must be put forth when the old contract expires in June.

And the terms were these: That the union demand of the bosses a raise from $1.37½ cents an hour to $1.75 an hour; and that the 44-hour week be reduced to 40 hours on the basis of a five-day week.

Lost Time and Tools.

In addition, the local formed demands that the bosses pay for traveling time on long distance jobs to suburban towns, and that the bosses be held responsible for tools left on jobs and provide a safe place for them or pay fifty per cent of the loss when stolen.

The meeting was enthusiastic and in a progressive mood all thru. The sentiment for putting up a fight for these demands results from last summer's struggle by the progressive group against the compromise and pussy footing policy of Jensen for a policy of class struggle for better conditions.

Goes to Other Locals.

Several visitors were present from other locals, among others John Bimms, the vice president of the District Council. The proposals adopted by Local 62, will now undoubtedly be taken up in the other locals, 181, 416, No. 1, 80 and others, for discusson and action.

All proposals will be given to the arbitration board of the district council, which will be largely guided by the action of the locals in its negotiations with the bosses.

The meeting was unanimous in making these demands, Brother Lee Green voicing the sentiment of the membership when he said that in outside places such as Hammond, Whiting and St. Louis, the bosses were paying $12 a day, while Chicago carpenters had been getting only $11.

Wants United Fight.

Green held that the Carpenters' Union had got the eight-hour day when it was only a quarter as strong as at present, that a reduction of the working hours was the biggest aid to solve the unemployment problem. He insisted that victory would be certain [illegible] building trades unions, the plumbers, steamfitters, electricians, painters and so on, would unite on a program of fighting for the mutual benefit of all, not going it alone.

PERUVIAN LABOR WINS STRIKE TO OUST FASCISTI

Threat of General Strike Did Work

By OCTAVIO VARGA MONTJOY

LIMA, Peru, Nov. 1.—(By Mail)—The last month has seen a number of incidents in the Peruvian labor movement which will interest the readers of The DAILY WORKER.

In Lima are several textile factories employing many thousands of weavers. One day the owner of one of the factories, imported 50 Italian fascisti to work in his mill, with the definite purpose of using them to destroy the organization of the workers.

You Come—We Go!

The day the fascists came to work, all the Peruvian workers struck. The boss had paid the passage money for the fascists from Italy, also an advance on wages. So to keep from having this a total loss the boss refused to discharge the scabby fascists.

The whole group of trade unions of the city protested, declaring that if the fascists were not sent back to Italy, all Lima workers would join the strike. This caused the minister of labor to intervene, who decreed that the boss send the fascists back to Italy and pay a fine of $500 to the Textile Union. The fine was paid, the fascists fired and the strike was won.

Persecution.

In Huacho there has been some persecution of the workers, because they staged a big demonstration against the law which conscripts all Peruvians to work several days for the government. Comrade Pizarro was beaten with whips by an army officer, Sergeant-Major Ovalle.

The Peruvian poet Jose Santos Chocano, whose is as great a prostitute as he is a poet and utterly reactionary, picked a quarrel with Edwin Elmore because the latter upheld the ideas of Vasconcelos (Mexican). This poet is a bitter enemy of the working class and Communism.

nant element in Polish society, the landlord class.

Need Foreign Assistance.

Regardless of whether they are able to form a cabinet or not, declares the Moscow Pravda in commenting on the financial situation of Poland, the present Polish crisis cannot be solved by parliamentary combinations, because the numerous political parties make a majority vote impossible. The only hope that Poland has rests on the possibility of obtaining a loan from the United States.

Pilsudski Dictatorship.

Regarding the threatened attempt of General Pilsudski, the same issue of the Pravda shows that it will be impossible for this general to accomplish his end as he has not the confidence of the conservative Polish parties. In order to accomplish his ends, the Pravda further asserts he must have the backing of the army, and especially the officers of the army, and this is impossible as the majority of the generals of the army are Austrians and supporters of the conservative Polish political parties.

Attempt to Whitewash Some False "Friends" of "The Amalgamated"

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, more than at any time in the past, it is absolutely necessary that the rank and file of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union of America take an accounting and find out just where it is at. An administration that resorts to deliberate misrepresentation in order to secure its ends, needs careful watching. It is intended here to comment only on several paragraphs appearing in the report of the settlement of the strike against the International Tailoring Co. and the J. L. Taylor & Co., that appeared in the union's official organ, The Advance, on Friday, Nov. 13th.

Strike settlements, like many other occasions for jubilation, are attended with an untold amount of "you scratch my back and I'll scratch yours," among the officials of labor. The ending of this 19-weeks' struggle was no exception. In fact, it was carried to ridiculous and deliberately misleading extremes that should receive the quick and just rebuke of the union's membership.

Instead of using the enthusiasm, incident upon the ending of the strike, to build for bigger victories in the future, the officials used it to hide the real terms of the settlement and thus undermine the morale of the union.

• • • •

Thus, The Advance, after stating that the strikers in New York City and Chicago received the active support of the union's organizations in Rochester, Cleveland and other centers, this is tacked on:

> "The Chicago Federation of Labor, and the Tri-Cities Organized Labor Movement also came nobly to our support and rendered invaluable aid."

And in another place:

> "In the Chicago Federation of Labor circles the news of the outcome of our strike against the International has been received as a victory for the entire labor movement. It was pointed out that the Amalgamated has definitely established the validity of the anti-injunction law in Illinois, with this strike."

• • • •

If by "the Chicago Federation of Labor" and the "Tri-Cities Organized Labor Movement" is meant the membership of labor in these two centers, then the report is approximately correct. It was the militancy of the membership that forced the Chicago Federation of Labor at first into a sympathetic stand on the side of "The Amalgamated." But the report in The Advance is not intended as a tribute to those who made the fight in the Chicago Federation of Labor. It is a clumsy attempt to cover up the treason of the officials of the Chicago Federation of Labor, especially of President John Fitzpatrick and Secretary Edward N. Nockels, to the 35,000 members of "The Amalgamated," in meekly acquiescing in the demand of President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, that "The Amalgamated" be considered in this struggle as "a dual and seceding organization"; that the strike-breaking United Garment Workers of America, that was pouring scabs into the struck plants, be considered the regular and recognized organization. The fight that was made in the Chicago Federation of Labor had to be made against the officialdom, especially against Fitzpatrick, who declared, in the meeting of Sunday, August 2nd, when the strike was in a crucial stage:

> "We will continue to obey the orders of the American Federation of Labor and to follow its policy no matter where that policy may lead us."

• • • •

The policy of the A. F. of L., in this strike, resulted in the use of an organization without any membership—the United Garment Workers of America—as a strike-breaking outfit, and Fitzpatrick's acquiescence in that policy, tended to draw the Chicago Federation of Labor into the same scabbing role. This was only obviated by the settlement of the strike that eliminates the United Garment Workers as an anti-working class influence in New York City and Chicago.

The fight for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, as the recognized union in the men's clothing industry, will go on. It will be made, with other struggles, by those members whose arguments the officials seek to silence with guns and blackjacks.

These officials of "The Amalgamated," who belly-crawl before those who refuse to make the fight inside the A. F. of L., thus expose themselves as hostile to the best interests of the union. Let the membership understand this and then act accordingly.

AUSTRIAN YOUNG WORKERS DELEGATES LEAVE RUSSIA AFTER ONE MONTH'S STAY

LENINGRAD, (Tass) (By Mail)—The delegation of Austrian young workers having left here for Vienna has issued a long declaration saying that it has been for about one month in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and visited factories, workshops, schools, "houses of rest for workers," "houses for children," clubs and prisons. After a detailed investigation, the delegation came to the unanimous conclusion that the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is a real proletarian state where the laboring masses keep power firmly in their own hands.

The delegation further remarked: "We, young workmen from the reactionary and capitalistic Austria, were surprised at the great social achievement in your country protecting interests of the working class.

"Proletarians of other countries must know that the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is a rampart of the working class of the whole world. After our visit, we feel it as our duty to declare to all workers of the world: 'Extend your brotherly hands to the proletarians of the the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.'"

Red International Sends Greetings to Shanghai Strikers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, Nov. 20—The Executive Bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions has sent the following telegram to the Shanghai Trade Union Council:

"The Executive Committee of the Red International Labor Union welcomes the recommencement of the activity of the Shanghai Trade Union Council. Its struggle against world imperialism is one of the most heroic pages in the history of the international proletariat. The Chinese proletariat is faced with a long and difficult struggle against foreign imperialism and against the national counter-revolution. We are however, convinced that the final victory will be won by the working class of your country. The greetings of the revolutionary workers of all countries to the heroic proletariat of Shanghai!"

CHICAGO LABOR TO HEAR COAL MINERS' STORY

Hold Mass Meeting at Northwest Hall

Instead of the short struggle that was expected, it now appears that the anthracite strike will develop into a long and very bitter struggle. At the beginning of the strike, it was believed by all, including the striking miners, that the strike was just a temporary stoppage of work to permit the operators to get rid of the large stocks of coal the miners had dug.

Open Mines.

However, with the signal given by the Wall Street Journal to begin opening the mines, instead of the peaceful wait, it now appears that the miners will be drawn into direct struggles. The demand to take the maintenance men out of the mines is spreading among the men, and the reactionary officials are becoming uneasy about it.

The anthracite fields have been 100 per cent organized for some time and this is a menace to the operators, who see the growing militancy of the miners and fear that the officials of the union, who are friendly to the operators will be removed and real militant leaders will be put in their places. The coal operators know that with the men so well organized, they cannot lower the standard of living of the miners and are therefore attempting to destroy the morale of the strikers and make them leave the union.

Toohey to Speak.

Pat H. Toohey, youthful leader of the striking miners, who will speak Tuesday Nov. 24, at Northwest Hall, corner North and Western Aves., at 8 p. m., will tell us of these struggles of the miners; Alex Reid, secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee, who together with Toohey, served a prison sentence for their activities in the strike, will also speak.

Wm. F. Dunne, whose articles are now appearing in The DAILY WORKER on the conditions in the strike zone will give first hand information of the struggle of the miners. He is coming straight from the strike zone with fresh news of the struggle.

The meeting is being held under the auspices of the Progressive Miners' Committee. Admission is free.

Court Martial Fails to Force Retraction of Coercion Charges

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The attempts of the judge advocate in the court-martial of Col. William Mitchell to force Mrs. Zachary Lansdowne, widow of the late commander of the Shenandoah, to change her testimony as to the attempts made by Col. Foley to induce her to testify falsely before the board that carried on the whitewash investigation of the Shenandoah disaster, failed.

Instead of retracting her statement, that Foley had tried to influence her, she showed that he had called at her home a number of times and tried to force her to change her opinions. The judge advocate unable to shake her in her evidence, tried to confuse her by telling her that the chief of investigations had a right to visit and hold a preliminary examination and that he was perfectly within the naval code in doing so.

Mrs. Landsowne brought out that the Shenandoah flight was for the purpose of advertising and was a political stunt on the part of the naval authorities.

Rail Union's Eastern Conference for Return to War-Time Standards

CLEVELAND, Nov. 19.—The plan for a wage increase recently adopted by western and southern associations of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and Order of Railway Conductors has been adopted by the general chairmen of the eastern association in joint conference here.

The plan will be referred to the membership of the two organizations and if approved will be submitted to the railroads.

St. Lawrence Project Under Way.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 20—Illinois has completed negotiations that will open the first link of the proposed Great Lakes to the gulf waterway when Leslie Small, director of the department of purchases and construction announced the state's decision to let contracts for Illinois river projects opening a pathway from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi river.

VOICE DEMAND OF FILIPINOS FOR FREEDOM

Want No "Moderation" of Imperialist Rule

Not to negotiate for a "moderation" of American imperialist rule in the Philippine Islands, but to voice the demand of the Filipino people for immediate and complete independence—that is the purpose for which Senator Sergio Osmena and the other members of the Filipino independence mission now in Washington, were sent to this country.

This fact was made public yesterday by the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, whose sections in Latin-America and the United States are lending full support tot he Philippine national liberation movement. The league calls attention to official decisions of the Philippine nationalist party and the Philippine legislature as well, adopted at the time when the mission was elected last August.

According to the instructions delivered to the mission at the time of their sailing, they must hold out against "any suggestion of compromises such as national autonomy, home rule, or limited independence under American supervision." As a separate nation of 11,500,000 people, the Filipinos demand the right to govern themselves in their own way, without interference on the part of any imperialist power.

It is pointed out that altho the Philippine Islands was granted autonomy some nine years ago, this has not prevented Governor-General Wood from systematically opposing every act of the Philippine legislature calculated to safeguard the control of Philippine affairs by the Filipinos themselves. He has been an unrelenting foe of the Philippine National bank and of every other institution which sought to free the people from the domination of Wall Street interests.

"If nothing else is acomplished by the visit of Senator Osmena's mission," declares the bulletin of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, "it will serve to attract world-wide attention to the unprecedented outrages committed by General Wood's colonial administration. Nor is General Wood alone responsible. He was appointed by President Coolidge, who has turned a deaf ear to every protest of the Filipino people demanding his recall. Obviously then, the matter will not be settled by the removal of a governor-general, but only by immediate and complete independence for the Philippines from American (Wall Street) rule."

CZECHOSLOVAK WORKERS' DELEGATION CONDEMN REACTIONARY MENSHEVIKS IMPRISONED IN GEORGIAN JAIL

TIFLIS—(By Mail.)—The Czechoslovak workers' delegation that is in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics visited the prison in Tiflis where they spoke with the menshevist leader, Prince Andronikoschvili, and with other prisoners for over eight hours.

The members of the delegation inquired in particular about the social past of the prisoners. They discovered that the majority were or had been aristocratic officers. The delegates declared that the treatment in the prison left nothing to be desired and in this the prisoners agreed.

On the same day the delegates had a discussion with one time menshevik workers who are now working hand in hand with the Soviet government.

Kuprashevili, the oldest member of the Georgian social democracy, greeted the delegation in the name of the ex-mensheviks and declared that 11,000 one time mensheviks, had since discovered their error and were now working hand in hand with the rest of the working class for the national and cultural reconstruction of Soviet Georgia.

Beat Reactionaries.

The social democrat, Bachmann, declared in the name of the Czechish delegation that after conversations with the members of the "menshevist committee" now in Tiflis prison, the delegation had come to the conclusion that the Georgian social democracy no longer had the right to call itself a workers' party. The opinions of Andronikoschvili are no different from the opinions held by the blackest reactionaries in any of the European countries.

The one time chairman of the so-called "menshevist labor commission" Dasmaschvili, requested the delegation to inform the Georgian emigrants in Prague that the Georgian working class did not stand in need of their assistance, and that the less the European bourgeoisie talked of Georgia, the better it would be for Georgia and the Georgian working class. Those Georgian emigrants who wish to go the way of Marx should return to Georgia and help us with the work of reconstruction. Those emigrants however, who are striving for an intervention against Soviet Georgia, will meet the former mensheviks in the ranks of the Red Army.

Sulakwadidse, who arrived in Georgia 6 months ago to perform illegal work for the mensheviks and who after seeing the real situation in Georgia, broke with the mensheviks, spoke to the delegation in the same tone.

Condemn Mensheviks.

The social democrat, Wunderlich, made the following answer: "We are social democrats, but we want nothing to do with such people as we met today in Tiflis prison, nor with their friends in Europe. During our stay in Soviet Georgia and in Soviet Russia we have recognized that a great work of socialist reconstruction has been begun, that here the working class feels that it is the master of its destinities, the captain of its state. Your work is for the benefit of the international working class."

Fight for Miners' Best Interests

to paying for all work according to the well-established rules of the contract, is to let the grievances slide. Persisted in this means almost the complete abrogation of all except the major provisions and even these quite often suffer at the hands of committeemen who are afraid of their jobs, or who have a keen desire for the better jobs that are handed out to committeemen who are more alive to the interest of the boss than of the miners.

Work for Nothing.

Mine costs can be lowered most easily by getting work done for nothing which the agreement specifies shall be paid for. "Dead work," (mining which producese no coal but which is necessary to reach the vein) "timbering," etc. come under this head.

Most of the union officials are averse to disputes with the operators. Committeemen who always are fighting a large number of grievances will find sooner or later that they get little support from the higher officials.

A "troublemaker" is unpopular with both the union officials and the operators' representatives. He may be popular with the miners but the word is spread quietly that he is not a good man to support and unless the committeeman is of unusual ability he finds himself facing union officials and operators alone.

This is a general description of the process by which "reds" are handled in the anthracite but a specific instance will be additionally enlightening. The story was told me by a miner whose name will not be given for obvious reasons. It is in his own words with the exception of the justifiable and extremely original profanity:

A True Story.

"I was elected on the committee for the Blank colliery and the first meeting we had I saw that the miners wasn't getting paid for rock, or iron or timbering. I took the contract and showed where all this had to be paid for and I even made the company pay for back work. Every meeting we had a big bunch of grievances and as soon as the miners found out we was making the company pay they brought in every case.

"We was getting along fine but pretty soon I began to get poor places to work in while the other committeemen got the best places in the mine. They never backed me up much unless I made 'em.

"Then one day the district office called up and wanted our committee to inspect buttons at another mine, to cut down expenses, they said. I had my own mine to tend to and this meant getting down an hour or two earlier and seeing that everybody in the other mine had their due buttons before we went to our own work.

Tells Fakers to Do Some Work.

"I told the officials that if they wanted to cut down expenses they could get up in the morning themselves and that I wasn't going to save money for a bunch of crooks.

"The next day I got a telephone call to be at the hall at seven o'clock. I went down and here was the district president, the vice president and the auditor.

"They asked me what I meant by calling them 'crooks' and I took the quarterly report and showed where they had got $900 wages—$10 a day—for three months and then from $1,100 to $1,300 for expenses. The auditor had done the best of all. He had an expense bill for $1,440 for three months.

"None of them ever went out of town except maybe over to Shenandoah (about an hour's ride) but they charged up expense just the same.

"The president said I ought to be expelled from the union for questioning the honesty of the officials. They took the case up with the union and then they found that an I. W. W. organizer had stayed at my house one night and they claimed that I was trying to split the union but the local didn't expel me.

Rubbing It In.

"Since then I only land a job in the worst places in the worst mines and never for very long."

There is a long list of cases similar to the one described. They vary only in detail.

The operators are powerful, the union officials do not fight for "radicals" who are victimized by the blacklist, the bulk of the miners do not want to risk incurring the same kind of descrimination but nevertheless there is an under-current of unrest that crops up at unexpected times and causes much worry on the part of the officials.

Such an incident occurred a night or two ago on an interurban car. Strembo, vice president of the district for 17 years, since 1908 to be exact, was on the car, as were two young miners.

Strembo is a Hungarian, a church member and is known as the "boss" of a large bloc of Hungarian and Slav miners. He is one of the most enthusiastic "red-baiters" in the valley.

He was puffing his pipe complacently when one of the young miners said in broken English:

"Mr. Strembo, you smoke pipe but maybe some striking miner ain't got tobacco to smoke in pipe. You get paid wages right along, don't you?

Strembo Moves.

Strembo looked at him angrily but then got up and moved to the back of the car. When the two miners left the car at the next stop the conductor, evidently trying to curry favor with Strembo, said:

"Those two young fellers don't belong to the church, do they?"

"Church hell!" said the outraged Strembo, "they probably come from some Communist meeting."

It seems that both the operators and the reactionary union officialdom have the same idea, a correct one by the way, that a "red" is a person who thinks first of all of the interests of the miners.

JAIL SENTENCE FAILS TO CRACK JERSEY STRIKE

Albert Weisbord Guilty of Walking on Street

PASSAIC, N. J., Nov. 20.—In an outrageous hearing Judge Miles of the county court of North Bergen, New Jersey, found Albert Weisbord of the United Front Committee of Textile Workers guilty of a frame-up charge of disorderly conduct and sentenced him to ten days in the county jail.

This sentence came after the police officer had been compelled to admit that Weisbord had used no abusive language, that he was not speaking to anyone, that no crowd had collected, that there were very few people up and down the street with a sign telling of the Hillcrest Silk Mill strike. Weisbord had refused to stop walking up and down that street, that was all.

The court was very bitter. He refused to impose any fine, but wanting to break the strike that had been the center of discussion in Hudson county for over three weeks, was determined to send the leader of the strikers to jail and imposed the ten day sentence on Weisbord.

The strikers quickly raised over a hundred dollars among themselves and paid the preliminary expenses for the bond and Weisbord was released on one thousand dollar bond while the case was appealed.

The International Labor Defense, New York section, has given full aid to the strikers and will push these cases to a final decision.

The United Front Committee of Textile Workers are holding a big mass meeting for the support of the strikers and to protest the arrests and jail sentence. Efforts are being made to make this meeting a united front demonstration by getting speakers from the United Textile Workers, the Associated Silk Workers, the International Labor Defense, and the United Front Committee of Textile Workers.

Danish Prince Coming to U. S. to Amuse Cream-Puff Gentry

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 20.—Prince Aage of Denmark, who has served in the French foreign legion (the high-sounding title for mercenary) and has aided French imperialism in the war against the liberty-loving Riffians, is planning to leave for America after a brief stay in the bright lights of Paris. The prince is parading around Paris telling of his "adventures" with the "fierce" Riffians. He intends to speak before the cream-puff gentry in America on his "warring" against the Riffs.

RUSSIAN WORKERS GREET CHINESE GENERAL HU HAN-MIN IN MOSCOW

MOSCOW—(Tass)—(By Mail)—General Hu Han-Min, general secretary of the Canton government, Mr. Li Liuan-Fang, secretary of the war council, Mr. Tsi Ho-Jung, and two students of the military academy at Whampao arrived to Moscow to study the economic and political situation in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. The party was given a rousing reception at the station, where representatives of the people's commissariat of foreign affairs, revolutionary war council, Comintern, Russian Communist Party, Russian Communist Youth Union, public organizations and workers were present.

Katayama Greets General.

Sen Katayama and other speakers greeted General Hu Han-Min as a strong fighter for the revolution and a collaborator of Sun Yat-Sen. They pointed out to a spiritual relationship between Lenin and Sun Yat-Sen and called for a joint struggle for the restoration of a full political and economic independence of the Chinese people.

General Hu Han-Min, in his responding speech which was frequently interrupted by applause, spoke of the struggle carried on by China with the assistance of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

Later in the day, General Hu Han-Min was received by Karakhan.

Denounces Press Fable.

In a conversation with a "Tass" correspondent, General Hu Han-Min declared that the information of Peking & Tientsin Times alleging that he was lured to the Soviet vessel and sent away to the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is a fantastic lie from begining to end. The warm reception accorded to him in Vladivostok and other cities on his way thru Siberia shows deep sympathy of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics people towards the Canton government. General Hu Han-Min further stated that the present political situation in Canton is quite stable and that the Kuomintang has power fully and firmly in its hands. There should be no anxiety for the fate of Canton in connection with Chen Chuin-Min's action supported by Chang Tso-Lin.

"We fought"—said General Hu Han-Min—"and defeated Chen Chuin-Min when its army consisted of 30,000 men. Now he has no more than 10,000 and we are sure of the victory."

With regard to the tariff conference, General Hu Han-Min said that it will not give any favorable results to China, but will serve as a practical lesson to those who still believe in the possibility of a peaceful settlement of the outstanding questions between the Chinese people and the imperialists.

Pleased With Russia.

As to his impressions in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, General Hu Han-Min said that as yet he has seen little of the vast nation but that he is deeply impressed by the close cooperation between the government, Communist Party and the people in the reconstruction of the country.

General Hu Han-Min intends to stay in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics for a few months.

with him in principle because they can foresee the day when their own hold on the masses will become so weak that they must grasp at the straw of fascist dictatorship before they drown in the sea of a workers' and farmers' revolution.

CHANG-TSO-LIN, the military tuchun of Manchuria and tool of British and American imperialism, is having tough luck. He is now the only outstanding Chinese general who is not at least making a bluff at fighting for the unity of his country. Chang's troops are rebelling against him and going over to General Feng, who is a follower of the diplomacy of Soviet Russia. Chang has the largest army but most of them are suffering from an uncontrollable itch to cut the tuchun's pigtail right off from the hips.

CHANG'S troops recently extinguished 3,000 white guard Russian soldiers who have been doing general dirty work in China since the workers and peasants overthrew the czar's government. Speaking quite plainly the white guards were killed. Capitalist papers would say they were murdered. The result is the same no matter how it is told. On the, whole China is coming along nicely. We learn from the New York Times correspondent that the "Red forces" are making great progress in South China. M. Karakhan, the Soviet ambassador to Peking, on his departure from Moscow to his post declared the sympathies of the Chinese masses were with Feng, whose armies are disciplined and devoid of dissension. This is good for China.

GENERAL Sarrail, French governor of Syria who was recently recalled after butchering the natives in the interests of "civilization," accused the British government of stirring up trouble in the French protectorate. Isn't this inconceivable, after the pretty compliments exchanged between Briand and Chamberlain at Locarno while they were hatching the so-called peace pact? Yet, this is how it is. And when we tell our readers that "peace pacts" between capitalist nations are really war pacts, many of them doubt our sanity. They think we are too prejudiced. But, while Briand and Chamberlain were framing up on Soviet Russia at Locarno, British agents were making trouble for France in Syria and French agents were doing the same for Britain in Mosul. Is peace possible under capitalism? Can a flea-bitten cur help scratching himself?

WHEN a radical is arrested in "these United States" the papers pay particular attention to his mustache and to his accent. If the former is turned up or sticks out on the sides like that of a French chiropractor, the cast of the facial foliage is held up as proof that the mental furniture of the defendant is as undesirable to a red-blooded American as the cut of his jib. If his accent differs from that of a Kentucky manufacturer of white mule, this is given as added reason why its owner should be deported. Britain has learned many of our tricks it seems. Most of our patriots would be offended if they knew that a man was hustled out of the London court where the British Communist leaders are being tried because he said the trial was a farce and said it with an American accent.

AS THESE lines are written, Martin Durkin has not been captured. Since the man hunt started Durkin has done everything except scratch a match on Chief Collin's pants. Durkin who evidently likes thrills is getting tired of playing hide and seek with a lot of blind policemen. Why the city and federal officers do not engage William J. Burns to catch Durkin is beyond our understanding. It was Burns who discovered the perpetrators of the Wall Street bomb explosion, 99 times. The last time he promised to arrest the culprit inside of forty-eight hours, was two days before he left the department of justice with his superior oil can Harry Daugherty. By all means let us have Burns and a little more innocent amusement.

CHAS. EDWARD RUSSEL, member of the Root expedition to throw mud at Soviet Russia, erstwhile defender of Philippine independence, renegade socialist and a few other things, is now on the payroll of the Irish republicans in the United States. For a consideration, Russell is willing to tilt a lance at any enemy. Has the Irish republican movement in the United States fallen so low that it must utilize a discredited hack like Russel? But this much can be said, for Russell: at some time in his life he raised his voice against the robbers of the working class in the United States. There were thousands of others in the camp of the Irish nationalists who distuinguished themselves only as the Simon Legrees of American capitalism. Irish radicals are strong in favor of driving the last vestige of British imperialism out of Ireland but they have no desire to be used as puppets by renegade socialists, papal tools and American capitalists.

RENTS GO UP FOR WORKERS IN NEW YORK

Segregation of Negro Race Effective

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—(FP)—Believing that the rent laws that halted indiscriminate rent boosting for the last five years will not be renewed by the state legislature when they expire next February landlords have commenced already to raise their charges and in no place more so than in the Negro district of Harlem, the up town part of Manhattan Island.

Frank Crosswaith, executive secretary of the trade union committee for organizing Negro workers gave the Federated Press an example from his own family, where his aunt had her rent raised $17 a month.

Unofficial Segregation.

The unofficial segregation that confines the Negroes to certain quarters of the city makes them that much more the victims of the landlords. They cannot escape as can white workers and take their pick of locations.

The rent hearings have come to an end with nearly twenty witnesses from tenants organizations taking the floor and telling of the crowding at high prices to which they are subjected.

Little of the new housing comes within the rental possibilities of the ordinary workers and these are condemned to take the older and more unsanitary tenement dwellings.

Such new cheaper rental apartment homes that have been built in the Long Island section of the city are to a large extent of the firetrap variety, insurance experts admitted.

Coolidge's Accumulating Reasons

President Coolidge, speaking before the annual dinner of the New York state association of commerce, not merely reiterated his adherence to the world court of international justice, but he repeated precisely what THE DAILY WORKER has contended from the first. He pointed out that the rapid expansion of American financial interests abroad constitute "accumulating reasons for our adherence to the permanent court of international justice."

This observation, tho brief, is illuminating. It is a suggestion of what will be the burden of the message to congress two weeks hence. It means a complete about-face from the platform upon which the late Harding came into office in1920. Within the short space of five years finance-capital has completely triumphed over the industrialist policy of isolation. The isolationists under the leadership of Senator Borah are directly faced with the alternative of yielding or fighting. There can be no compromise on this question.

Another part of Coolidge's speech bears out Borah's charges that the world court is the back door to the league of nations:

> What we have been able to do in . . . relation to the different states of our union we ought to encourage and support in its proper application in relation to the different nations of the world.

If that means anything other than endorsement of the league of nations we would like to hear the interpretation.

The aftermath of Locarno, the Italian debt settlement, the colonial wars in Morocco and Syria, the British threat to Turkey, the ending of the oil armistice in the Middle East, are events that impel the United States at break-neck speed into the seething cauldron of the old world.

For the workers of the United States this is a menacing threat. It means that the wage workers of this country, after creating the enormous power of the capitalist class by piling mountain high the surplus values that enrich that class, will be expected to shoulder arms and fight in the wars of imperialism in order that the yoke of Wall Street may be placed upon the workers of the rest of the world. It means, furthermore, that the leadership of American labor must devote its attention to European affairs and be able correctly to estimate the trend of events.

Such a reorientation is too much to expect from the fossilized leadership of the working class. If they devote any time to European matters it will be simply to repeat the monotonous shibboleths of their capitalist masters. In the coming world conflicts American labor, in order to resist the imperialist conspiracies, must follow the leadership of the revolutionary vanguard of the working class—the Communists.

An Honest Foe Turns Friend

THE DAILY WORKER has secured a copy of the report handed in to the 17th general convention of the Industrial Workers of the World by Gordon Cascaden, in which he reverses his stand of 1921 against the Red International of Labor Unions and urges that the I. W. W. affiliate.

The convention has ignored Cascaden's communication, the delegates apparently feeling that they can play the ostrich and abolish facts by refusing to look at them. But the membership of the I. W. W., and world labor generally will remember that the whole opposition among the I. W. W. to Soviet Russia and the Red International was built upon Cascaden's hostile report in 1921, when he was a delegate to the first congress of the R. I. L. U. from the Lumber Workers' Industrial Union of Canada, a I. W. W. union in legal guise.

At the congress the I. W. W. had another delegate, known variously as George Williams or H. Wilson, who tied up with the anarchist international of Berlin. Williams was extremely vicious against the R. I. L. U. and used Cascaden's antagonistic report as a basis of his own more unprincipled report which has constituted the foundation of the whole structure of slander and misrepresentation built up by the anarchists in the I. W. W. against Soviet Russia and the Red International of Labor Unions.

Williams is now in decidedly bad standing in the I. W. W., he having proven as dishonest toward it as toward the Red International. No one can impugn Cascaden on this score. A member of the I. W. W. who joined in 1906, he is still a member, honest and loyal. To those who are curious or suspicious, he says at the end of his report: "I am not now a member and am not planning to become a member of any political party."

Cascaden's report of 1921 was the first attack against the Red International in the English language and in the western world. It went into all lands. So his present report, which gives his reason for his change of positions, should also go everywhere, especially among I. W. W. In his own words he says to them:

> "To you, fellow workers, I appeal; for on my report on the first congress of the Red International of Labor Unions (entitled 'Shall Unionism Die?') a number of members of the I. W. W. made their decision regarding Soviet Russia."

The Red International Affiliation Committee has announced that it will make the full report available to all who are interested.

"Big Business—Right or Wrong!" is the White House slogan, emphasized in Cal Coolidge's New York speech Thursday night. That has always been the rallying cry of organized dollars. Coolidge only helps give it a little more publicity.

Who is responsible for the sluggings of members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America? The membership ought to find out and place the blame where it belongs.

Mussolini is grabbing at every straw in sight to save himself. But straws are not sufficient to save a drowning man. Fascism will go down in spite of all attempts to keep afloat.

By William F. Dunne

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Representative Loring M. Black Jr. of New York accompanied by a committee representing the International Association of Machinists, called upon Secretary Wilbur today to protest against the awarding of any contract to Chinese shipbuilding companies for the construction of propelling machinery for the SIX CHINESE RIVER GUNBOATS AUTHORIZED BY CONGRESS LAST WINTER. (Special dispatch to the New York Times).

HOW many people know that the American government is building specially constructed gunboats for service in Chinese revers?

The above dispatch is the usual method by which such information is conveyed to the American masses and the secrecy which surrounds such plans, until some unfortunate occurrence makes them public, is an indication that the "open door" policy hitherto followed in China is undergoing some changes.

The attitude of the officialdom of the International Association of Machinists, whose sole objection to the plan for a gunboat flotilla in Chinese rivers, is based on the awarding of the work to Chinese firms, is quite in keeping with the general alignment of the A. F. of L. labor aristocracy with American imperialism.

THESE gunboats are to cost $700,000 apiece—a total of $4,200,000 for this form of "protection of American interests" alone. That Chinese workers are to build the machinery for their own destruction is doubtless a typical example of the exquisite humor of American imperialism.

The United States has played a clever game in China. Had the open door policy been administered as cleverly as it was designed, the United States would today be not only western nation which could not be charged with shedding the blood of the Chinese people. But the mailed hand beneath the velvet glove has made itself felt from time to time as in the Boxer troubles and the recent Shanghai strike. Many Chinese intellectuals and business men, however, are inclined to overlook these incidents and hail the United States as a sincere friend.

BUT the workers, under the leadership of the Kuomingtang, the party of Chinese liberation, are not so enthusiatic—or forgiving. They are the ones who have suffered most from imperialism of all the various brands and with their unions born of the recent struggles they form the leading section of the movement which is welding China into a solid bloc against all imperialist oppressors. The workers have had experience with the brutal methods of Yankee bosses in railway construction work and elsewhere. They cannot be fooled quite so easily as the intellectual and merchant class whose desire is for immediate peace even tho it means less freedom for the masses.

AMERICAN imperialism is not going to be content with penetration of Chinese seaports. It is driving for the rich interior of China and this can mean nothing but conflict with the Chinese workers and peasants.

Hence the six new river gunboats.

The United States possesses no extra-territoriality rights in China and, according to its official spokesmen, desires none. On the contrary, American imperialism is anxious that all extra-territoriality rights held by Great Britain, Japan and France be abolished. It is this seeming advocacy of the integrity of the Chinese nation and people which makes America appear as their friend.

BUT a nation which builds men-of-war specially adapted to the navigation of Chinese rivers and which by this means can establish floating fortresses in the heart of China, or rather in its arteries, is creating bases—economic and military—whose very mobility makes them a greater menace to the Chinese and the Chinese liberation movement than the fixed bases of the other imperialist powers.

These gunboats can range the Chinese rivers at will, lay waste whole cites, demoralize Chinese traffic and levy tribute more effectively than the Chinese pirates who terrorized travellers and destroyed Chinese shipping for years. It could not be otherwise for the interests of American imperialism are directly in conflict with those of the Chinese masses.

WE come now again to the role of American labor as played by the committee from the International Association of Machinists. The American Federation of Labor recently sent a letter to President Coolidge calling attention to the disturbances in China and urging representation in an international conference for "labor." Green cited this letter at the Atlantic City convention as proof of the friendliness of American labor officialdom to the Chinese liberation movement.

We were skeptical about these pretensions at the time and the action of the machinists' committee in demanding the sacred right to build all propelling equipment for the floating fortresses of American imperialism in China without making any protest whatever against the murderous purposes for which they are to be employed, is evidence that the A. F. of L. protest was merely a paper one and will remain so while the A. F. of L. and its affiliated unions continue to follow the flag of Wall Street.

SAID the spokesman of the Machinists committee:

> We. . . . contend that these engines should not be built in China, even on grounds of economy, when American machinists are competent to perform the work. If economy warrants the giving of such work to cheap Asiatic labor, then it would seem foolish for us to exclude oriental labor from admission to the United States.

This is the way in which trade unionists, under the influence of imperialism's labor agents, "protest" against the contemplated invasion of the Chinese interior by an American batlefleet.

The most hopeful sign in this situation is the fact that Chinese workers are able to construct and install such intricate machinery as that required to propel gunboats. When they begin to build such machinery for the protection of Chinese instead of American interests—and the national liberation movement is evidence that this development is taking place—the Chinese revolution will be well on its way.

In the meantime the demand for the withdrawal of all troops and gunboats from China be given the widest popular support.

I. L. G. W. U. JOINT BOARD PROTESTS GITLOW JAILING

N. Y. Garment Workers Demand Release

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—The following is part of a resolution adopted at the last meeting of the New York joint board of the Cloak, Skirt, Dress and Reefer Makers' Unions of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, protesting against the decision of the United States supreme court which sends Benjamin Gitlow back to Sing Sing and calls upon Governor Alfred Smith of the state of New York to free Gitlow:

"Resolved, That we protest against and condemn the action of the United States supreme court; urge the repeal of the criminal-anarchy law, for which end we will work; record ourselves as supporting the International Labor Defence in fighting this case, and call upon all labor bodies and working class organizations to line up soldily with us, and

Free Gitlow

"Be it further resolved, that we urge the governor of the state of New York to immediately free the defendant."

Bronx Workers Hold Daily Worker Party

By SYLVAN A. POLLACK.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 19.—A highly successful DAILY WORKER rescue party was held at Workers' Hall, 1347 Boston Road, the Bronx, jointly by all the Bronx branches of the Workers (Communist) Party and the Young Workers (Communist) League.

Comrade Frank Surtshin, the chairman, introduced J. O. Bentall, who made a short speech in which he pointed out and stressed the importance of The DAILY WORKER, to the American Communist movement, how joyfully we helped in its birth almost two years ago, and how just as important it is to help keep it alive in this crucial time. A liberal response of bills followed this plea.

The musical program included violin selections by A. Sakell: Josephine Jenena, pianist; and J. Smith, who sang folk songs.

A substantial amount of money was raised for The DAILY WORKER, the exact amount not being known at this writing. $10.65 was added to the total by the spirited auctioning of a chocolate layer cake. After the short program and the auctioning of the cake, dancing lasted until a late hour.

When that argument begins at lunch time in your shop tomorrow—show them what the DAILY WORKER says about it.

Illinois Commerce Commission Assists Gas Company Merger

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 20.—One of the biggest utility mergers in Illinois in many years was approved by the state commerce commission when the commission authorized the consolidation of the Western United Gas and Electric company, the Southern Illinois Gas company and the Fox River Electric Co.

The order authorizes the new company acquire all stocks and bonds of the Aurora-Elgin and Fox River Electric Co., and the Coal Products Manufacturing Co. The order also authorizes the new company to acquire all power and light properties of the Elgin and Fox River Co.

The Western United Gas and Electric Co. is a Chicago concern which has held financial control of the properties involved.

Form International Labor Defense Local in Yorkville, Ohio

(By Worker Correspondent)

YORKVILLE, Nov. 20—Special interest was shown by the workers here at a meeting addressed by William J. White on the subject of the Bellaire, O. fight for free speech. A branch of the International Labor Defense was formed, following White's talk on what this organization has accomplished.

This town knows what a "free speech" fight means as it is the home of John Buska, who has been out on bail a year, following his arrest for distributing Communist literature.

Refuse to Reinstate

Despite the efforts made by politicians and business men of the Englewood district to have Captain Michael Lee reinstated, Mayor Dever upheld the suspension of Lee which had been decided upon by the chief of police in an attempt to whitewash the department for the escape of Martin Durkin.

Among those who demand the reinstatement of the police captain that is responsible for the escape of the gunman is the Englewood Business Men's Association, which a year ago called the arrest of many Workers (Communist) Party speakers and tried to bar working class speakers from the streets in Englewood. Captain Lee was the servile tool of the business men and did all he could to follow the dictates of the Englewood Babbits.

Catch Some Small Fry.

DANVILLE, Ill., Nov. 22.—Hector R. Leboef and Henry E. Granger, drug store owners, Kankakee, Ill., were arraigned here before United States Commissioner Ralph Jinkins, on charge of selling medicinal whisky without proper authorization.

Developing Worker Correspondents.

Only Workers' Correspondents can give The DAILY WORKER a real mass character. The more such correspodnents the more effective our paper and every live wire should help reach this goal.

To aid in this work the Chicago Workers Correspondents' group is being organized. Those participating will become part of The DAILY WORKER staff and every militant should avail themselves of such opportunity.

Tonight the Chicago Workers' Correspondents' Group meets at 8 p. m. at The DAILY WORKER office, 1113 W. Washington Blvd. No fee is charged. Every live wire is invited. It will be a working group writing stories immediately for our daily with the guidance of teachers who are assigned.

Workers' Correspondent Course Starts on Monday

NEW YORK, Nov. 20—Joseph Freeman, one of the most capable proletarian journalists, will give a course in "Workers' Correspondence," at the Workers' School beginning next Monday evening at 9 p. m.

The course is designed to meet the needs of workers in unions, in the shops, and in the party, along journalistic lines. The problems of the publicity for a strike, the writing up of a left wing fight, the editing of factory, shop and wall newspapers, the writing of articles which will be of aid in an organization campaign, publicity for meetings, celebrations, etc., of the writing up of such meetings, will be considered. Each type of worker registering will be led to specialize in the problems of his own shop industry or organization. The editing of trade union journals will also be studied.

Every shop nucleus in the New York District should have at least one member in this course, as should every union and party unit. In addition, all individuals who are interested in participating in the newspaper work of their organization, should register at once. The fee for the course is $2.50 for three months.

Other Courses Beginning Monday.

Many other interesting courses are to begin on Monday evening. Of vital importance to all workers who would take an active part in the American class struggle are two courses in the "History of the American Working Class" and in "American Economic and Political History" to be given by Anton Bimba and Alexander Trachtenberg respectively.

Russian Branch Reorganized.

The Chicago Russian branch of the Workers Party was completely reorganized at the last meeting of the branch held Thursday night. Every member of the branch is now a member of some shop or street nuclei. A collection was taken up for The DAILY WORKER which amounted to $20.

The branch was disbanded after a city bureau for the Russian nuclei had been elected to continue the work in the Russian colony.

DETROIT WORKERS WILL HEAR PAT TOOHEY ON COAL STRIKE MONDAY

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 20.—The workers of Detroit are urged to attend the mass meeting which is being arranged for Monday evening, at the House of the Masses, 2646 St. Aubin, Nov. 23, at 8 o'clock, at which Pat H. Toohey, youthful leader of the anthracite coaldiggers will speak on the present strike of the coal miners.

Philadelphia Notes.

A special DAILY WORKER committee was chosen at the last meeting of the District No. 3 executive.

At its first meeting a campaign for 1,000 new subscribers was planned. To realize it, a conference of representatives from all street and shop nuclei, and trade union fractions has been called.

The DAILY WORKER committee is also planning special affairs for every city in the district, the admission charge to include a monthly sub to the DAILY WORKER—with machinery being organized to follow up all subscribers for longer term subs. Prizes will be awarded to individuals securing the most subscriptions.

N. Y. Daily Worker Builders Postpone Hike to December 6

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—The hike of The DAILY WORKER Builders' Club of New York which was to have taken place in Jamaica Woods on Sunday, Nov. 29, has been postponed to Sunday, Dec. 6, in honor of the Junior section of the Young Workers League which is to hold its convention on the 29th.

This postponement is made, not only because a hike without the Juniors would be incomplete, but also because the Juniors are a vital part of our movement in which all party members should be interested. Every DAILY WORKER Builder should visit the convention of the New York Juniors on November 29th.

Young Workers League In Dist. No. 6 Arranges Education Week Protests

CLEVELAND, Nov. 20.—District Six of the Young Workers League has arranged three mass meetings during so-called "Education Week." They will be held in the following cities:

Conneaut, O.—Saturday, November 21, 8 p. m., at Workers' Hall, 943 Broad St. Speaker: Martin Gordon.

Youngstown, Ohio—Sunday, November 22, at 8 p. m., at Ukrainian Hall, 525 W. Rayen Ave. Speakers: Herbert Benjamin, Martin Gordon. This meeting is held in conjunction with the celebration of the 8th anniversary of the Russian revolution, which had been postponed.

Cleveland, O., Defense Meeting Sunday Night

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 20.—Sunday night, Nov. 22, at 7:30 o'clock, a mass meeting for Labor Defense will be held at Moose Temple, 1000 Walnut street. Comrade F. G. Biedenkapp will speak on "Labor Conditions Under Capitalist Injunctions and the Criminal Syndicalist Laws."

Pittsburgh Nucleus No. 5 to Hold Meet Saturday

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 20.—A meeting of shop nucleus No. 5 is being called for Saturday evening, Nov. 21, at 7 o'clock sharp in room 5 of the district 5 headquarters.

Every member of the nucleus must attend this important meeting and he must be on time.

Karl Marx Club Festival.

On Sunday, Nov. 22, a festival given by the Karl Marx Scandinavian club will be held at the Workers' Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Boulevard. It starts at 4:30 p. m. with a program of music, singing, entertainment and refreshments, and winds up with a grand ball. Dancing begins at 8:30. Everyone is invited. Tickets are 50 cents in advance and 65 cents at the door.

WATCH THESE COLUMNS FOR NEWS OF MEETINGS AND AFFAIRS IN YOUR CITY

In line with the new policy of The DAILY WORKER for departmentalizing our news this section is set aside for notices of all party activities and meetings. Organizers are urged to send in announcements of meetings and affairs to take place. Please make them short and to the point as space is very limited. Party members and sympathizers are urged to watch this column for news of activities in their localities.

"The Most Orderly Strike We Have Ever Seen."

By NORMAN TALLENTIRE.

THE bankruptcy of the officialdom of the United Mine Workers of America can be best judged from first hand observation in the strike fields and from reading the columns of the enemy press. "This is the most orderly strike we have ever known," says a Scranton newspaper. This is symptomatic of the propaganda which all local papers are carrying. A news time in another paper states that "all churches, catholic and protestant offered a prayer for curtailment of the strike in Landsford and Coaldale yesterday."

While this is the attitude of the bosses' press, unthinking workers might expect the officials of a labor union to present a different viewpoint, a militant defense of the workers and of the workers' organization. The very reverse, however, is the case, in fact, the officials of the miners themselves in every public speech or statement have worked overtime to prove that it is a "respectable strike" waged in the interests of "the whole community."

This was the key note of the speech of John L. Lewis and the lesser lights who appeared with him before the striking miners at Nanticoke. The meeting was called by the local scale committee drew some 5,000 moners into town so that three theaters were filled and a crowd on the streets listen to the speech by means of radio equipment as did those in the two lesser theaters.

IN line with the policy of the Lewis machine business men and priests were in the forefront at the meeting. After greetings by the mayor the first speaker was Rev. Father Curran of Wilkes-Barre who is credited with "settling" several strikes in this region. The father stated he had been on strike in 1869 and had worked for $1.45 per day. This information to the miners who are striking for an average of approximately $7.00 per day seems to cheer the audience considerably.

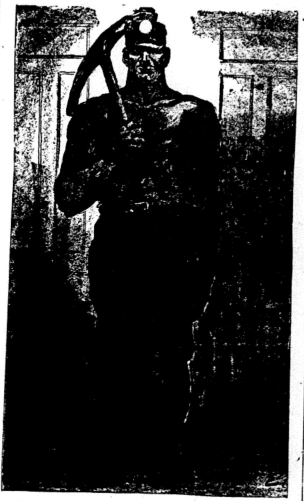
Kennedy and Murray, secretary and vice president of the U. M. W. of A. then speak. Murray creating a furore when in an argument in defense of the check-off he suddenly turned on the venerable father with the remark: "Why even the church has the check-off." At this sudden onslaught the father's temperature rose visibly first his face became red then purple and he appeared in danger of apoplexy almost, while Lewis stiffened into a rigid attention with his black looks of disapproval for his colleague who had made such a tactical blunder as to drag the question of church into the argument.

Lewis rising at 5:26 p. m. (many of the audience have been waiting for him since 11:30 a. m.) draws attention to the late hour and then proceeds with his speech in line with all his previous utterances, which constitutes an attempt to prove the "respectability" of this 100 per cent American strike.

Relating again the incidents leadink to the suspension of mining Lewis insists that the check-off must be the basis of any settlement and instead of basing his argument of an increase in wages upon the need of the toilers in the mines, seeks to prove by examples of the sale of coal how the mine owners can well afford to pay the increase in wages without any increase in the price of coal "to the public."

"THE PUBLIC" is always handled with the utmost care by the By mental hocus pocus the meeting of "greatest labor leader in the world." miners forgetting the needs of the miners seems to be turned into a meeting where only the interests of "the public" are discussed .

The poverty and misery of many miners, the long struggle, the incessant toil, the hazard and dangers of the industry, the need for safeguard and protection of miners, and for decent standards of living are ignored, while great care is taken to prove the "operators" are gouging the poor public and piling up millions in profit for themselves. But for the fact of these fabulous millions it appeared that the demands of the miners for safe working conditions and decent standards of living would fall to the ground.



Small wonder then that nothing was heard, of the real economic background of this fight. The mention of the class struggle would constitute an indecent interruption of such a decorus meeting. Consequently any action based upon real class lines is absolutely ignored. There is no hint that relief will be forthcoming for the strikers in distress, no call upon all the workers to come to the assistance of these strikers who are in the front line trenches is given by this "leader of labor." The maintenance men will continue to keep the mine properties in shape to open up new entries and new veins ready for the start of operations. Despite the fact that coal mined under these conditions will be sold by the operators during the "suspension." No suggestion of a general strike is permitted to enter in the discussion, altho such action has been demanded by local unions outside the strike region. After a speech of one hour in which Lewis has spared no effort to show his regard for the "public," he again (as in Shamokin) suddenly realized that "the hour grows unseemly" and thus brings his seemly homily to an end, and the meeting is dispersed.

THE striking miners gather in groups and seem to be dumbfounded by this kind of leadership. "When will the strike be over?" Will we win out?" "Will we get our full demands?" are remarks passed from one to the other. "He doesn't tell us anything about stopping shipment of coal," "Why don't he pull out the maintenance men?" "Why doesn't he call a strike in the soft coal fields?" These are the questions of the miners which remain unanswered and not by the slightest inference is any suspicion of class warfare suggested despite the constant arming of mine guards and the presence of increased numbers of state "cossacks" thruout the strike region.

Such suggestions would surely be frowned upon by the decent public, which must be treated very carefully, no matter at what hazard to the miners who are urged to continue the struggle under the present conditions with "faith in their leaders."

The first consideration in the conduct of this meeting and of the strike in the light of Lewis' speech appears to be not in the interest of the miners, but of the public. No protests are tolerated, no meeting can be held without official permits. The miners' questions remain unanswered as Lewis and his cohorts continue their "100% American strike."

AMAZED AT RUSSIAN PROGRESS

SVERDLOVSK, U. S. S. R. (By Mail).—The Urals group of the Czecho-Slovak workers' delegation, consiting of six social democrats, one national socialist, two non-party workers and two Communists, visited this section which is the largest industrial center of the Urals and expressed their amazement at the progress made by the workers in Soviet Russia, despite the interference of foreign powers.

"We, the delegates of the Czecho-Slovakian working class declare on the basis of our personal examination of all industrial branches and cultural institutions, that your state is acutally led and administered by the workers," read the official declaration of the Czecho-Slovak workers which was read to the Russian workers and peasants. "The energy given to the reconstruction of your industries is really wonderful. There are naturally various technical deficiencies, but these are the result of the war destruction suffered by your country. We declare openly that the standard of life here is higher than that in our country. We hold it to be our duty to make good as far as possible all the damage and injury done to your country by the Czechish legionnaires who were treacherously drawn into a war against you. We will join in the great work of consolidating and maintaining the international working class front."

Red International Message to I. W. W.

Speech of Harrison George to the 17th General Convention of the I. W. W. (Nov. 17)

FELLOW WORKERS: The Red International of Labor Union, comprising some 12,000,000 organized revolutionary workers, extends thru you to the membership of the Industrial Workers of the World, its fraternal greetings and good wishes for the best results of your deliberations.

You are gathered here at a time which marks a turning point in the history of the world labor movement. This is reflected not alone in the internal conditions of the I. W. W., but in the intense ferment going on in the world labor movement, arising from profound changes in capitalist society as a whole. No organization can set itself outside the current of these changes.

IMPERIALISM, the final and decadent stage of capitalism, is striking its fangs deeply into the vitals of the proletarian movement in a partial and temporary stabilization of its power to rule, using the most brutal and cunning weapons of naked force and international chicane.

Capitalist rule in Germany has been halted at the edge of revolution and "saved" for a time—at the expense of utter enslavement of the workers. In Poland, Esthonia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Roumania, Jugo-Slavia, Italy, Japan and other countries, the revolutionary workers' movement is drowned in blood. Fascist counter-revolution is openly arming to crush with violence the great strikes of British labor coming in the spring. India seethes under British rule. Great and savage wars are being waged by France against colonial peoples, while in China a gigantic upheaval for national liberation, led by the workers, threatens the foundations of imperialist exploitation of the Far East.

THE imperialism of the United States is perhaps the strongest and most cunning of all. Dominating world credit, it has laid hands upon the wage and hour scale of every worker in Germany, dictating internal changes in the constitution—from the eight to the ten hour day; lecturing France, challenging England, holding a dozen nations in pawn, inserting and asserting its leadership in the plunder of the Orient, while in Latin-America Wall Street banks have their rule guaranteed by the Monroe doctrine, backed by the army and navy of this country.

What have we to do with all this? Most of us have never seen these countries and they mean nothing to us—if we forget or disregard the fact that capitalism is international, and that capitalist imperialism connotes an equal subjugation of the proletariat of the imperialist country itself, as well as the oppression of the subject nations and the so-called "backward" races.

SOME workers of America may not consider that the question of German reparations has anything at all to do with us. But we are due for rude awakening when German workers, enslaved by the Dawes plan and with cheap commodities paying increasingly large sums of reparations, throw millions of American producers out of work and open the way for such a wage cutting and union smashing drive as this land has never seen. The same may be said of the foreign debts, about which Morgan.s Guaranty Trust Bank has said the following:

> "The payment of foreign debts must inevitably be made largely by the export of goods from the debtor countries. This injects into the domestic markets of the creditor country, foreign competiition. That there must be hardship upon individual industries in this process of debt payment and readjustment is clear."

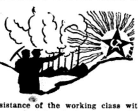
This process is already at work in America, for example in the textile industry, while in England it threatens the very life of the unions. In addition, the tremendous export of capital from America to stimulate production in other countries inevitably ends in sharper competition with goods produced here, and American bosses will surely use this to reduce the American workers' hitherto favored conditions.

NOR is this all. For imperialism is the age of monopoly and intensively developed technique of production. The astounding combination of corporations and trusts into supertrusts, and the increasing proportion of constant to variable capital, simultaneously strengthen the power of the employing class and weaken the resistance of the working class with unprecedented and chronic unemployment.



How are the organizations which aspire to speak for and lead the working class going to solve this historical crisis, which will become— between short waves of relief, ever deeper and more permanent? Not alone, surely, by giving the growing armies of unemployed the excellent advice to organize on the job; not by schematic dreaming that by some mechanical means—without the intervention of the starving and oppressed workers—capitalism will "collapse" and the workers will inherit the earth, peacefully, bloodlessly and without struggle.

We trust that the convention will emphasize, as did the British unions with "their" imperialism, that the I. W. W. is the mortal foe of American imperialism, that it recognizes that the working class, employed and unemployed, nationally and internationally, must be united upon a program of implacable struggle to overthrow the rule of capitalism and set up the rule of the workers—and that the first step toward revolution is the unity of the workers' unions.

THE I. W. W. still suffers from internal disunity, particularly in the Lumber Workers No. 120 and Construction Workers No. 310, has the poison of those traitors who appealed to the enemy class for injunction, spread disintegration among the membership. We trust that the convention will strive to win back by all fair and honorable means consistent with revolutionary principles, those members of the rank and file who were lost for a time to the emergency split thru misunderstanding the issues involved and—strangely enough—while at the beginning the I. W. W. press of general circulation failed to explain the situation.

The fact that large sections of the membership did not see anything especially wrong in Raddock, Rowan and company applying to the capitalist courts, is proof of two things; first that it was necessary to come out against the E. P. in the papers which really reach the membership; and, secondly, it was a mistake ever to have closed the columns of this press to so-called "controversy." The sentiment favoring Rowan grew up under a stupid censorship, supposedly against Communists, but which shut out necessary, even if controversial, discussion of revolutionary principles.

If such disaster is to be avoided in the future, censorship must be wiped out. Particularly must the G. E. B. be made to understand that its legitimate "control" of the press does not mean a blanket right to exclude members from using the papers they support when such members' opinions are not those of the officials. The turnover in membership should be considered, and if the papers had been open to theoretical controversy such things as the members seeing no harm in appealing to capitalist courts for control of labor unions would not have happened.

THE Red International Affiliation Committee is proud to say that from the first day it led the attack against the injunctionites and splitters, fighting for unity on the basis of revolutionary principles, aiding the organization to overcome the anarchist tendencies that influenced many members, some in position they used to betray uninformed members into the E. P.

We point out that while the general organization was unable to send its best forces against the injunctionites in the northwest, where the struggle was most vital, able adherents of the Red International were speaking night after night on the skidroads of northwestern cities, fighting the leadership of the E. P. and saving hundreds of otherwise uninformed members for the I. W. W. The R. I. A. C. has earned the enmity of the emergencies, and we are proud of it.

THE Red International Affiliation Committee has given unequivocal and whole-hearted support as well to the M. T. W. in their recent fight against the shipping trust, it has strived with some success to unite all workers to aid the imprisoned victims of capitalist dictatorship, of whom the I. W. W. furnishes so many; and we ask you to witness that these facts are incontrovertible proof that those who say the R. I. L. U. desires to "liquidate" the I. W. W. are either mistaken or wilfully lying.

Among those who have done all they could to aid the I. W. W. in the crisis, are those who in the past were expelled from the organization by the finks and anarchists who have found their proper field as leaders of the split. The convention should restore membership to such expelled fellow workers, who have not wavered in their loyalty to the I. W. W., even when it unjustly excluded them.

THERE is one point of misunderstanding we take up here because it deals with the buncombe about "liquidation." Anarchist elements who were in close touch with Berlin, have carefully spread the falsehood that if the I. W. W. affiliated to the R. I. L. U., the members would all be driven into the A. F. of L. and the I. W. W. "liquidated." Our adherents have made clear, and we reiterate, that the R. I. L. U. recognizes that the I. W. W. has the position of the leading union in several important industries.

We mean to encourage the unorganized in these industries to join the I. W. W., but where other industries are dominated by other unions, A. F. of L. or independent, and the I. W. W. has only a propaganda group, we think that a sense of realism and a desire to advance revolutionary industrial unionism, demands that such groups should, under the joint supervison of the general organization and the Trade Union Educational League, work whole-heartedly in co-operation with the revolutionary left wing to revolutionize the existing unions in both ideology and structure. But it is not required that even one I. W. W. should give up his red card.

We are glad to say, also, that the present conviction of, we think, the majority of the membership, that the solidarity of the I. W. W. internally does not depend on a universal finance system which enforces crippling limitation on industrial unions that face different conditions, has been materially aided by agitation of adherents of the Red International. We hope the convention will act constructively on this subject so as to aid not only the industrial unions, but furnish more funds to the general organization and retain and strengthen the necessary centralization.

BUT while the R. I. L. U. adherents have done all in their power to aid the I. W. W. in its struggles against employers, the persecution of capitalist government and the anarchist splitters, they have also—and properly—pointed out the weaknesses of the I. W. W. program, criticized sharply as was deserved, the anarchist tendencies of influential members whose tendencies were the same tendencies as the leaders of the emergency split, and brot out for the purpose of clarification, the differences between the policy of the R. I. L. U. and the prevailing views in the I. W. W.

Yet the R. I. L. U. holds that these differences, while sharp and often apparently irreconcilable, are more upon the tactics of the struggle than upon its fundamental line and aim. We agree absolutely that the workers must ultimately base their unions on the industrial form to fight effectively—the R. I. L. U. pointing out, however, that there is nothing magical in this form which might serve as a substitute for a militant policy of struggle. Some industrial unions may have very conservative policies and thus fail to defend the workers, while some craft unions, despite their serious lack of structural perfection, may be militant and defend their members' interests the best their limitations allow. Content, as well as form, is important.

WE agree upon industrial unionism, then. We agree that capitalism must be overthrown. We agree upon the use of revolutionary direct action by the workers. Many, if not most I. W. W. agree with the R. I. L. U. that, during and immediately following the seizure of power by the workers, the capitalists will not acknowledge defeat and will use every means, including the enlistment on their side in armed counter-revolution, of the ignorant and backward throngs we see about us on every hand.

Most fellow workers will agree that during this period, before the bourgeoisie is completely broken, absorbed into the working class and their ignorant followers are thoroly enlightened — whether this transition period be long or short, of years or decades—that the workers must rule with an iron hand as a dictatorship of the proletariat.

But at this point our difference in views appears—owing to the steady permeation of the I. W. W. in previous years by the anarcho-syndicalist illusions; first, that the dictatorship is unnecessary and "morally" wrong; secondly, that if it is necessary, the unions alone can begin and carry it out to completion.

IN the view of the R. I. L. U., the facts of life and the unanswerable lessons of the Paris Commune and the Russian revolution prove that the proletarian dictatorship is necessary. And if it is necessary, then we can dismiss the bourgeois quibbles as to whether it be right or wrong.

The second question involves not only the capacity of the unions to accomplish by themselves the whole revolution from the start to finish, but poses, as well, the question of why there are political organizations of the working class (or, for that matter, of any class) with the same revolutionary aims. It poses the question, also, of the relationship between the political organizations and the economic organizations of the workers.

TO start with, we say emphatically that the I. W. W. has by degrees and with some historical influences, veered away from the plain line of Marxism at the point where the economics of the forces of production—the machines, materials and so on—blend naturally and inescapably with

Conservation and Thrift Day

By H. M. Wicks

THURSDAY, the fourth day of "Education Week," the capitalist press, pulpit and paritcularly the public schools deluded the children and grown-ups with the capitalist slogans of industry and thrift. It was "Conservation and Thrift Day."

This slogan contains the most subtle, menacing poison for the working class. As a means of mentally stupefying the slaves in industry in ranks with religion and patriotism. Hundreds of thousands of workers actually believe that the solution of labor's ills lies in practicing those capitalist virtues of industry and thrift. Day after day this illusion is carefully fostered. In the columns of newspapers, from the pulpits, on the moving picture screens, on screeching cards in the street cars, on the backs of pay envelopes, in the house organs of the slave pens of industry, by every conceivable means of publicity the workers are implored to work industriously and save a portion of their earnings each week, "for that is the road that leads to prosperity."

On every hand the sovereign workers in this unsurpassed democracy are regaled with the wondrous tales of industry and frugality. After the worker has received his wages and has paid for the necessaries of life for himself and family he is told that he can save a part of his income by placing it in the bank where it can draw interest. This is called "making money work," or "making money make money."

LET us see how this thing works out in practice. All banks claim that their greatest desire, as benefactors of the American people, is to see the entire population open savings accounts and draw interest on their money. Of course there is no possibility of any such thing happening because of economic facts we shall presently set forth. But let us, for the sake of getting to the bottom of the question, assume that such a thing did happen. When all the working class has deposited a certain amount of its earnings in savings banks, who then would produce the surplus-value with which to pay interest on this money? Since money itself possesses no properties that enables it to increase in value, and with every person in the nation depending upon income from savings, it is clear there would be no income for anyone. Everyone would starve to death except those who proceeded to apply their labor power to machinery and raw material in order to produce the necessaries of life. In fact a nation of savings bank depositors would be the greatest calamity that could befall the banks for the simple reason that they never could, by any strategy, devise a method whereby the 110,000,000 people in this country could realize interest off savings, therefore the whole banking system would collapse.

Apologists for savings banks will charge that we have reduced the thing to absurdity and that there are certain benefits to be derived by the working class establishing small savings accounts. We shall examine this claim in the light of economics and see where it leads us. The average worker receives the value of his labor-power—that is sufficient to enable him to recuperate the strength he expends in production from day to day and to raise and educate offspring that will take the place of this generation of wage-slaves. In order to save money the workers proceed to practice thrift. They economize on the necessities of life. The result is that those industries producing necessities are forced to curtail production. The decreased demand forces the capitalist to decrease the number of his workers. These workers eventually flood the labor market and thru fierce competition the wages of labor sink. These wages keep sinking as long as the workers keep saving. Instead of raising their standard of living by practicing these capitalist virtues, the working class lowers its standard of living, until the point is reached where they must, of necessity, practice the most rigid frugality in order to maintain a standard of living a trifle above that of Chinese coolies.

SURELY it would be a sight for the gods to view the spectacle of labor struggling for years to raise its standard of living, only to voluntarily surrender its gain under the delusion that by saving part of its earnings it would elevate itself to the position of the capitalist class!

"Work and Save" is a slogan originated by the capitalist class for the purpose of befuddling the minds of the working class. The whole propaganda of industry and thrift is aimed toward making more docile slaves. When the worker understands economics, when he is able to analyze this system of wealth production, he percieves that those who do the work of the world never become wealthy, while those who do not work, but who own the machinery of production and distribution, revel in the most extravagant luxury. Those who work cannot save very much and those who save most do not work.

Better conditions for the working class cannot be obtained by following the advice of the capitalist class. Instead of voluntarily reducing its standard of living thru savings accounts, the working class should constantly strive to obtain more of the product of its labor so that living would be more tolerable.

THERE is one system of saving that will benefit the worker, but the greedy capitalist class never recommends this efficient kind of saving. The worker cannot save by working, for his sole wealth is his labor-power. If he saves intelligently he will preserve this sole wealth of his, instead of playing the dolt and squandering it in the interest of the capitalist class, only to be thrown on the industrial scrap heap when the last bit of energy in his body is distilled into profits. The worker should save his physical energy by refusing to so exhaust himself in one day that he cannot recuperate for the following day. Workers can save intelligently only by fighting to reduce the hours they spend in the slave pens of industry, so that they may have more leisure, live longer and conserve their vitality, physical and mental, which they sell to the bosses. They should strive for higher wages, not to save money, but to live better and longer.

Hard work only increases the profits of the capitalist class and saps the energy of the working class. Instead of being concerned over the "natural resources" which are controlled by the capitalist class, the working class and their children should be shielded from the frightful devastation of child slavery.

The one method for the workers most effectively to conserve its resources is to drive out the capitalist class as owners of industry and turn production from profit into production for use. Against the poison propaganda of the capitalist class we raise the slogan for the workers to rally to a labor party of their own, so that they can definitely break with the old parties of capitalism that exist to conserve the interests of the capitalists and destroy the lives of the workers. With that accomplished the first step in the direction of working class political action among the broad masses can be realized. As Communists we consciously strive to lead the masses forward to the revolutionary overthrow of the capitalist government that defends and protects the despoilers of the working class and establish in its place the Soviet government of the United States.

DANISH LABOR DELEGATION GREETS LENINGRAD TRADES UNION COUNCIL

LENINGRAD, U. S. S. R. (By Mail)—The Danish workers' delegation that is now in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics recently visited Leningrad where they studied the conditions under which the workers carry on production. While in Leningrad they visited the Trade Union Council headquarters where they exchanged greetings and discussed the manner in which the unions are functioning in Soviet Russia.

The delegation was very much pleased with the reception accorded them by the Russian workers and expressed their desire to come into closer relations with the trade union workers of Russia. The delegation also visited the trade union museum, which is controlled by the Leningrad Trade Union Council, and visited the clubrooms maintained by the Russian unions where the union members gather and discuss the economic questions that are facing them.

A Danish non-party worker, Skium, who is in the delegation and had visited Russia in 1919, declared, "In these six years wonders have been accomplished. Even the untrammeled imagination of a sympathizer with the Soviet Union would have been unable to imagine the great metamorphosis which has actually taken place. Instead of a hungry, exhausted, ruined Petrograd, I see a bustling town with continual economic and cultural progression."

The other members of the delegation expressed their surprise at the conditions existing in Russia and promised upon returning to their country to tell their brothers there about the astounding progress that Russia's workers have made in the short time that they had the reins of government in their hands.

The Danish workers' delegation consists of six metal workers, two chemical workers, two food workers, two sailors, a printer, a municipal worker, a mail carrier, a transport worker and an unskilled worker. The well-known Danish author, Nuigord, is accompany the delegation. The chairman of the delegation is a social democrat, Adamson, and the secretary a Communist, Schulz.

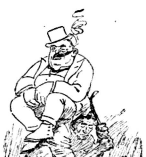
MOSCOW (By Mail).—The Czecho-Slovak, Norwegian and Danish workers' delegations and the working youth delegations from France, Belgium, Germany, Hungary and a number of other countries met in Moscow and joined the Moscow workers in the celebration of the 8th anniversary of the proletarian revolution.

Protest Massacres at Canton

By JAMES H. DOLSEN.

The Euro-American Returned Students' Association of Kwangtung province, China, has published a pamphlet entitled "Massacre of the Chinese People in Canton, China, by British and French Armed Men on June 23, 1925." Much has been heard about the mass murders committed by the British, particularly in Shanghai and by the Japanese at Tsingtao. This article deals with a typical imperialist action in the leading city of southern China.

Great Britain, according to the pamphlet, is faced with the contradiction that while her effort to control China's finance and to subjugate her industries have been effective, the parallel attempt to dominate the country politically thru subsidizing various native politicians and militarists have been failures and have resulted finally in uniting the Chinese masses solidly against foreign imperialism in general.



Dum-Dum Bullet Christianity.

Cantonese last June declared a sympathetic strike against the British and Japanese of that city as a result of the events in Shanghai. The demonstration took the customary form of a parade, participated in by workers, students, merchants, and military cadets. As it was proceeding along the Chinese street, which runs parallel to the island of Shameen, a concession owned by the French and British, the British marines opened a sweeping machine gun and rifle fire. There were over a hundred casualties among the Chinese. Not a foreigner was injured nor a shot fired in reply.

The pamphlet contains reprints of various official correspondence with the English consul and others. Among these is a copy of resolutions unanimously passed by the American staff of the Christian College at Canton, stating that the procession was marching peaceably and unarmed when fired upon. Members of the staff itself as well as its student body were among the injured. An official declaration by Foo Ping-Sheung, commissioner of foreign affairs for the Canton government, to the British and French consuls, charged that the students and unarmed sections of the demonstration had been picked out for slaughter and that the foreign soldiers would have charged into the Chinese city, but for the presence of the cadets. That preparations had been made in advance for the slaughter is evident. On the morning of the same day the city was full of rumors that the British had predicted an attack on the foreign quarters by the Chinese. Moreover, soft-nosed or dum-dum bullets were used in the machine gun firing, contrary to all the rules of European warfare.

The pamphlet is illustrated with photographs of the murdered Chinese and views of the destruction caused by the reckless shooting.

The German Communist Party at Work

By WILLIAM F. KRUSE.

THE signing of the Locarno imperialist alliance against Soviet Russia promises in the very near future, as in the November days of 1918 and 1923, to put the Communist Party of Germany back into the very center of the world revolutionary stage. A hopelessly white Germany closes a breach in the iron ring with which the Allied imperialists plan to crush Russia and thereby, they hope, save their own dominion. A Red Germany, on the other hand, would shatter that ring, would assure a vastly improved economic situation for both German and Russian peoples, and would lead to certain success of the revolutionary forces in England, France, the Balkans, Hungary and Scandinavia. A white Germany makes possible another imperialist war to destroy the Soviet power. A Red Germany insures a Soviet Europe—a Soviet world.

We see in Germany today a healthy revolutionary ferment. The economic situation takes on more serious aspect and the political developments keep even pace. The Dawes plan brought a temporary partial stabilization—but at a price that the workers pay in unemployment, low wages, lengthened hours, destroyed social standards, and terrific taxes on their necessities. The capitalists already feel their day of reckoning coming, credit is unbelievably tight, industry restricted—and soon comes the day when interest on Wall Street's mortgage must be met. The government is shaky, despite the highest taxes in its history it is driven to running state lotteries and to offering 10 per cent interest on its domestic loans. Meanwhile the class war sharpens to the extremest forms, election campaigns take on the character of pitched battles between uniformed troops of left and right, the center contenting itself with gestures of stately impartiality and actual support of the most reactionary elements.

At the same time the proletarian masses are moving instinctively toward an extra-partisan unity of action in the shops and unions and on the field of parliamentary struggle. The Communists are fostering this movement in every possible way, the social democratic right wing leadership opposes it relentlessly and thus helps set the relationship of class and party still more clearly before the awakening workers.

The Open Letter and its Discussion.

The German party faces this new developing revolutionary situation with the benefit of dearly-bought experience in past struggle. The Comintern stands to its aid also in applying the lessons of that struggle to the present situation, and steps in to correct any deviations, called by whatever name of right or ultra-left, that would weaken or unfit the party for its tremendous role. This is the real and only basis for the much discussed "open letter" and the party discussion that now takes up its daily page of the Rote Fahne and other party organs. Greater mass contact and influence in the trade unions and other proletarian mass organizations is immediately essential, this calls for more adroit and effective use of the united front in industrial and parliamentary struggle, and on the other hand the fuller use of all available party strength ("normalization") and the more rapid democratically centralized reorganization upon nuclei basis.

These are not new decisions coming like a bolt from the blue. They were hammered out at past congresses and tested in the fires of the experience of the world parties. There was little open opposition to them, in theory, but in the German party there seemed to be a definite delay in their execution. Many elements professed skepticism on the "united front" with those very social-democratic and laborite masses who had defeated former revolutionary campagins; thousands of expelled union members harbored no feeling except intense hatred toward the boss-ridden A. D. G. B., precisely as do our "revolutionary" I. W. W.'s. And the party did nothing to overcome these un-Communist reactions. On the other hand the inertia weighted functionary apparatus was not too hasty in fostering changes that they felt might threaten the party welfare along with their own position and standing.

There was no open opposition to the C. I. instructions, but we found an eleventh-hour "committee" substituted for the 20-man trade union apparatus that was to be formed; we found the great proletarian mass defense organization, "The Red Frontfighters," chided in contemptuous amusement for "playing soldiers"; we found the reorganization hamstrung by dualism of function between nuclei and old territorial organization with the emphasis wrongly placed on the latter; we found leaders fomenting dissatisfaction with united front actions, and otherwise weakening the C. I. standing with the membership. This was the situation that led the C. I. to intervene again just as sharply and as drastically as it did after the debacle of 1923. And with only one negative and one abstention the Central Committee accepted the "line of the Comintern" and proceeded to better orientate the membership on its meaning. The effect has been to tremendously strengthen the firm C. I. element at the expense of both right and ultra-left. The C. I. criticism is openly a left criticism and accepted as such, we are told, the old right has no district under its control while the ultra-left holds the Pfalz, Rhine-Saar, and a considerable tho seemingly diminishing following in Berlin. The party discussion has had the happy effect of bringing to light certain so extreme right liquidatory views that former adherents of that tendency are rushing forward to help the attack upon them.

German Communists in the Reichstag

It should not be imagined for a moment that this party struggle, like the recent American in some instances, holds up the party work. One (half-size) page of the daily papers deals with the party discussion in a much more instructive tho fully democratic way than did we, a daily instalment from the collective pen of the Central Committee, and one long or two short contributions from individuals. But five or seven pages deal with constructive work. The local election campaign, the anti-Locarno action, daily fights against the fascist bands, and a whole page of minutely condensed party, fraction, and kindred organization news.

Like an Army at the Front.

The German party is compelled to carry on its work under very difficult circumstances. Under an outward appearance of deadly legality there prevails a state of siebe. All wires are tapped by "Section LA" (the German Scotland Yard), and foreign comrades seeking the way to the party office or paper are warned not to ask directions from the police or unknown strangers. "Rosenthaler Strasse" is an important business artery but to the police it means only one thing: "Communism." Those asking the way there are candidates for constant espionage. Within the party itself hundreds of spies have been uncovered, sometimes not before they had successfully wormed themselves high into party councils. One of the active workers made the rueful boast—a sort of "galgen humor"—that the German party had expelled more spies than the American had members. It is not quite that bad but the gallery of first and second class scoundrels is large. First class "schurken" are the police informers and spies, "second class" are those who embezzle party money or comrades' property, who panhandle lodging and funds on the strength of their party card, who swindle and leave bad debts, who scab or behave un-Communistically. Generally a detected spy or convicted cheat is immediately shown up in the press so that the entire membership is warned, sometimes his indentity is revealed only to "vertrauensmanner" in strategic posts so that the marked man continues contact for months, dealing with specially skilled comrades, until he unwittingly reveals his associates in rascality.

The precautions of the party must be taken not only against underground enemies, but also against open attempts at violent suppression, official and unofficial. Years of alternating legality and underground existence have taught the need of adopting the military strategy of the world war. There it was learned that the demolition of a heavily fortified front line trench meant only a comparatively slight gain because the foe retreated in good time to other parallel trenches, previously prepared just beyond gunshot. So too preparations against official violence takes the form of parallel organizations, newspapers, printshops, book stores—of the whole gamut of organizational paraphernalia. The police realize that this tactic is being used but are helpless against it because each of the parallel positions has the extra support of thousands of non-Communist workers and an attack upon them increases rather than restrict the field of militant class antagonism. Thus in Berlin they recently raided a proletarian library on the suspicion that it was a Communist Party parallel office, only to find that dozens of non-Communist organizations had co-operated in establishing and using the library. The labor involved in maintaining all these contact fronts is tremendous but there are at least seven nights a week that belong absolutely to the party, and many a German Communist wishes there were more. These parallel organizations, daily papers, etc., are not liabilities, they are assests in the sense that they secure the financial and physical support of thousands upon thousands of non-Communist workers. In some of these "mantel-organizationen" Communist percentage runs about 40 per cent, in others as low as 10 per cent, and their papers generally have a much larger circulation than the avowedly Communist organs they parallel. The Comintern letter also indicated the importance of the work of party members in these mass movements.

As to precautions against unofficial violence—this is worthy of a special article all by itself. Suffice to say that German party members have to be made of stern stuff, ready to fight with their lives at any moment. And now, around the party units, there has developed a new mass movement of militant proletarians, "The Red Frontfighters," uniformed, with military discipline and spirit on the pattern of the Red Army. They defend Communist meetings, offices, placards, etc., and are at the front of every demonstration, not only willing but anxious to fight.

The United Front in Action.

IN the recent past there were big campaigns in the presidential election and for general amnesty. At present the party has mobilized full strength for a fight against the Locarno agreement and for support of Soviet Russia. The report of the delegation of social-democratic trade unionists just returned from Soviet Russia is very helpful in this work. In Berlin there is a united front election campaign with the independent social-democrats under which surplus remainder votes cast for these two parties will be pooled to get extra representation and cut down the bourgeois strength. The proposal was also made to the social-democrats and refused, whereby the eyes of the workers were once more opened as to who are the splitters of labor unity. Wherever monarchist demonstrations are held, as yesterday (Oct. 18) at Leipsig, the Communists hold counter demonstrations, generally on a united labor front basis and marked with violent clashes with the reactionaries. Two young Red Frontfighters were mortally shot and many injured. More and more the conservative leaders of the social-democrats adopt passive tactics, calling upon their followers to "ignore" fascist demonstrations, thereby giving the initiative further into the hands of the Communists. In the working class sport organizations the Communist athletes take an ever increasing leadership, their slogan being absolute unity of all proletarian sport and rigorous non-participation in bourgeois affairs, and here again the social-democrats lose face before the workers. It is not easy for Red workers who survived the battles of 1918 and 1923 to now make common cause with the then dupes of the traitorous Scheidemans and Noskes, but more and more the realization sinks in that this German proletariat, with all its strength and weaknesses, is the force upon which depends the German revolution.

Organization and Reorganization.

While these campaigns are being pushed by the party, the "Red Front-Fighters" are actively enrolling support to the slogan of "A united labor front against fascism in the factories." The I. A. H. stimulates aid for China and the liberation of Rakosi, and the arrested Hungarians. The I. R. A. collects money for political prisoners and unites thousands of non-partisan workers for general amnesty. And the trade union unity committee secures ever greater support.

Thus the movement makes more extensive its scope and influence. At

In the Flames of Revolt Twenty Years Ago

I.

The Mistake of the Police.

IT was way back in 1902 when the first rumblings of the coming revolutionary events were first noticed in our town. It was a fairly well populated city, with 200,000 more or less loyal subjects of the czar. There weren't many factories in the city, just one big government distillery where "kazenka" (vodka) was being manufactured, another distillery for cognac, a few flour mills, and a few smaller factories. There were many small shops each employing just a few people.

There were many government and private saloons where the happy drink was sold to the tired and miserable workers and peasants from the nearby villages. Churches and synagogues were as numerous as the saloons, for the people of the city were god fearing people, being divided by religion about evenly between Jews and christians. It was within the pale where Jews were permitted by the czarist government laws to live a miserable life.

FOR those who may not know about the "pale," a few remarks are necessary. In its discrimination against the Jews the czar's government created a special zone, the "pale", within which the Jews were allowed the live. They were not permitted to live in the capitals, Moscow or Petersburg, were prohibited to live in many other districts, etc. There were, of course, exceptions, but mostly in favor of the rich. Many a tragedy took place on account of these special discriminations against Jews. Many a girl student was forced to obtain a yellow passport, the passport of a prostitute, in order to be able to live in the capital and continue her studies, for a prostitute was more respected and had more rights and privileges under the god blessed czars, than the Jews.

The local newspaper mentioned something about "the enemies of the government" who were caught with a "secret print shop." It turned out to be an underground printing plant of the Social-Democratic Labor Party. The people caught with the printing were until then considered quite respectable. They lived next door to the police station, and the woman was often seen to leave the house with the baby carriage. It turned out to be the "delivery wagon" for the print shop. Who could ever expect such a thing and next door to the police station! The shop existed for quite a long time and was finally discovered thru an agent provocator.

THE workers began to discuss the matter. Who are they? For what did they have a print shop? What is it all about?

At that time there was no labor organization in the city, just a few isolated underground groups composed mostly of intellectuals. The print shop was doing its work for the central executive committee and the district committee that were located far away in different cities.

An underground proclamation appeared among the workers explaining the aims of the social-democratic party and calling to revolt. It ended with the slogan: "Down with the czarist's absolutism! Long live the democratic republic!"

It sounded strange to the workers who were not used to such language about the czars, but the "home made" politicians explained the matter: "They want a republic like in America." That sounded plain. The proclamations were hidden away and read over again and again. At the end of the proclamation there was a legend: "After reading it over, pass it on to a friend." It was passed on.

IN the end of the year presentations were being made by the gendarmes (political police) to send the underground printers north. The workers in the city did not know anything about it but when the "criminals" were finally taken to the railroad station a great throng of students and some workers appeared at the station to say farewell to them. It happened unexpectedly and the gendarmes were not prepared to rush the crowd.

When the train began to move the crowd burst into singing and shouting. The old walls of the railroad stattion echoed to new and foreign songs: The International and the Marseillese.

WHEN the train left, the crowd formed into lines and marched out of town. The station is located at the city limits, far away from the center. The marching crowd spread out in the middle of the street singing revolutionary songs. The nearer they came to the center of the town the bigger grew the crowd. It was in the evening and the respectable people were strolling back and forth on the Alexandrovsky, the main street of the city, showing their own style of garments and enviously looking over the other people's styles.

They stopped looking in the windows of the big stores, forgot their styles for the moment and with open mouths watched the strange procession. The uniformed students and well dressed girls marched hand in hand in the middle of the street singing. The less pretentiously dressed workers marched behind them.

THE policemen, mostly illiterate or half illiterate peasants, seeing a crowd of ladies and gentlemen marching and singing at once showed their authority by driving off the drojkas (cabs) and clearing the way for the marchers. The poor simpletons didn't know that they were aiding the enemies of the czar! They found out about it after getting an awful calling down later on from their superiors. But how could they be expected to know that these finely dressed ladies and gentlemen were enemies of the fatherland!

The crowd marched up to the house of the governor where a speaker appeared and made a revolutionary speech.

The governor was scared to death. He telephoned for the dragoons. When they arrived the crowd had already disappeared and nobody was arrested.

The Red Front Fighters - -

By Karl Reeve

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN—(By mail.)—The Red Front Fighters, the organization of factory workers in which the Communists take a leading part, is a product of the world war and the Russian revolution. This fact was impressed on the writer as he marched in a demonstration of that organization. The parade, thru one of the working class quarters of Berlin, beginning at Buelow Platz and ending at the Grenadier Platz with a huge open air meeting, was held by only one district organization of the Red Front Fighters, but it was far from small.

The demonstration, held for the Communist candidates in the municipal elections, proceeded, with two bands and numerous red banners, thru one narrow street after another. As we marched along, to the accompaniment of the singing of the workers in the Red Front Fighters uniform, workers flocked to join the parade. Soon the sidewalks on both sides were filled with workers. Men and women cheered from their windows or their cellar doorways, and those marching on the sidewalks joined in singing the revolutionary songs, one of the most popular of which is "We Are the Youthful Guardsmen of the Proletariat," with which the American Communists are familiar.

This was no slipshod procession. The heavy shoes of the Red Front Fighters, beat a perfect rhythm. The Red Front Fighters have imposed upon themselves a discipline. Their constitution states that the purpose of the organization is to enlist the workers, especially those who fought in the world war, to fight in the class war on the side of the working class.

The constitution states that the purpose of the organization is to organize all those who have been disillusioned by the bourgeois parties, and who realize that the working class of Germany has been betrayed by the agents of the capitalist class.

In the demonstrations of the Red Front Fighters which I have witnessed, their business-like maneuvers, their earnest faces, their self-imposed discipline, their fearless enthusiasm, has impressed me with one fact. These organized units of the working class may fight again. In fact they are capable. and ready to fight. But they will never fight again for any other class than their own. And they have the support of hundreds of thousand of other workers in Berlin. The world war has educated them, hardened them and made them ready for the class war.

"The organization stands on the basis of the class struggle," says the third paragraph of the constitution. "And takes upon itself to remind the workers the world war in order to point out the nationalist propaganda now being carried on for a new imperialist war, and to enlighten the workers on the class character and the methods of imperialist war."

One worker in the demonstration had lost his arm in the war. Another, in the uniform of the Red Front Fighters, told me he had been wounded four times in the world war while fighting in Belgium.

"If Germany is thrown into another imperialist war it will be turned into a civil war against our own bourgeoisie within three weeks," was the expectation expressed by a Communist member of the Red Front Fighters to me.

The Red Front Fighters played a most prominent part in the municipal elections in Berlin. Truckloads of them, carrying red flags, and shouting their slogans for the Communist candidates, covered every section of the city.

We were the guests of one company of Red Front Fighters on election day, and took part in their demonstrations. This company is located in Reinickendorf, one of the industrial suburbs where a large working class population lives in close proximity to the huge factories.

"Death to Fascism, Vote for Communism," was the shout of the Red Front Fighters, who jammed the truck to capacity. "Three Cheers for the Communist candidates, Rot Front, Rot Front, Rot Front," and "Who has Betrayed Us, The Socialists—Vote Communist," were other slogans we shouted as we passed thru the working class districts.

We passed the Joachmenn foundry, where the Communist Party has the largest shop nucleus, of two hundred and fifty members. We also passed the Martin and Reiss slaughter house, which, thanks to the manipulations of the socialist leaders, was sold by the city administration to private capitalists for almost nothing during the inflation period.

As we circled the Prussian State penitentiary, where Communists are imprisoned for their political views, we shouted, "Free the Political Prisoners," and "Out of the Jails with the Political Prisoners."

The Red Front Fighters at the present time are devoting their energies toward combatting the fascist menace fostered by Hindenburg and toward fighting the Locarno pact of the imperialist robber nations and are ceaselessly demanding an alliance with Soviet Russia.

The Red Front Fighters expect to see the day not far distant when their battalions will be marching side by side with the working class fighters of Soviet Russia, as the defenders of the working class state of Soviet Germany.

NOVY MIR GROUP WILL ISSUE 'LIVE' PAPER AT WORKERS' HOUSE TONIGHT

The second issue of the living newspaper "published" by the worker correspondents of the Novy Mir, will be out tonight, Sat., Nov. 21, at 8 p. m., at the Workers' House, 1902 W. Division St. The first issue mett with enthusiastic approval of the Russian workers of the city. Many new worker correspondents joined the Chicago group of the Novy Mir. Admission tonight is 15c.

"He Shall Not Die"

He shall not die!
Rakosi shall not die!
We say it, we
The rising slaves of every land.
O tyranny! Heed us! If he
Drops dead upon your gallows tree,
Or bleeds upon your dungeon stones,
Some day we'll come with naked brand
And for his groans exact your groans!

Heed us! We warn!
Crush not the weak!
For with the vengeance that you wreak,
Or with the mercy that you show,
We pay you back; and soon or slow
We come to work you weal or woe!

Look round you! See the rising flood
O'er all the world!

In every land you hear our cry;
It sweeps the earth and plumbs the sky;
Rakosi shall not die!

How to Strengthen Our Communist Press

THE organization department of the Central Executive Committee has received a letter from the organization department of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, giving favorable suggestions for building up the party press. The suggestions deal with our daily press, as well as shop nuclei papers. These recommendations are based on the collective experiences of the various sections of the Communist International.

In view of the campaign to build The DAILY WORKER into a mass Communist paper, and in view of the vigorous reorganization efforts now being made thruout the party to organize the party on the basis of shop nuclei, these recommendations are especially timely and instructive.

We herewith begin the publication of this letter of suggestions, in two instalments.

The first instalment follows:

To the organization department of the Executive Committee of the Workers Party of America.

Dear Comrades,

With respect to the circular letter of the agitprop department of the Executive Committee of the Communist International concerning the international press campaign for the development of the Communist press, we wish to point out that the following tasks should receive your special attention:

(a) Organization of the sale of the press, construction and development of the apparatus for this circulation;

(b) Organization of the regular publication of factory nucleus newspapers for all big and medium industrial enterprises.

To carry out these tasks, close collaboration between the agitprop and organization departments of the center and the district leading organs of the party is essential.

(a) Organization of Newspaper Circulation.

The small circulation of the Communist press is not only due to the shortcoming of its contents, but also to the unsatisfactory organization of newspaper circulation. In some countries, there is no regular subscription system and the circulation depends entirely on street and other scales. With such a method, it is impossible to control the supply of newspapers and to establish a regular nucleus of subscribers. In other countries, the newspaper supply takes place thru an apparatus over which we have no influence and which is restriced as to the mechanical supply of newspapers (street sales in Austria and supply by post in other countries). In some other countries again, the business managements of the Communist press have created an apparatus of their own for newspaper circulation, thru which the subscribers are supplied at their places of residence. In most cases, this apparatus is either loosely or not all connected with the party apparatus (Czecho-Slovakia, Germany). It is only in a very few organizations that the leading party organs superintend and control the construction and development of the apparatus for newspaper circulation. Under such conditions, it is only natural that the newspaper circulation apparatus is hardly used at all for the circulation of periodicals and literature.

The Communist Press Must Be a Mass Organizer.

This is only possible with a regular subscription system, and if the apparatus for newspaper circulation is a branch of the party apparatus. The apparatus for newspaper circulation must be organized on the same basis as the party apparatus, that is to say, the circulation should not take place only in the residential districts, but also in and outside the industrial enterprises.

The construction of the circulation apparatus is effected under the superintendence of the agitprop department of the party in conjunction with the management board of the newspaper. Newspaper sellers and distributors are appointed by the leading organs of the locals in conjuniction with the leading organs of factory and street nuclei. In the industrial enterprises, the agitprop organizer is responsible for the organization of the circulation both in and outside the various factories.

Mass circulation of the Communist press is only possible if all nucleus members are induced to do regular agitational work. Nuclei should present every month to the leading organs of the party statistical reports on the number of subscribers and newspaper sales. Moreover, the managing board of the newspaper, presents every month reports to the leading organs of the party on the number of subscribers in the various organizations.

If the apparatus for newspaper circulation is organized in this manner, it will be easy to distribute additional copies with the help of the party apparatus in the event of the confiscation or prohibition of some editions, because of the existing connection with the enterprises which makes a rapid supply of newspapers to a large number of workers possible.

Party nuclei should make sure that subscribers to the party press who are not yet party members, be drawn into collaboration for the press as workers' correspondents. They should also be drawn into the work connected with newspaper circulation and recruiting of new subscribers.

In nearly all the countries of West Europe and in America, our opponents are strengthening and systematizing their agitation in industrial enterprises. This is done by publishing factory newspapers and by selling bourgeois dailies in and outside the enterprises. To counteract this, we should take the following measures:

(a) In addition to the systematic recruiting of subscribers, newspaper sales should be organized both inside and outside the enterprises. As circulation greatly depends on the space which is alloted in the press to factory reports, more space should be given in future to all factory questions. When labor disputes take place in important industrial enterprises, the front page of the paper should be allotted to these questions. It is such an important matter for us to exercise and extend our influence over the thousands of workers employed in large industrial enterprises that it is worth while to break up a page and reset it for the sake of the workers of the respective enterprise. The editorial boards of the daily press should work in close contact with the editors of nucleus newspapers and should accept from the latter good drawings, articles, poems, etc.

(b) Better use should be made of nucleus newspapers for recruiting subscribers. Notices and short extracts from the daily press should be published in nuclei newspapers urging workers to become subscribers. Regular subscribers to nucleus newspapers should be registered and induced to subscribe to the daily press.

(c) Numbers of the daily newspapers in which questions concerning certain enterprises are fully dealt with, should be plentifully supplied to newspaper sellers responsible for the sale in the said enterprises. It is also advisable to publish special editions of the daily press. These papers need not be more than half the size of the daily paper. Such special editions should contain important political notices from the daily press and reports from the enterprises in which the special number is to be circulated. As it is much cheaper to publish these special numbers than ordinary dailies, because of their smaller size and the possibility of using numerous type extracts from the daily, their mass circulation is possible. By this means our press is popularized among the workers.

In some towns, recruiting of new subscribers was encouraged by the managing board of the newspaper presenting books for the nucleus library to those factory nuclei which had shown special activity in getting subscribers.

Charlotte Anita Whitney - - An Appreciation

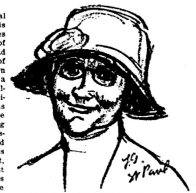
By JAMES H. DOLSEN.



J. G. St Paul

CHARLOTTE ANITA WHITNEY.

It took the highest legal agency of plutocracy in this country—the United States supreme court—a number of years to decide that it had no jurisdiction in the case of Charlotte Anita Whitney. On the other hand whenever a matter involving any curtailment of the rights of exploitation is concerned, such as a child labor law, these black-robed priests of ruling class justice are quick to discern a jurisdiction. "God Knows" Bill Taft, with his pension from the Steel Trust, however, along with the rest of the corporation hirelings who grace the bench, are clever enough to evade an unpopular issue when they can gain their point by a negative decision regarding their power of intervention.

By its action in these matters the supreme court has in effect declared that the guarantees of freedom contained in the federal constitution—the bill of rights—are restrictions only on the power of congress itself, thus leaving the individual states to restrict such liberty in any measure they see fit. Thus it disposes once more of the fetish that there is any liberty in a capitalist state except that which the exploiters are willing to allow the workers as a vent for their discontent.

Miss Whitney deserves the high regard of all Communists and working class rebels for her attitude during her appeal. She has never flinched a particle from her interest in the cause of labor nor her activities in behalf of the persecuted. Particularly has this been true of her fight for justice to the Wobblies in California—a battle she has never flinched from in the most hectic days of their history in the state of "orange groves and jails."

In California this dementia raged longer than anywhere else in the country. Ambitious, scheming, politicians, utilizing the fact that the I. W. W. had not the slightest interest in politics and would not therefore have the least influence, aside from a group of sympathizing liberals, in such affairs, engaged in wholesale campaigns of intimidation. Of course, they were egged on to this course by the open-shop business interests, in particular by certain officials in the Better American Federation whose job was the capitalization of anti-Red hysteria in order to prove their salaries should be conitnued by the business groups.

Miss Whitney's friendship for the victims of the numerous frameups perpetrated by the district attorneys of the state against the Wobblies was well-known thruout the state. The class to which by antecedents she naturally belonged—the old native aristocracy—treated her as an infamous deserter from their ranks. A neice of a United States supreme court justice—the friend and advocate of the lowest and most despised social rebels! It was enough to make them froth at the mouth. What Miss Whitney suffered in those long years no one can realize who has not known what a daily atmosphere of such misunderstandings and hostilities means. Thru it all she has been an inspiration to her friends.

I have known Miss Whitney for about seven years and count her acquaintance as most precious. I would we had a thousand like her in constancy and personal courage, in willingness to face the bitterest social ostracism and the hatred of former associates, in an instinctive desire to stand by the most oppressed and a readiness to subordinate self to the movement, in counting sacrifice for ideals as one of the most worthwhile objects in life.

If she has to go finally to San Quentin penitentiary, the cowardly and sanctimonious politician who sits in the governor's chair at Sacramento will find that his troubles have just begun. The white light of nationwide publicity will be focused on the intolerable conditions at the state penitentiary. The nearly-forgotten Wobblies will be heard and the lid will be ripped off the festering mess of pottage which has been long brewing in the state.

The German Communist Party at Work

the same time the reorganization makes it more intensive, more integral in the industrial life of the German proletariat. Hesitancy of antiquated functionaries is swept aside by the workers from the shops who already feel that the new form, even in its incomplete present form, will give them a deeper say-so in party matters. Where properly applied, the new form has resulted in a markedly increased proletarian membership, and the same has been the result also of the broader united front organizational policies.

Fascists Organize Shop Nuclei.

Imitation is the sincerest flattery; the adoption of our tactic by our enemy is proof of its effectiveness. Thus the "general staff" of German capitalism's fight against Communism has sent out instructions for the formation of "anti-Communist shop nuclei," each with a propaganda, an espionage, and a strong-arm (anti-terror, they call it) section. This "central committee for the combatting of Communism" consists of Dr. Jahres-Lowenstein of the coal syndicate, Oberstleutnant von Stulpnagel of the Reichswehr, Vogler for the Stinnes' interests, Heil-Bosch of the chemical trust, Kienzle of the department of public order, Selte of the Stalhelm, Mahran of Jungdo, Kloppe of Werwolf, Geisler of United Fatherland Societies, Schmidt of national employers' association, Von Zengen of the society of employers, Von Berg of the league for protection German culture, and Plankh of the Industrialist Verband. With propaganda methods not unlike those of the Communists they plan to mobilize the conservative workers against their more radical brothers. That any success they may have can only be temporary is certain, because it is impossible to develop an organized movement with aims directly contrary to the basic economic interests of its members. For the present, however, with the slack work of the deflation period, there is grave danger to the working class in this anti-Red anti-strike move. The Communists raise the slogan of labor unity in the shops, the Red Frontfighters call for a united front against the bosses' rough-neck battalions—and they are getting mass response. Social-democratic workers in mass feel this basic need for unity and their obstructionist leaders are flouted.

The German party at work. An inspiring picture and one full of lessons for American Communist workers.

Red International Message to I. W. W.

the political consequences in the circumstances of production—the social relations between classes and the struggle of each class for power.

We think it obvious, as we said at the beginning, that when the forces of production produce something besides commodities—a social crisis, the working class is a part of this crisis and must act or perish. We repeat Marx—"Every class struggle is a political struggle"—a struggle for power, in which both classes, to a greater or lesser degree according to necessity, turn aside from the forces of production and the manufacture of commodities, to the political struggle for power, to gain by seizure of governmental authority, the prize—the ownership of the machinery of production.

With the conflict taking this character, we contend that the unions, while positively necessary to the struggle thruout its course and necessary to "carry on production when capitalism shall have been overthrown," are not sufficient by themselves to accomplish the overthrowal—tho in the heat of class war their co-ordination with the revolutionary political organization is imperative. This is true because the unions, if they are really unions, must be inclusive of all workers of every shade of opinion, both advanced and backward, and cannot by this diversity attain the needed unity of every member in aim and action in the long, sacrificial and complicated struggle which requires a strict but voluntary discipline for an ideal all unionists do not comprehend.

A REVOLUTIONARY party is absolutely necessary to fulfill this distinct function, to weld together that part—and only that part—of the working class most conscious of the aims and tactics of class war, those in the unions necessarily among them. Moreover, the revolutionary party of this character views the interests of the working class as a whole, while unions incline to stress their sectional interests—as we see by the so-called "industrial union patriotism" even in the revolutionary I. W. W.

There is no question of "domination" of one necessary organization by another equally necessary. "Politics is concentrated economics"—and the necessary co-ordination, not organic unity, now existing between the Communist International and the Red International of Labor Unions is a firm strengthening of revolutionary labor unity against the world capitalist class and should be no bar to the affiliation of the I. W. W. to the R. I. L. U.

A strange misunderstanding has arisen, diligently cultivated by the anarchist element, that if the I. W. W. affiliated to the R. I. L. U., members would be forced to join the Communist Party and vote in elections. Such is not the case. But we do not mean to say that we oppose participation in elections on principle. It is only one and not always the most important one of many useful tactics to stir class consciousness among the masses.

THE I. W. W. was justified in its opposition to the "politics" of the yellow socialist parties, which regard getting elected as an end in itself. Communist workers, on the other hand, have repeatedly made clear in action that they reject the servile and futile dependence upon capitalist parliamentary forms as a means of emancipation. They enter elections only to expose the sham of capitalist democracy to its trusting dupes. They enter parliament only to discredit and destroy it from within. That great strategist of class war, Vladimir Lenin, has made clear that the struggle is centered outside the parliament, and that Communist parliamentarism must serve only as an auxiliary to revolutionary direct action.

We wish to point out here the distortion of facts by anarchists (and capitalists, too) when they refer to affiliation with the Red International of Labor Unions as "liquidation" or "accepting the dictators of Moscow." This argument about "Moscow dictatorship" comes straight out of the stock propaganda of the Berlin Anarchist International, and it is used within the I. W. W. by those anarcho-syndicalist elements who either went over to the emergency split or who remain in the I. W. W. to serve the interests of the Anarchist International, whose propaganda, by the way, is just as much directed against the "dictators of Chicago"—meaning you, fellow workers—as against the "dictators of Moscow."

THE anarchists perform only a disintegrative work in the labor unions, which they have no more use for than they have for the workers' state, and sometime the I. W. W. will have to disentangle its correct theory on revolutionary industrial unionism from its incorrect anarchist views on the state. To anybody but an anarchist it should be clear that the representative rights and powers of the I. W. W. inside the Red International of Labor Unions would be similar to the rights of the industrial unions represented at this convention in the I. W. W.—and only the anarchistic emergencies call this arrangement a "dictatorship of Chicago."

As to the already disproven charge of "liquidation" — would someone please point out a union anywhere in the world that was "liquidated" by the Red International?

THERE is, however, ground for the charges made by both the I. W. W. and the Anarchist International against each other over liquidation or absorption. On one hand the I. W. W. paper Solidaridad, issue of October 17, 1925, page 2, column 3, charges the Mexican section of the Berlin International, the Confederacion General de Trabajadores, with trying to —"absorb the workers that were not affiliated with a particular union,"—the C. G. T. But—take note—among those the Anarchist International was trying to absorb, were four members of the Mexican section of the I. W. W., which, according to the resolution passed by the last convention of the A. W. I. U. No. 110, are required to uphold in foreign lands the principle of "absorption" and—"initiate workers, singly or in bodies, into the organic union known as the Industrial Workers of the World."

This gives ground for the charge made by the Berlin anarchists that the I. W. W. is "dictatorial and imperialistic." But—this same Berlin group, meanwhile, thru its U. S. section, the emergency split, is busily trying the "absorption" principle on the members of the I. W. W. Fellow workers! Is this not enough to prove the folly of "absorption?" This sort of unprincipled and futile making of war on the labor movement of the world with a force of less than 20,000 members to "initiate it singly or in bodies" should get a definite repudiation from this convention. The only feasible program is that proposed by the M. T. W. I. U. No. 510 for the I. W. W. as a whole to co-operate in the international field with all unions based on the revolutionary class struggle.

ANOTHER case. In Chile there is an organization, founded upon this dangerous policy of "absorption," affiliated with the I. W. W., calling itself the Chilean administration of the I. W. W., using the I. W. W. label and the I. W. W. preamble, yet affiliated also to the Berlin Anarchist International, which is stabbing the I. W. W. in the back with its brand new section, the emergency program split. We declare emphatically that such a situation calls for this convention to state its attitude towards the Berlin Anarchist International of union splitters—otherwise the I. W. W. remains affiliated by way of Berlin, with its own split! Moreover, it is astonishing that some I. W. W. papers support every policy of this treacherous crew, Golos Truzenika, the Russian paper, for example, could well be the official organ of the Berlin International anarchist group, instead of going under the label of the I. W. W. as it does.

Thus we show that "absorption" is fatal and futile, and prove that co-operation is the only policy the I. W. W. can propagate and practice. But the most complete and effective co-operation will come only when all unions of the world are willing to enter into one great international based upon the class struggle for the goal of proletarian revolution, and the I. W. W. would do well not to lag behind history, but begin and keep contact and correspondence with the Anglo-Russian Committee for the world unity of all unions, and thus show that the I. W. W. has not forgotten how to lead the American workers along the pathway to power.

FELLOW workers! Already over one-sixth of the land area of the earth the workers rule, and have ruled for eight years. They have gone thru unbelieveable hardships in battle against the entire capitalist world. Under the Soviet or workers' council form of government the workers of Russia rule the nation. The foundation of the new society within the shell of the old is being laid with the 6,500,000 industrial workers organized in twenty-one great industrial unions of Soviet Russia.

Capitalist and anarchist "news" agencies have continually lied and distorted facts about the conditions of workers under Soviet power. But now the Russian unions are driving these liars to retreat. They go to the workers, the plain workers of other countries and invite large delegations of them, straight from the shops, to visit Soviet Russisa and investigate thoroly, without obligation or hindrance or limitation, the conditions of workers under the Soviet republic. We hope that the I. W. W., if the occasion should offer, will join in the response to such an invitation.

WE know that when the I. W. W. fully understands the Russian revolution, which it will eventually in spite of the anarchists trying to prevent it, the Red International of Labor Unions will be honored by the presence at its council table of delegates from the I. W. W.

In the meantime, in the name of the executive bureau of the Red International, we invite the seventeenth general convention of the I. W. W. to name a delegation, representative of the important industrial unions of the I. W. W. to visit the next world congress of the Red International of Labor Unions.

CZECHO-SLOVAK DELEGATION IN SOVIET UNION MOURNS DEATH OF SOVIET WAR MINISTER, FRUNZE

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R. (By Mail).—One section of the Czecho-Slovak workers delegation that is now touring the Union of Soviet Republics, recently arrived in Moscow, and took part in the memorial ceremonies in honor of the late Soviet war minister, Mikhail Frunze. After the burial the delegates had a lengthy talk with Kalinin in which they compared the conditions of the workers in Czecho-Slovakia with that of the workers in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

Go to Leningrad.

The delegation left for Liningrad later in the day where they will study the various factories and see for themselves the progress made in the greatest industrial establishments for the care of the workers.

The delegation while in Moscow addressed a letter of sympathy to the Executive Committee of the Union of Soviet Republics upon the death of Frunze, in which it points out that after having seen the strength and spirit of the Red Army they were convinced that despite this great loss the Russian workers would close their ranks in a still more determined manner to carry on the work which their Red Army leader left unfinished.

Raps Social-Democrat Press.

The head of this section of the Czecho-Slovak workers' delegation, Tatirek, declared to the workers of Kharkov, after viewing their industries, before leaving for Moscow that "I am ashamed to confess that under the influence of the social democratic press I had always regarded Russia as an economically and culturally backward land. But I have now come to the firm conclusion that the social democratic press reporting is a slanderous misrepresentation of the real situation in the Soviet Union. What we have seen went far beyond our expectations. There are perhaps countries in which the workers are materially a little better off than those in the Soviet Union, but nowhere in the world is there a more progressive, really proletarian legislation than that in Soviet Russia, nowhere in the world is the cultural and economic development advancing so rapidly as here."

Analogy

(Worker Correspondent)

Ice is my name—cohesive, united, strong—
Ride I the river.
Master am I. Make me bigger, oh drops,
Build up my power!
Water is slave, mine now and always,
Made but to serve;
Might is right, steel-like is my body;
Rule I forever!

Moves on the water, southward its course—
Nor answers the boast;
Rises one day, irresistible, mighty;
Smites the bold braggart—
Smashes and crushes, bears to oblivion,
Ice-power no longer;
Sunshine-lapped, runs now in freedom forever,
Slave turned to master.

Chicago Civic Opera Artists Render 'Faust' and Are Much Praised

"Faust," at the Auditorium Theater this week was thoroly enjoyed and fully deserved to be for it was one of the finest presentations of Gounod's masterpiece.

Charles Hackett made an ideal Faust. He gave much feeling to his performance. Miss Edith Mason's beautiful soprano voice and personal charm created a Marguerite that reached a high mark. Virgilio Lazzari's delivery of the role of the devil a part often taken by Chaliapin, the famous Russian singer, was rather unique and truly refreshing. He was a good natured cynic with a fine sense of humor. His bass voice was delivered with a purity of tone that was entirely delightfull. Young Bonelli's performance as Valentin was so excellent that he deserves as much praise as the rest of the leading artists. His voice was good, he used it with ease and with a fine musical sense.

That worker next door to you may not have anything to do tonight. Hand him this copy of the DAILY WORKER.

In Moscow---The Red International Capital

By MORRIS BACKALL.

WHEN I left the neighboring countries to go to Soviet Russia I felt very much ambarassed. The neighboring countries as Latvia, Germany, Poland are full with people that escaped Soviet Russia. They are telling horrible stories. They saw with their own eyes how the inhabitants of Soviet Russia are afraid to talk, to criticize, to express their opinions, because they have a suspicion that every other person is a member of the Cheka. They picture very impressively how the leaders of the Soviet Republics are establishing a caste and are uot of touch with the life of the population.

There is a struggle going on inside of me. If there is truth to what it is said about Soviet Russia, so what happened with the ideal of Communism? With the great teachings of Marx and Lenin?

I had many sleepless nights because of it. But my longing to see Soviet Russia, to breathe the air where the great drama of the social revolution took place—where a new life was created and a new hope was brought about—overpowered my fear and I left for Soviet Russia.

When the train arrived at Zebezch where the line is divided between the old and the new world and I saw a little hut with red inscriptions: Long live the social revolution—Workers of the world unite—and red soldiers guarding with their lives and blood the Socialist Soviet Republics, I felt relieved, and furthermore, when I saw the political militia explaining to every one the laws of the Soviet Republic, and had a conversation with the chief about the new life that springs all over the great country of Soviet Russia, I felt as tho a heavy load was taken off my heart.

The train is moving on Soviet Russia land. We see life in every station. People streaming all over. I walk thru the cars of the train and I see lying on a bench an old man in very simple clothes with a white beard and big, big eyes. "Good evening, citizen," I said to him. "Good evening, brother," he replied. "Where are you going," I asked him, and he said, "I am going to Moscow and then back to Switzerland." "To Switzerland," I wonder. "What for," I confronted him again. He smiled. He understood that I took him to be a peasant. And he said, "I am Pavel Ivanovitch Biriukov." "Oh-h," I said, "the biographer of Tolstoy," and he answered, "Yes, Yes. The Soviet government published my books on Tolstoy, and I am going there for a visit."

I asked Pavel Ivanovich Biriukov, "is it true that the intelligentsia and scientists in Russia are prosecuted?" And he replied, "It is the greatest crime in the history of the world that the intelligentsia abroad are spreading lies about the attitude of Soviet Russia towards its spiritual workers." The Soviet government, he said, is a government of the simple people—of the peasant and the worker. And embodies the ideal and longing of the common people. And those that are trying to hinder the work of such a new country that is seeking itself its goal and its form, are really betraying the ideals of humanity.

From far distant cars people came to hear the wisdom of the old man. And he told how in Moscow there is a Tolstoy Museum, how Yasnaya Poliana is kept up by Sasha, the daughter of Tolstoy. And there were questions asked, discussions, criticisms, bitter criticisms, in some ways, but I heard a love in everybody's heart towards Soviet Russia.

I hear English spoken in one of the cars. I learn a group from America is going to establish a model farm in Perm with 24 tractors. It is made up of robust, tall men and women. In a few minutes we became acquainted. It is late Saturday night. In the morning we'll reach Moscow.

It was quiet all over. But in a corner of the train the American group was still discussing and they sent for me. "What is it, friends," I asked them. And they began to tell me. "You know, we are not going to Soviet Russia because we didn't have anything to eat in America, our stomachs were full, but we were not satisfied, our lives were too dry, too empty, and then some of us went as relief workers in the years of famine in Soviet Russia and we heard the peasants sing and we saw a life that brings happiness. And so we organized to help establish this happiness and this life. And now we think that if we will bring tractors and modern form of industry in agriculture to the peasants, we may fill their stomachs but we will take away their song. And their lives will become as dry and as empty as ours were in America."

I looked at them. I embraced them all. I was happy that they are such big children, with such hearts and souls and that Russia will be able to make use of their sincerity and of their poetry, that America did not crush entirely out of them.

Sunday morning, I heard the conductor shouting "Moscow!" My heart was full of impressions. I heard voices of people but the tune was different than of the people I met in Berlin, New York, Riga, and then Warsaw. It is Moscow! With a different tune and color and tempo. I walk the streets—I am on the Tverskia, Ilienka, Kuznietzki Most, Arbat. Women with red shawls on their heads—men with very simple clothing—with caps on their heads. They occupy the streets. It is their country—their city—their streets. If it happens that a very rich man goes thru he hides himself, as if he would steal his way thru. And the voices are mingled with each other. They talk about the happenings of the day. They are interested in the politics of England, France, Germany and the United States. A lot of book shops. Thick and serious books are looking out of the windows. And signs on the stores tell you of co-operatives, government, trust and syndicate enterprises. A very shabby establishment—maybe private.

But what is that procession? Namarov, from beyond the Caucasus, the member of the Ispolcom, a dramatist and novelist, died. Delegations of factory workers, school children, Comsomol are attending the funeral and the procession occupies the entire heart of the city. I am near the Red Square. The Red Army does not let anybody pass, but the delegations.

"I've just arrived, would you allow me to pass," I asked the guard. "If you will be allowed to enter a delegation, you may," was the reply. And I am already in a delegation and I pass the Red Square. On Lenin's monument I saw Frunze, Zinoviev, Kalinin, with bowed heads. The Red Army band played "Vi Zertvou Pali." And all Red Soldiers took off their hats, bowed their heads and were singing together with the delegations. Soldiers singing revolutionary songs! Those that lived in the old Russia, suffered in the prisons of the country, can feel what I felt at that moment! Tears came to my eyes and I began to feel that Moscow is not only the capital of the Socialist Soviet Republics, but it is the capital of all suffering humanity, that it awakens a longing for real freedom among all peoples on the earth.

Later in the evening I ring up my old comrades. The first one I saw was Comrade Michael Rachkes. What a broadness, what a depth of comradeship was felt. "Why didn't you send us a telegram?" "Why did you not let us know that you are coming, we would have met you at the station?" Rachkes asked. "No," I said, "I wanted to see for myself." And then he said to his wife, "You know, we would change Moscow, if we would know Backall was coming, so he was afraid to let us know." And then we all laughed.

I began to visit factories. On the outside they are gray buildings, as the city itself is an old Russian city. Inside people are busy working. But every workingman, like the workers of the whole factory, feel that the machines which they operate, as the whole life of Soviet Russia, is theirs. The consciousness that grows all over in Soviet Russia that the present conditions of hardships is only temporary, that thru suffering and pain they build a new life not only for themselves but for the whole of humanity, is the international feeling, all over Moscow, in the hearts of the inhabitants.

Moscow is an international revolutionary capital. The streets are filled with the children of India, China, Japan, Africa and European countries. They are studying at the universities of Moscow. They are participating in congresses and conferences.

There is no Ghetto in Moscow. All human beings are alike. Have the same rights, the same privileges, combined with the same ideals and ideas.

I met students of the University of Moscow and I asked them, "What is your aim?" And they answered, "Our aim is to build a new humanity, our services will be for all human beings." And I felt the truth of their simple statements hanging in the atmosphere of Moscow. I heard such words from the mouths of poets in America, in Germany, but they were only longings, sighs, but in the mouths of young Russia, it is a reality. It is a truth.

The Children Fighting "Education" Week

By NAT KAPLAN.

THE children of the workers in the lands of capitalist rule and imperialist domination are born into a world which spells hard work, undernourishment, disease and death. In our own United States the land of plenty (for the bosses) millions of children go to school hungry and ragged.

Millions more are forced at an early age to enter the factories and mills, the canneries and farms and there to labor for long hours in order that they may help to increase a little the small incomes of the proletarian families. American capitalism is the murderer par excellence of the proletarian children of this country and of its colonial and semi-colonial possessions.

Public Schools—Hothouses of Reaction.

The public schools are an inseparable part of the bourgeoisie state rule. The primary motive of the institutions of so-called free education is to turn out as large a number of obedient patriotic wage slaves in the shortest possible time, at the smallest possible expense. The teaching of the three "R's" is but part of the general patriotic, religious, pro-boss propaganda which is dished out under the guise of education.

To save expenses the local politicians on the school boards allow school buildings to go on for years without any repairs thus endangering the lives and health of thousands of children. Thousands of schools thruout the country are veritable fire traps, with wooden steps, no fire escapes and loose chairs in assembly rooms. All the greater economy plans conceivable are adopted to prevent expenditures for the building of new decent school buildings. Tin can portable schools are set up. Platoon, Gary and other machine-like part-time systems are set up in order to save money and to turn out wage slaves like a sausage machine turns out sausages.

American Education Week for Whom?

It is but appropriate that the American legion, the well-known band of strikebreakers, the American education association and the bureau of education should unite in the endeavor to still further poison the minds of the workers' children. For this purpose they have set aside Nov. 16 to the 22nd, as a week of concentrated propaganda to teach the workers' child to be loyal to "its" country and the bosses' rule; to be obedient, meek and superstitious; to be thrifty; to be healthy and to conserve the natural resources of this country.

What cheap cynicism for the rich pot-bellied bourgeois gentlemen of these institutions to come before the workers' children with such words. To tell pennyless children to be thrifty; to tell underfed children to be healthy; to tell propertyless children of propertyless parents to be loyal to "their" country and to conserve "their" natural resources.

American Education Week is not for the workers' children. It is for the children of the bourgeoisie.

The Struggle of the Young Pioneers.

The workers' children organized in the Young Pioneers' League are conducting an Anti-American Education Week campaign during this period. The militant children of the workers will spread the message far and wide of the class solidarity of all the workers' children in the struggle against the bourgeoisie rule.

Each group of the Young Pioneers will set up a campaign committee to guide the struggle of the children in the specific schools. Studies will be made of the conditions in the various schools and concrete demands based upon these conditions will be formulated and linked up with the general slogans of the campaign. Meetings will be arranged to which will be invited the older brothers, sisters and parents of the Young Pioneers. Special efforts will be made to concentrate on schools where there are large numbers of Negro children to draw them into the struggle.

Special efforts will be made by the children to spread mass propaganda thruout the schools on the issues of the campaign. The slogans and demands will be distributed in leaflet form, in bulletin form and chalked on the blackboards and side walks of the schools. When the teachers spread the pro-boss propaganda during this week the children will question the teachers in a systematic fashion and endeavor to turn the ordinary class room procedure into that of a discussion.

Experience in the American Communist children's movement proves that the child of the worker can and does make an excellent fighter in the class struggle. The mis-educators of the American legion, the bureau of education and the American education association will be answered by the militant struggle of the workers' children.

Working Class Parents, Line Up!

The militant parents of the working class must become part of this struggle. A keynote slogan of the Young Pioneers in this campaign is the enrollment of the proletarian parents in the struggles of the children. During this campaign the Young Pioneers, will call conferences of the working class parents and draw them into the campaign. These conferences will serve as the basis for the setting up of Proletarian Parents' Councils of the Public Schools. The parents must help all the actions of the Young Pioneers. They must send letters to the teachers, principals and officials of the board of education protesting against the anti-labor nationalist and religious propaganda which will be dished out wholesale during this week.

The parents' councils must fight against fire trap schools, against malnutrition and unsanitary conditions, against greater economy plans and against child labor. They must fight for the demand: Free food and clothing for the children, at the expense of the state and under the supervision of the organs of the working class. As a fundamental aim the parents must fight for the control of the schools by the parents' councils, the students' councils and the trade unions.

Working class parents! Line up with the children of their struggle. Help to make the Young Pioneers a mass organization of the workers' children. Help to make The Young Comrade the fighting mass organ of the child laborers and the millions of proletarian children in this country.

PARLIAME[illegible] EGYPT D[illegible] BRITISH [illegible]ULE

Anti-British Premier Heads Government

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CAIRO, Egypt, Nov. 22.—Openly defying the troops of the British agent, Ziwar Pasha, who since the events following the assassination of Sir Lee Stack, sidar of the Egyptian army, has been premier of Egypt, the parliament met in secret here and passed a vote of complete lack of confidence in the government.

The secret session of parliament was carried out while hundreds of troops with fixed bayonets paraded the streets, guarding the homes of prominent members of parliament and all public buildings. In spite of the armed forces menacing the members more than three-fourths of the parliament assembled at the Continental Savoy hotel, went into session, passed the vote of lack of confidence deposing Ziwar Pasha, and electing in his place Zaghloul Pasha.

Zaghloul was formerly premier and was forced to resign because of the hostile attitude of England after the assassination of Stack. Ziwar, the British agent who would, if he could, deliver Egypt completely into the hands of Britain, was selected in his place. But his regime has been a stormy one. Never at any time has he had the support of the political groups in parliament. He was tolerated out of fear of British reprisals.

Egypt In Turmoil.

The ferment among the peoples of the near and middle east has had its reflex in Egypt the past few weeks. The native liberation movement has become stronger and more defiant. The Zaghloulists, the nationalists and liberal constitutionalists, have united in a bloc against the British owned premier. The gathering political storm was perceived by the British and their man, Ziwar Pasha, was ordered to institute a reign of terror and decree a virtual dictatorship by dissolving parliament. A decree against parliament was issued and soldiers placed in strategic points to prevent a meeting of that body.

The meeting was held in defiance of the edict forbidding it, is legal, according to the Egyptian constitution, and the act of Ziwar in endeavoring to disperse the parliament is illegal. The vote of complete lack of confidence placed Zaghloul at the head of the government and removed Ziwar.

This move is a severe rebuke to Britain and unquestionably desperate measures will be taken to crush the parliament. Possibility of arrests is not remote. But if parliament is arrested it will unquestionably cause a wave of fury to sweep Egypt.

Britain Desperate.

Britain faces a desperate situation in Egypt. Though recognizing the independence of Egypt following the widespread disorders of 1922, Britain insisted upon maintaining the safety of communication (meaning the free passage through the Suez canal, one

CZECHO-SLOVAKIAN COMMUNISTS POLL CLOSE TO MILLION VOTES

PRAGUE, Czecho-Slovakia, Nov. 22.—In the recent Czecho-Slovakian elections the Communist Party polled one million votes. It was able despite the persecutions of the Masaryk government to poll one vote in every six that were cast in the elections.

The unofficial and incomplete returns place the Communist Party vote at 930,000 in Slovakia alone. The Czecho-Slovakian bourgeois press estimates that the Communists will gain between 27 to 30 places in parliament.

The huge vote which the Comunists were able to poll caused great consternation in the ranks of the bourgeoisie supporters as they realize that this vote is an attack against the capitalist dictatorship in Czecho-Slovakia and that it is a protest against the persecutions of Communist workmen.

In the elections, the national socialists received a vote of 996,000 and the social-democrats 991,000.

Following the announcement of the incomplete election returns, the cabinet, which was formed by Premier Svehla, tendered their resignations.

SHOE WORKERS' ORGANIZATION STARTS DRIVE

Brooklyn Protective Is Making Headway

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BROOKLYN, Nov. 22.—At a mass meeting that filled the Amalgamated Temple here on Friday evening the Shoe Workers' Protective Union initiated a drive that promises to be the most successful yet undertaken to organize the shoe workers in the unorganized shops in Brookolyn and spread to all parts of Greater New York.

In his opening remarks, P. Pascal Cosgrove, organizer of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union in Brooklyn, stated that the conditions of the shoe workers is deplorable in the unorganized shops and that the time is ripe for a concerted drive to get all the unorganized workers lined up in the one great industrial union of shoe workers already so well started by the Protective.

Union Raises Wages.

"The shoe workers are in the mood for organization," said Cosgrove. "The United States government has made the report that in the unorganized shops the shoe workers are getting forty-seven cents an hour. In the organized shops the workers are getting much higher wages, and the peak is

WORKERS WILL HAVE TO PASS UP TURKEY "THANKSGIVING" DAY

Despite the fact that the turkey crop is 3 per cent above normal and the highest prices that the Texas farmers have received for the highest-grade turkeys, range from 26 to 30 cents per pound, those who will attempt to buy it for their "Thanksgiving" dinner will find that they will have to pay 50 cents a pound for the lowest grade and as high as 65 cents per pound for the better grades.

The average working class family when it sits down to its "Thanksgiving" dinner, if it has anything to be thankful for, will have to content itself with a slab of pork at the prices that are being charged for the materials that are to make up a turkey dinner. The estimated price of the raw materials for a dinner is placed at $7.43 for a family of eight, out of which the farmer will get $3.18.

LETTER TO FRAME TOM RAY AS SPY QUICKLY EXPOSED

Bootlegger Is Finder of Fake Document

By A. JAKIRA

(Special to The Daily Worker)

REPUBLIC, Pa., Nov. 22.—Quick and rigid action on the part of the striking miners here and the district office of the Workers (Communist) Party made it possible to expose a frame-up to label Tom Ray, militant miner, as a spy.

At a meeting of the striking miners held in this city, Tuesday night, Nov. 17, a "surprise" was sprung on those present when a "document" supposed to have been found on the floor of one of the rooms of the hall where the miners were holding their meetings was read. The envelope containing the "document" was addressed to "Mr. Thomas Ray, General Delivery, Uniontown, Pa." and was post marked "Pittsburgh, Pa. Nov. 13, 11:30 A. M." The typewritten letter itself reads as follows:

"Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 13, 1925.

ROUMANIAN DEBT PROPOSALS ARE NOT ACCEPTABLE

Deny Same Terms as Granted to Mussolini

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—The American commission negotiating with the Roumanian debt commission here for the purpose of endeavoring to reach an agreement on the debt of $46,000,000, has turned down the offer on the part of that government to fund its debt on terms similar to those granted Italy.

A counter proposal was made by the Americans that is more nearly the settlement accorded Britain, with modification designed to meet the situation in Roumania.

Long Term Proposal.

Though the concessions granted Italy will be refusel, it is known that the time-length will be the same as that of Italy—62 years. The average interest rate may be lower than that granted England and more nearly the French offers.

Higher demands than those imposed upon Italy were for the purpose of beating down the currency of the Roumanian government, bankrupting them and forcing acceptance of the gold standard under the complete domination of the United States. The Roumanian government needs aid in financing its white terror against the Besserabian peasants who are being murdered wholesale and they expect to reach an agreement with the U. S. so that Morgan will aid them.

UNEMPLOYMENT CONTINUES TO DECREASE IN SOVIET RUSSIA

MOSCOW, Nov. 22.—The labor exchanges report that in 1925 in comparison with the previous year there will be a reduction in unemployment of 250,000. The number of unemployed metal workers in July 1924 was 105,000, in June 1925, 82,000, the number of unemployed textile workers in January 1923 was 71,000, in January 1925 only 34,000. The same holds good for other branches of industry. On the other hand, however, the number of unskilled unemployed has increased, whilst a shortage of skilled workers prevails. Next year state industry will have a surplus demand for labor power consisting of 432,200, which includes 184,000 skilled workers.

Unemployment pay in the economic year 1925-26 will amount to 50,000,000 rubles as compared with 25,000,000 rubles last year.

BRITISH AND FRENCH PACT REPORT HOAX

Rebels Still Gaining in Syria

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 22.—Reports being spread in British and foreign newspapers that Britain and France have joined in a secret pact to jointly administer the mandates in Syria, Irak, Palestine and Transylvania, are discounted here, as contrary to fact.

M. Henri de Jouvenal, Paris journalist, who has been appointed high commissioner of Syria was here for a few days and had conferences with Austin Chamberlain, British foreign minister, regarding the situation in the Middle East, but nothing tangible came of them. Announcement was made that a joint understanding had been reached whereby the British and French would cease their diplomatic intrigues against each other in the mandated areas. This pact does not exist on paper and was only based upon a "gentlemen's agreement."

Playing for Time

Everyone familiar with British diplomacy knows that Chamberlain is merely stalling for time and that the intrigues will continue in spite of any agreements, written or otherwise, because of the clash of interests in that part of the world. If Jouvenal really believes the conference with Chamberlain will lighten his task he is doomed to disappointment, for Chamberlain will only take advantage of the information at hand to increase British intrigue.

The report of France accepting an agreement with Britain to cooperate against Turkey's claims in Mosul oil is considered a great joke here, because it can only mean that France gives up all claim to independent action and has submitted completely to the whims and imperialist ambitions of Britain. Considering France's dependence upon the United States of America this story is clearly pure fabrication.

Recruits are still coming to the aid of the rebel forces and the French are steadily losing ground.

'CALL OUT MEN WHO MAN PUMPS,' MINERS DEMAND

Chicago to Hear About Strikers Tuesday

Militancy is beginning to permeate the anthracite strike zone. While the officials expected the strikers, whose funds are very low, and who have to scrimp to keep alive, to sit home and wait until they are told the strike is over, the miners are beginning to feel that they have waited too long. The miners are beginning to complain and say that the strike would have been over long ago, if the maintenance men had been taken out of the mine at the beginning of the strike.

Strikers Desperate.

The demand to take the maintenance men out of the mines was show in reaching the miners, but now everywhere, the miners are beginning to demand this. They realize this is a fight to a finish. The officials are not permitting the local unions to hold meetings, hoping in this way to suppress the demands of the men. But nevertheless, the demand of the miners is becoming stronger.

The situation is becoming desperate in many places. With their funds exhausted, and the local unions instructed by the higher officials to stop giving strike relief, many of the miners' families are facing starvation. Those who have even a little food are sharing it with those who have not.

Officials Crush Militancy.

Every sign of militancy is brutally crushed by the hired thugs of the coal companies who work closely with the local police and the state constabulary, whose brutal terroristic methods have broken many strikes. The officials of the miners' union instead of helping the men are supporting the efforts of the coal operators to prevent the strike from developing into a militant struggle. They openly commended the police for arresting Pat

BILL BEFORE CONGRESS TO MAKE COOLIDGE CZAR IN ANTHRACITE STRIKE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—In legislation presented by Representative Treadway, republican from Massachusetts, the president is given full power to take any steps that he may deem necessary to relieve the "suffering" caused by a strike in the anthracite coal mines.

The bill if passed will place power in the hands of President Coolidge, by means of which he will be able to crush the strike of the anthracite coal miners that are now fighting for a better living conditions in the Pennsylvania coal fields.

AUSTRALIA TO DEPORT HEADS OF RED UNION

Reactionary Election Brings Terrorism

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Nov. 22.—Indignation is sweeping thru the Australian unions at the news of the arrest and threatening deportation of Tom Walsh, president, and Jacob Joanneson, secretary, of the Australian Seamen's Union, following the findings of the deportation board appointed by the reactionary Bruce government.

This follows the re-election of all members of the Bruce government and the re-establishment of all parties in the house of representatives almost as before parliament was dissolved when labor began to challenge the government's policy of suppressing the seamen's strike with wholesale jailings and deportations.

Capitalist or Workers' Dictatorship?

Bruce, the arch-reactionary, prime minister went into the election on the question:

"Shall Australia be governed by a parliament, duly elected by the people under a democratic constitutional form of government, or shall authority be flouted by irresponsible extremists attempting to arrogate to themselves an autocratic dictatorship over the country?"

Bruce charged that the Communists were a great danger and had obtained a foothold in the labor party. As is customary with such timid leaders, Matthew Charlton, chief of the labor party, right away asserted that the labor party repudiated Communism. This repudiation gained no more votes than did Ramsay MacDonald's famous denunciation of the forged "Zinoviev letter." Charlton's only "victory" was getting re-elected himself. But the labor party lost.

Compulsory Voting.

Never in the history of Australia has feeling run so high as in this election, and for the first time the

Strike Against Low Pay of Snaring the Victims of Society

NEW YORK—(FP)— Protecting other people's jewelry and bank vaults is not its own reward, so about 125 burglar alarm men have gone on strike for the 48-hour-$50-week. The men were employed by the Metropolitan Electric Protective Co. and the National Wiring Protective Co. Their jobs were to hasten to the scene when burglar alarms rang out in the night. Hours were 50 and pay from $32 to $42 a week under the old arrangement and when the men protested 10 were discharged.

LOCAL 152, OF THE AMALGAMATED, GIVES BUSINESS AGENTS A BUSY TIME DEFENDING TERRORISTIC GANG

By BEN GORDON.

When Local 152 of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers held its first meeting since the sluggings of Friday a week ago and the Sunday following, all officers and "machine men" were present. The meeting was well attended.

All those present were excited and disturbed about the gangsterism and terror and eagerly awaited the opening of the meeting. They wanted to know what was going to be done about it.

Brother Craft, one of those who had received a broken head and whose picture appeared in the daily press, was present with his head still bandaged.

Victim Demands Floor

The routine business of the meeting was disposed of in a short time and Brother Craft demanded the floor as a matter of special privilege to tell his story and ask some questions. The chairman ruled him out of order. An appeal was taken and he was granted the floor.

Brother Craft spoke for about an hour, telling the story in detail, how he came to the meeting on an invitation; how before the meeting opened a group of gangsters whom he recognized as officials and members of the Amalgamated, led by a "business agent," entered the hall with guns in their hands, forcing everyone to the wall; and how they proceeded to beat up those brothers and sisters present with blackjacks and other weapons.

He demanded that the local at once proceed to investigate the affair and punish those officials and sluggers who participated in the slugging, as they were nothing more than a bunch of gangsters.

Membership Applauds Craft.

Great applause greeted Brother Craft's speech. Everyone present, with the exception of the few diehard machine men was on his feet applauding Brother Craft. "I still have friends in the local," he said in closing.

Business Agent Goldman sprang up at once to "answer" Craft's charges. He tried to defend the officials and gangsters who did the slugging; saying that the Amalgamated is not responsible for all that happened, praising the good work done in the past by these characters. Other business agents who followed made the same sort of argument.

Then came the speakers from the floor, all as one condemning the Amalgamated officials for such action and demanding that those guilty be immediately punished for the crime.

Surprise Official Machine.

Joint Board Delegate Smaller rose to speak. He surprised all the offi-

FEDERAL PRISONS AND U. S. JAILS PROVEN INHUMAN

But Sage Foundation Wants Only Reform

NEW YORK—(FP)—Uncle Sam is a very inhuman jailer, according to the report of the Russell Sage foundation submitted to the 55th annual congress of the American Prison Association. The report deals particularly with the boarding out of 7,000 federal prisoners—including many merely awaiting trial—to local jails over which the federal government has no jurisdiction and many of which are desperately overcrowded, "reeking," the report states, "of physical and moral filth."

The Cook county jail in Chicago, one of the 893 studied, crowds five prisoners in cells intended for one and Detroit, Cleveland, New York are just about as bad.

It is a harrowing story bearing out the muckraking that labor prisoners have already given to these same dens. The report tells of the large percentage of vermin infested pens, of meagerly staffed prisons and poorly trained employes.

"It must be remembered," says the report, "that a large part of these prisoners are unconvicted and a considerable portion are subsequently legally proven innocent; that the law requires that persons accused of crime shall be treated as innocent until proven to be guilty; and that a large part of the prisoners serving sentence are held for non-payment of fine, simply because they owe the government $10, $25 or $100."

Uncle Sam puts prisoners in these local pens because he can do so cheaply. He gets rates per man and woman, from 20c a day in five jails in Porto Rico to $3 per day in three jails in Alaska. The average is 69c per day. The Russell Sage people recommend a national government jail system.

Who Is Responsible?

HERE is a reproduction of another photograph, taken at the same time as the picture published in the last Friday's issue, showing the results of vicious attacks made on a group of members of the Amalgamated Clthing Workers' Union, meeting in a public hall in Chicago a week ago Sunday.

It is known that minor officials of the present Hillman-Levin-Rissman regime in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union instigated these murderous assaults on the members of the union at this Sunday meeting, as well as at the meeting the previous Friday night at Ashland (Carmen's) Auditorium.

Neither President Sidney Hillman, Manager Sam Levin, of the Chicago Joint Board, nor Sidney Rissman, assistant manager, all of whom are fully acquainted with the facts, has so far accepted the challenge contained in the question, "Who Is Responsible?" The story of the meeting of Local 152, published in another column, shows that large sections of the union's membership are determined to get the answer to that question.

Silence Is No Defense.
It Is Rather a Confession.

ADOLPH ZUKOR OWNS AMERICAN CINEMA TRUST

Famous Players-Lasky Controls Theaters

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—The extent to which the famous Players-Lasky corporation producers of the Paramount Films, owned by Adolph Zukor controls the moving picture industry was brought out in an "investigation" before the federal trade commission here. The various stars that have bolted the Adolph Zukor-owned movie trust and have formed their own independent companies testified that the reason that they bolted the movie trust was that the pictures that they played in were sold in blocks with pictures in which mediocre actress and actresses went thru their antics.

"Block System" Control.

It was brought out in the investigations that the trust would sell its pictures on the "block system." A moving picture theater owner in order to get certain feature films with well-known actresses could not rent the single picture but had to sign a contract for a number of films, oftentimes for a period of one year. In this manner, the independents claim that the theaters that ran the Paramount films could not use any other films, as refusal to accept a single picture from the Zukor-owned trust or the use of a movie of another corporation on the same program with the Paramount meant the cancellation of the theater's contract.

It was brought out during the course of the "investigation" that six of the largest New York City moving picture palaces are controlled by the Zukor corporation thru the "block system" method of renting films. It was also pointed out that thruout the country the Famous Players-Lasky corporation has heavy financial interests in many papers.

Not only has Adolph Zukor control of the company that produces the Paramount pictures but he also has heavy financial investments in the Select Pictures corporation.

The First National Exhibitors circuit, into which the independent producers have banded, demands of the federal trade commission that the board order Adolph Zukor to cancel his "block system" method of renting out films and that he be forced to sell the chain of moving picture palaces that he owns and to relinquish control on many theaters in the country.

Zukor After German Company

BERLIN, Nov. 22.—It has been disclosed that the American moving picture representative, Samuel Rachmann, who attempted to gain control of the German independent film producing company, the Universe Film Association, was acting in behalf of the Zukor-owned Famous Players-Lasky corporation.

Under the present agreement with the German companies only one American film can be shown to two German films in the theaters here and the American movie trust wants to be able to send in as many pictures as it possibly can. Negotiations are still under way with the Universe Film Association and it is expected that the company which has found itself in dire financial straits will accept the terms that the Paramount producers are demanding.

Capitalism Cannot Be Eliminated by Legal Means, Says Its Agent

WASHINGTON—(FP)—Under the caption, Wickedness of Desiring Change, the leading editorial in the London Daily Herald for October 27, couples the anti-radical attack of the American Security league on Arthur Henderson, former British cabinet minister, with a statement made by counsel for the British home secretary in the prosecution of the Communists arrested recently in London.

"Counsel for the crown," it says, "made this extraordinary statement: It is in these days perfectly well-known, he said, that capitalism could not be elimınted by lawful means.

"There we have the intention of the home secretary and of the American Security league which attacked Mr. Henderson stated with frank unconcern. Only a lawyer would have blurted it out like that. It is a great advantage to have it admitted that this is what the anti-socialists in both hemispheres are trying to make the world believe."

GERMAN WORKERS SWEATING BLOOD FOR REPARATIONS

Real Wages One-Third American Standard

BERLIN—(FP)—Who are paying the reparations in Dawes-ruled Germany? With worker standards at an appalling level and still falling, with the 8-hour day a thing of the past, and the cost of living and unemployment increasing with the coming of winter, tax figures show that in the past half-year (April to October) the burden has been placed on the workers to the tune of hundreds of millions marks more than was anticipated.

Revenue shows a surplus of 412 million marks over the previous estimate, which will probably mean an increase in the next reparations payment, every cent of which has been ground out of the misery and sweated wages of the German workers.

The figures speak for themselves:

Apr.-Oct. 1925	Revenue-Marks	Estimate
Income tax	1,193,630,000	850,000,000
(Of which—wages gave 749,660,000)
Corporation tax	93,759,000	150,000,000
Property tax	83,724,000	250,000,000
Inheritance tax	14,841,000	18,000,000
Sales and retail tax	799,300,000	750,000,000

In general, while the taxes on wages and consumption show an enormous increase, taxation which particularly affects the capitalists shows as marked a decrease. The heaviest direct burden on the German workers is the income tax, which might be called a wages tax, as only wages of less than $5 a week are exempt. Wages above this are subject to a 10 per cent tax so that the average German wage of about $10 a week is reduced by 50 cents for income tax, not to mention other compulsory deductions for insurance, etc.

The miserable subsistence level of the German workers finds statistical corroboration in figures published by the International Labor office. These show that German real wages are one-third of American wages (the comparative figures are: U. S. A. 183, England 100, Germany 64.) The 8-hour day is only a memory in most industries. Food prices have gone up 10 per cent in October without corresponding rise in wages. Unemployment is showing a huge increase. Being ruled by American finance-capital doesn't exactly mean a merry Christmas for German labor.

Official unemployment figures are 298,000, an increase of 100,000 in the last two months. This represents only the registered unemployed in receipt of full relief. The official journal of the miners' union estimates that the full number of unemployed is 750,000.

German white-collar workers are hit with their manual fellow-workers. Wages are on about the same level and unemployment is severe.

LETTER TO FRAME TOM RAY AS SPY QUICKLY EXPOSED

after getting them out of the printer's shop. Of course you will have to distribute same to keep yourself covered, but you must not let many get out or our clients will charge us with working with their employes instead of for them. Keep playing up to G. P. as he is the strongest man in sight just now. Does he still appear to be as flush as when he first arrived in the region?

"You must be careful about spending as to always have money to pay your way looks bad. Borrow as often as you can as that gives the impression you have nothing but your pay from the C. P."

J. J. O'C.

Dic.
P. S.—M. M.
100-X27

"Sign your number, date and return immediately."

The last instruction was stamped with a rubber stamp. G. P. is supposed to refer to Comrade George Papcun.

Ray Active in Strike.

At first the letter came as a shock to those who have known Comrade Ray and have seen him in action during the strike. Ray was sent to the striking area by the district office of the Workers Party and during the several days that he spent there he was out on the picket line, was distributing leaflets together with other miners, was addressing meetings and was otherwise helping the strike under the supervision of the district office of the party. He returned to Pittsburgh Tuesday morning by request of the party to take up other party work.

Suspicious Individuals.

During the strike several individuals of a rather dubious character among them a well known bootlegger were mingling with the strikers. These individuals were suspected as being agents either of the company or of the union officials who have been constantly attacking Tom Ray for his active participation in the Progressive Miners' Committee. It is remarkable that it was just these individuals who helped to "find" the letter, and who were trying their best to stir up the miners against Tom Ray and the Workers Party. It was a cousin of the above bootlegger who did the "finding."

Investigation Exposes Plot.

Fortunately the miners did not lose their heads and decided that a committee of three shall at once proceed to Pittsburgh to take the matter up with the district office of the Workers Party as the miners have learned during the strike to have full confidence in the party. This was done and the committee of three (among them was also the individual who claimed that he found the letter) arrived at Pittsburgh shortly after mid night. A glance at the "document" was sufficient to convince anyone that it was an attempt at a frame-up in order to discredit Tom Ray and to disrupt the strike. However, in order to clear up the matter and to leave no doubts in the minds of the men out on strike it was decided to lose no time, but to proceed at once to McDonald where Ray resides to investigate the matter. The committee of three, together with the writer of these lines and a comrade from West Brownsville, reached McDonald by machine about 2 a. m. got Comrade Ray out of bed and with his full consent proceeded to search the house. Naturally, nothing of any suspicious character was found.

Further investigation revealed that Ray was in Uniontown on Nov. 13 before the letter reached that city and while in Uniontown he did not visit the post-office. This fact was established by a comrade of Uniontown who was with Comrade Ray during the entire period of his stay there. It was further established that since then he never visited Uniontown again. Comrade Ray left Republic Tuesday early in the morning. The letter was "found" about 2 p. m. Before this time quite a number of men were in the room where the letter was supposed to be found, but curious enough, no one noticed the letter until the bootlegger's cousing happened to come into the room together with the bootlegger himself.

Tom Is Exonerated.

The nature of the letter, the facts quoted above, the actions of Comrade Ray during the strike, the circumstances under which the letter was "found" and numerous ofter facts left no doubts in the minds of the committee that the alleged letter was nothing but a fake and unanimously decided to exonerate Tom Ray and to recommend that further efforts be made to identify the forces behind this attempt at a frame-up. The District Executive Committee of the party of Dist. 5 is now making an effort to locate those responsible for the letter and will continue the investigation until these individuals are identified. There is a firm belief among the miners that some of the union officials who were bitterly opposed to Tom Ray and the Workers Party had something to do with this affair.

Egyptian Parliament Defies British Rule

bank of which is controlled by Egypt). England also must keep strong forces in Egypt in order to control the Sudan to the south, where disorders frequently break out and where the population despises the British tyrant.

The attempt of British agents to disperse parliament, the armed soldiers in the streets and the threat of arrests of the members of parliament prove to the masses of Egyptians the utter hypocricy of capitalist democracy. The Egyptians, torn by series of bitter struggles since the war, will continue to fight until they liberate themselves from the domination of British imperialism.

AUTO FACTORY OWNERS COIN GREAT PROFITS

More Than Double the Profits of 1924

A year of peak profits has increased the wealth of the owners of 11 automobile companies by over $1,000,000,000 according to a survey of the industry by The Wall Street Journal. This huge gain in wealth marks the success of the high speed exploitation of workers that characterizes the industry.

The combined profits of the 11 companies for the first 9 months of the year amounted to $179,488,209, a gain of more than $100,000,000 over the same period in 1924. And Henry Ford is not in the list. Such profits have increased the market value of the stock from just under $900,000,000 a year ago to nearly $2,000,000,000 today.

The 9-months profits of the 11 companies in 1924 and 1925 were:

Profits of automakers	1924	1925
General Motors	$37,416,413	$74,243,966
Chrysler	2,009,083	14,240,875
Hudson	6,317,469	16,722,269
Dodge	9,858,673	19,302,874
Packard	3,643,735	10,318,328
Studebaker	9,703,679	15,157,226
Nash	4,325,241	11,133,411
Overland	2,811,134	13,638,881
Hupp	1,182,342	2,735,746
Moon	526,072	1,123,725
Pierce Arrow	354,154	970,908

The return on investment in these 1925 profits runs to more than 200% in the case of Nash Motors. The return to holders of Dodge common stock cannot be measured because the stock was distributed as a bonus at the recent reorganization by Dillon, Read & Co. Out of the 9 months business Dillon, Read get $6.33 a share on 1,150,000 shares of common for which they paid nothing. Other rates of return in the 9 months are General Motors 26.5%, Chrysler 38.1%, Hudson 126.2%, Packard 43%, Studebaker 18.5%, Overland 83%, Hupp 8.8%, Pierce Arrow 7.8%.

The Hudson company shows the huge profits original investors in the motor industry are making. Hudson Motor started in 1909 with $18,000 paid-in capital. From this beginning its assets have been expanded to over $30,000,000 largely out of profits. It has also paid $15,000,000 in cash dividends. As only $20,700,000 of the assets are directly employed in producing automobiles the 9-month profit of $16,722,269 is more than 80% of the investment. Hudson may make for the entire year over $100 for every $100 invested in the business.

General Motors, the Morgan Trust, has just declared an extra dividend of $5 a share which brings the year's cash dividends to $24 on each $100 of stock.

Machine-Shop Bosses Fights Wage Increases

By JACK
(Worker Correspondent)

At the Thursday evening meeting of the Illinois Manufacturing association, which is composed of machine-shop bosses, it was decided that $2.00 an hour be charged for tool-making and that the bosses agree not to cut prices in the slack season, but to lay off workers.

The conference decided not to give workers an increase in wages and those that attempt to get more are to be laid off. The bosses are out to maintain the present wage scales.

The highest skilled mechanics employed in the plants that are owned by the manufacturers who are members of this association earn from 85 cents per hour to $1.10.

The workers in these shops need to organize in order to combat the attempts of the bosses to resist wages increases. Today the employers may be satisfied with retaining the present scales, but the time will come when they will attempt to cut the low wages that we are now receiving. In order to resist the attempts of the bosses, we must organize into unions and fight them in the manner they fight us—thru organization.

Polish Sector of Profit's Frontier Against Soviet Republics Is Crumbling

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, another shift in the Polish government, that reigns thru murder and imprisonment of workers, finds a coalition cabinet in power headed by Premier Skrzynski.

• • • •

The first fact that should interest revolutionary workers in America is that the "socialist," Ziemierski, is given the "labor post" in this newest version of the Polish anti-working class terror.

In contrast, the Communist, Stanislaus Lanzutski, at one time sentenced to death, still lies rotting in a Polish dungeon, because he urged unity of labor in the great railroad strike that shook the whole fabric of capitalist rule in Poland, one of the most important sector's on profit's frontier against the Union of Soviet Republics.

The "socialists" take a place in the government, to help keep the workers in chains, while Communists are sent to prison for fighting labor's battles.

• • • •

The "socialist," Ziemierski, must join with other executioners of workers in Skrzynski's government, to plead with foreign bankers for loans to help meet huge deficits, brought on to a great extent by the fact that impoverished Poland, with a hungry population of 13,000,000, while unemployment sweeps the big industrial centers, has been forced to support a standing army of 400,000 soldiers. Only two countries are making loans just now—Great Britain and the United States. England can't be expected to invest in such a poor risk, while the international bankers of Wall Street always have another Dawes plan in reserve for every beggar nation. A Dawes plan for Poland means the cutting down of expenditures in government, resulting in the discharge of numerous useless bureaucrats such as infested Russian tyranny under czarism, and forcing huge reductions in the army. Yet imperialist France, itself bankrupt, demands that this Polish lackey of capitalist militarism must not reduce the strength of its murder machine.

• • • •

In a cable from Warsaw, John Clayton, one of the recognized anti-Soviet propagandists of the Chicago Tribune, declares that:

> "Poland, with its 13,000,000 inhabitants, MANY OF THEM POOR IN A SENSE HARLY TO BE UNDERSTOOD IN AMERICA, cannot support an army of 400,000 in addition to the complicated system of state officials, who are a heavy drain on the finances."

Not even the diseased imagination of this pen prostitute could drive him on this occasion to resort to his usual brand of prevarication—something to the effect that while conditions may be bad in Poland, they are worse in Soviet Russia. Economic reconstruction has proceeded so far and so successfully in Soviet Russia, that it has been able to bury the falsehoods of the anti-Soviet liars so deep, that the best of them, like Clayton, are not able to resurrect them.

• • • •

Significant also, is the fact that Archbishop John Cieplak, high in the Roman church, who has arrived in the United States from Poland, is silent on Soviet Russia. While an archbishop in Moscow, Cieplak tried to hide the rich stores of jewels, to prevent them being used to buy food for the famine stricken in 1921. The results were almost fatal to himself. Cieplak, however, has no criticism now to offer of the treatment that he received.

• • • •

Instead Cieplak is spending his time telling the Polish workers in this country that, altho conditions are bad the god of the Roman church will take care of Poland.

In the meantime he is no doubt pulling every wire possible, that connects the catholic church in this country, with Wall Street, in order to get a loan.

But all reports indicate that even the combination of the catholic god with Wall Street's gold cannot save Poland from falling into the hands of its workers and peasants, who alone under Soviet Rule can free the masses from their present agony.

Chicago Will Hear About Anthracite Strike on Tuesday

Every worker in Chicago who wants to hear the real facts of the miners in the anthracite coal strike is invited to attend the mass meeting arranged by the Progressive Miners' Committee at which Pat H. Toohey, member of the national committee of the Young Workers League and youthful strike leader of the anthracite coal diggers; William F. Dunne, of The DAILY WORKER editorial staff who has just returned from the strike district and Alex Reid, national secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee, will speak on "The Anthracite Coal Strike, the United Mine Workers' Union and the Government" on Tuesday evening, Nov. 24, at 8 o'clock at the Northwest Hall, corner North and Western Aves. Admission free.

Japanese Films in U. S. S. R.

MOSCOW, Nov. 22—The present day cinema industry in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is paying great attention to the question of using the cinema as a method of mutual education of the various peoples. At the present time the film "Japan" is being shown in Moscow. This film was brought to the people's commissary for foreign affairs, M. Chicherin, by the Japanese Ambassador Tanaka.

PARASITES ON LABOR SHOWN UP BY INCOME

Known and Unknown, Live Without Work

Who's who in the new feudal nobility? Their ownership of great financial estates in the industrial order gives them the right to live off the work of others. But although you may be working under their managers you don't know who the overlords are.

Who is Lela A. Anson? She must be pretty important. Her 1924 tax was $105,488 giving her an income of about $300,000. That income gives her the power to command the service of 2,000 workers. She can live in luxury and splendor beyond the dreams of the average citizen, without doing a stroke of work herself. Yet her name does not appear in Who's Who in America or in the Directory of Directors.

Who is Kate W. Winthrop with an income tax of $317,634 establishing her 1924 income at about $750,000? This income enables her to use the services of 5,000 workers. Yet neither Who's Who nor the Directory of Directors mentions her.

Who is Jerome K. Hanouer with a 1924 income of $600,000; or R. V. Twombly with an income of $500,000; or A. C. Strong with an income of $400,000; or Paul Berwald with $400,000? These are men who live off the labor of thousands and are responsible for large blocks of ownership in the country's productive enterprises. Only through the income tax returns are they forced into the open and even then society cannot trace just where their power takes concrete shape in controlling wages and conditions in the industries that produce this income.

These names are picked from a single page of tax returns for New York City, published in The Wall Street Journal. The page shows 87 incomes of more than $300,000. But less than half were names whose thrones in our economic order could be even partially located.

Among those better known are Pres. Farrel of U. S. Steel, $300,000; Charles Steele, J. P. Morgan partner and director of the Santa Fe, Great Western, International Mercantile Marine and Cerro De Pasco Copper, $1,000,000; Pres. Ford of U. S. Rubber, $600,000; Pres. S. Z. Mitchell of the 35 or more public utilities controlled by General Electric interests, $700,000; Thomas Cochran of J. P. Morgan & Co., Bankers Trust, N. Y. Trust and a number of copper companies, $700,000; C. H. Dodge, copper magnate and director of National City Bank, $300,000.

These men, only slightly less than Rockefeller, Morgan, Gary, Baker, Ford and their like, stand out as active leaders in the class of absentee owners by whose consent they rule. But A. Rockefeller Prentice, controlling a $900,000 income, is apparently only an heir. The Henry Phipps family with a combined income of more than $800,000 got their fortune from association with Carnegie and Mellon in the days when the steel barons broke the Homestead strike. Now they live lavishly on their huge incomes without the public knowing much about them.

BAKERS' UNION WAGES FIGHT ON BAKERY MERGERS

Attack Union-Smashing Bread Trust

By CARL HAESSLER,
(Federated Press)

Bread eater, bread baker and bread raw material producer (the wheat and rye farmer) will each lose, probably heavily if the mammoth national bread trust continues to develop under its present profiteering ownership.

"The Bakery & Confectionery Workers' International Union has fought the bread trust from the first," says Editor Charles F. Hohmann of The Bakers Journal, the union's official organ. "The Ward Baking corporation is 100 per cent unfair to union labor and the Ward interests are the controlling force in the merger now under way of the three leading national bakery corporations. Ward is open shop and the new trust will be open shop. We have fair and amicable relations with many employing bakers but this can in no sense be said of the Ward shops. Wages, hours and the other conditions so vital to workers in food industries all suffer under Ward domination." The union had to report another loss in membership to the American Federation of Labor in 1925, paying percapita on 21,800 members, instead of 22,200 in 1924 and 28,000 at its peak membership in 1921.

Tho the bread trust recently cut the price of bread to quiet the nation-wide outcry against a bread monopoly; no one believes that this is other than temporary since the promoters are cut-throat profiteers. This is shown by the value of $1,350 a share placed upon the General Baking company stock by the General Baking corporation, the name of the proposed corporation that will make the bread trust a unit in form as well as in fact. This $1,350 value is the exchange for shares that cost $2 each in 1916. Such profit wizards do not keep the price of bread down when there is the least excuse to raise it.

The farmers are already suffering from the bread trust operations. Their grain co-operatives are feeling the effect of the monopolized market for wheat and rye. The history of every trust has been that it squeezes the producer of raw material at one end, the consumer at the other and its own workers in between. This is the case with the meat trust, the sugar trust and the tobacco trust. The bread trust is following suit.

Dutch Police Try to Smash Revolutionary Movement in Indies

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 22.—A Dutch police department arrested on the Isle of Sumatra seven well-known Communists. This arrest caused great indignation in the country and the population attempted to free the prisoners. The "Serekat Rayat," the revolutionary movement of the natives, has in the province of Padenkshes 1,300 registered members. The counter revolutionary party, "Sarekat Islam" is very unpopular among the people.

The Dutch member of parliament, De Wiser (Communist) addressed a question to the colonial minister on the repressive measures against Communists planned for the Dutch-Indies. De Wiser demanded information on the prohibition of meetings at port Semaranga on the Isle of Java and on the arrest of the editor of the Malayian newspaper Api (Fire) and the internment of the propagandist Alimin.

RUSSIAN ENGINEERS ARRIVE IN NEW YORK TO MAKE PURCHASES FOR SOVIET GLASS INDUSTRIES

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Following the signing of a contract last June by which the Amtorg Trading corporation has procured for the All-Russian Syndicate of the Silicate industries the exclusive rights to the "Owens flow machines" for the whole territory of the Soviet Union, a delegation of engineers representing the Soviet silicate and glass industries arrived here last week for the purpose of placing additional orders for machinery and equipment. The commission is headed by Paul E. Kivgillo, vice-president of the All-Russian Syndicate of Silicate Industries known as the "Prodasilicate."

Employ 60,000 Workers.

According to Kivgillo the Prodasilicate controls in the Soviet Union about 150 glass factories and 25 chinaware and porcelain factories employing more than 60,000 workers. Owing to the general economic revival of Soviet Russia these factories, altho working to their full capacity, are not sufficient to satisfy the growing demand for their products. The Prodasilicate has therefore undertaken to build 15 new glass works and 4 chinaware factories in addition to introducing new model machinery in the existing works. Two window glass factories of the Furko system are nearing completion and will start operation in the near future. The delegation headed by Kivgillo arrived here after an extensive tour of Europe where orders for machinery and equipment running into millions of rubles have been placed. A large order for window glass was placed by the Prodasilicate in Czecho-Slovakia.

American Purchases.

In this country the Prodasilicate has already purchased, thru the agency of the Amtorg Trading corporation, 23 bottle machines of the Lynch type and other equipment beside the Owens flow machine patent right and two machines of the type AY and AZ with equipment. During their present stay in this country the representatives of the Prodasilicate will make a study of the newest technical methods and equipment used in the American glass industry and they will conduct negotiations for the construction of some of the new factories in Russia.

Well Received in Europe.

During their sojourn in Europe the representatives of the Prodasilicate have received proposals from European manufacturers offering terms for the construction of these factories. Offers have also been received from a number of American firms and it is the view of Kivgillo and his associates that these preliminary offers warrant the belief that the American terms would prove more acceptable than those of the European manufacturers.

While in Europe Kivgillo entertained certain propositions for concessions in the building up of the Soviet class industries. However, the negotiations have not been concluded awaiting the results of Kivgillo's mission in this country.

Headquarters in New York.

The delegation has made its headquarters in the offices of the Amtorg Trading corporation, 165 Broadway, which acts as the American agent of the Prodasilicate.

Maine Governor Wants Prison Industries to Produce More Profits

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 22.—Prisons should be primarily profit making industrial enterprises seems to be the opinion of Governor Brewster of Maine. This ku klux klan backed official has succeeded in getting the resignation of Warden Lester D. Eaton and now expects to reorganize prison industries on a more profitable basis. Maine's prisoners have been employed in broom making, competing with blind workers; in harness, wagon, carriage and sleigh making, competing with free skilled labor.

Brewster says that there is no market for goods produced at present in Maine's prison at Thomaston. He claims that the prisoners can be worked nine months a year on the roads and that the rest of their time should be spent in manufacturing goods which could be exchanged for other products. Maine prisoners are paid a small amount at which prison workshop overseers complained that they could not get enough work out of the men because of the semi-self-government scheme allowed. In 1923 the state prison commission voted to introduce a system of graded compensation, with 50 cents daily maximum and minimum amount due at release $25. The prisoners work 54 hours a week.

Production of brooms for the year ending June 30, 1925, was 14,245 dozen in Maine prison. In 1920 the profits of this division of work were $23,521; of the harness department, $20,333; carriage and sleigh, $11,697. Governor Brewster has not indicated what industries he will suggest for the prison to succeed the present ones which he considers insufficiently profitable.

MOSCOW, Nov. 22. — During the last five months the exportation of Soviet petroleum to Constantinople has increased five-fold. This has led to a 16 per cent reduction in oil prices. The first consignment of 40 plows, manufactured in the factories of the agricultural machine trust, has been sent to Constantinople.

FRENCH ATTEMPT TO KINDLE HOLY WAR IN SYRIAN MANDATE

BEIRUT, Syria, Nov. 22.—French imperialism not satisfied with the massacre of thousands of natives in the Musselman section of Damascus has now instigated a religious war in Syria. The French are handing out arms to the christians in the territory that was mandated to France by the league of nations and are sending military officers to different settlements spreading fairy tales of brutalities committed by the Druses.

The French in many villages have spread the story that in an attack on a number of villages, the Syrian tribesmen have killed off all the Christian men and raped their women, in an attempt to arouse many of those who are not in favor of the present French rule to unite with the imperialists on the basis of a religious war.

PRESIDENT OF CLERKS' UNION HERE TUESDAY

Meeting to Further Organization

H. J. Conway, international president of the Retail Clerks association, and John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, will speak at the mass meeting to be held Tuesday night under the auspices of Local 180, Drug Clerks' Union, to discuss the subject of organization.

Organize the unorganized drug clerks! This will be the slogan of the gathering.

The meeting will begin at 8 p. m., at the regular drug clerks' union hall, presided over by the union officers, P. S. Coffey, president, and F. M. Schomer, secretary. All clerks interested in unionization are invited.

Andy Tries Everything But Unionism; Playing Employers' Own Game

WASHINGTON — (FP) — Andrew Furuseth, author of the seamen's act and president of the Intl. Seamen's Union of America, has drafted a minority report on behalf of the labor group in the forthcoming merchant marine conference summoned by the U. S. chamber of commerce, disclosing that the business interests are plotting the nullification of the seamen's act in all essential features.

Furuseth will lead a fight in the conference against all proposals of subsidy, as well as against all schemes for weakening the existing maritime laws. Pres. Green of the American Federation of Labor is supporting his attitude. When defeated by the shipowners and other business men in the conference, the labor group will take the fight to congress.

Federal Judge Says U. M. W. of A. Illegal

WASHINGTON—(FP)—Have a federal judge in West Virginia declare unions illegal; that puts them down and out! This is the principle laid down by Ned McLean's Washington Post in a front-page alarm story to the effect that the United Mine Workers of America have been outlawed by a ruling of judge McClintic, the most active federal injunction judge in the soft coal state.

The article claims that government officials feel this decision ties their hands from any intervention in the anthracite strike. Pres. Coolidge canily declines to comment, beyond suggesting that the decision may be reversed on appeal. McClintic rules that the U. M. W. A. has been a violator of the anti-trust law from the very beginning, and any dealings with the union by public officials are illegal acts.

Russia Exports Coal to France from Donetz

MOSCOW, Nov. 22.—Donetz coal is rapidly conquering a place on the French market by its quality and cheapness. In addition to the steamers Kios and Vakhta four ships, Antoinate, Pupney, Syremas and Godulis have been chartered in Marseillas for October for bringing to France more than one million poods of Donetz coal.

RUSSIAN TRADE WITH ITALIANS GROWS LARGER

Russian Exports Reach 138,000,000 Lire

MOSCOW, Nov. 22—During the half-year preceding the conclusion of the commercial treaty between Italy and the Soviet Union, the Soviet Union purchased 2,500,000 lire worth of goods in Italy and sold 58,000,000 lire worth. The major part of the latter sum consisted of grain sales.

After the signing of the trade agreement, the ratio of exports to imports changed radically. From April 1, 1924, to May 1, 1925, the Soviet Union trade delegation to Italy made purchases of Italian goods aggregating 53,900,000 lire in value, while the Soviet Union's exports to Italy for the same period amounted to 138,000,000 lire. In general, the increase of the total trade turnover between the two countries was accompanied by a more favorable relation between Italy's exports to and imports from the Soviet Union (in 1913 Italy's imports from Russia totalled 73,000,000 lire, while her exports to Russia amounted to 16,000,000 lire).

Trade on Increase.

The growing tendency of Italy's exports to the Soviet Union has been particularly marked during 1925. Thus, in January Italy exported 3,500,000 lire worth of merchandise to the Soviet Union; in February, 6,000,000 lire; in Mrach, 12,000,000 lire; and in April, 18,000,000 lire.

Snub LaFolletteites in Next Congress Is Republican Program

WASHINGTON—(FP) — Members of the Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota and New York delegations who supported LaFollette in the 1924 presidential campaign are to be excluded from Republican representation on all important committees of the new house, according to the new floor leader, Tilson of Connecticut.

Navy Department to Have Chinese Coolies Build Six Gunboats

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22—Whether the Diesel engines for the six United States gunboats which are to be built in China for use in patroling the Yangtze river shall be built by Chinese coolies in China or by American trade unionists in the Brooklyn navy yard is now an issue between Secretary of the Navy Wilbur and the metal trades department of the American Federation of Labor. Two conferences, attended by a delegation of union spokesmen from the Brooklyn yard and by Secretary Berres of the metal trades department, has been held with Wilbur. Another has been promised.

These gunboats are to be of such a design as to make their passage across the Pacific impossible. But the navy yard workers, seeking regular employment, argue that the engines can and should be made in the United States and shipped to China.

White Russian Workers Strike Against Polish Ochrana Persecutions

WARSAW, Nov. 22.— In the last few days the Polish Ochrana has carried out mass arrests in White Russia, particularly in the district of Novogrudok. The intention is to liquidate the insurrectionary groups.

The official figures give the number of prisoners as 150. The fate of the arrested is as yet unknown. Despite the raging terror of the Defensive the White Russian Communist Party is continuing its activity. Leaflets of the Central Committee of the Polish Communist Party and the West White Russian Communist Party are being distributed in Novogrudok calling for a general strike against the oppression of the White Russian minorities and the persecution of the workers' teachers and students. In the Donetz district a strike of wood workers has broken out and neither the military nor the police are able to force the workers back to work.

Dark Halls Not Needed to Show Russ Movies

MOSCOW, Nov. 22—In certain Moscow cinemas, films are being shown in lighted halls. The light does not diminish the clearness of the picture and almost completely abolishes flickering.

Experiments in this direction have been conducted in America and Germany and proved rather costly. Presentat'ons in the Union of Socialist Soviet Russia are much cheaper as a result of the independent discovery of a Russian engineer, Porokhovshtchikov.

Such an arrangement in cinemas is obviously of great importance not only because of eliminating injury to the eyes but also because it does not [illegible] any specially adapted premises. This new method can be applied even in the open air and therefore greatly facilitates work in the villages.

SOVIET RUSSIA THE ONLY LAND WHERE TEXTILE WORKERS' WAGE GOES UP INSTEAD OF DOWNWARD

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—(FP)—More workers, more spindles and looms in operation and enormous gain in production are outstanding facts in the annual report of the All-Union Textile Syndicate of Moscow, made public at the offices of the All-Russian Textile Syndicate, the American purchasing agency, at 120 Broadway, New York.

The data in the report substantiates the assertion of Alexander Gumberg, vice-president and treasurer of the All-Russian Textile Syndicate that Russia's industrial comeback during the past year has been remarkable. Gumberg spent the summer in Russia.

Wages Raise Only in Russia.

With the increased production and profits has come a considerable advance in wages and improvement in housing, said Mr. Gumberg, though his office—a purchasing and not a producing agency—is not directly concerned with that phase of the problem. It might be added that in no other nation have the textile workers registered such gains.

American cotton and woolen workers were reduced 10 per cent in the last year in the face of rising living costs and the British woolen workers have just held their wage level even by a long strike.

Marvelous Progress.

The climb of the textile industry from the low mark of civil war days in shown by the following table giving the working force employed at cotton manufacturing and the yearly production of finished goods figures for four fiscal years:

	Number of Workmen	Finished Goods (in meters)
1921-22	152,585	288,218,913
1922-23	181,824	539,453,575
1923-24	219,316	806,803,249
1924-25	256,012	1,500,000,000

Cotton Trade With U. S.

Cotton spindles gained from 1,974,121 to 5,333,580 in the same four-year period and looms from 59,325 to 134,052. Linen production nearly quadrupled and wool more than doubled but the cotton gain is more significant because cotton is the basic textile industry in Russia. The textile syndicate imported 300,000 bales of cotton from America in the last year at a price of about $43,000,000, 460,000 bales being raised in Russian fields.

The coming year the domestic varvest is expected to reach the 900,000 to 1,000,000 bale mark but American purchases may gain at the same time because of the continued growth of the industry. Russia last year bought much finished cotton goods stuff in Italy, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland and France but the rehabilitation of the home manufacturing will make this unnecessary expect in certain specialized lines.

Purchase of American machinery by a machinery mission soon to visit America will depend for its volume on the credit arrangements that may be made.

The All-Russian Textile Syndicate is one of the Russian industrial "trusts" with the management of which the Russian unions play a large part. If manufactures 98 per cent of the total textiles made in the nation. Its products are distributed through 107 wholesale and retail stores. The syndicate's profits last year were about $41,886,334 measured in American money.

Utica Textile Union Still Hesitating on Strike Against Cuts

UTICA, N. Y., Nov. 22—Twelve hundred workers from the Utica Steam & Mohawk Valley Cotton Mills have temporarily called off a strike that had been scheduled to compel a return to the old wage scale. Action is deferred till Mayor Frederick Gilmore makes good or fails on an arbitration offer.

The workers struck earlier in the year under the leadership of the United Textile Workers, returning on a cut while an investigation of costs was made.

New York State Board Blames Employers for Industrial Fatalities

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 22—Increasing industrial fatalities in New York state cause industrial commissioner, James A. Hamilton, to caution employers and workers to exercise more care on the job. The latest industrial death figures show, however, that employers are more usually at fault than workers. There were 166 death claims filed in workmen' compensation offices in October.

One of the women workers killed was an actress whose stage manager made her dive into a shallow tank. Another was a ladies' garment worker who fell down an elevator shaft. Four building trades workers employed by one construction firm were killed when scaffolding upon which they were working collapsed, pitching them eight stories. One of three deaths from poisonous substances was that of a tracer in a shoe factory. His hand and arm infected by a solution used in tracing and polishing shoes brot death. As usual construction workers are most numerous among those killed at work.

Admits Murders.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 22.—S. C. Stone, 60 year old stepfather of Jack Hoxie, motion picture star, has confessed the brutal murder of the two Martin girls, May 12, and Mina, 8, whose tragic disappearance and deth mystified southern California for more than a year, the district attorney's office announced

Spanish Socialists Support De Rivera's Fascist Dictatorship

MADRID, Nov. 22.—When one of the leading socialists here was approached and asked why the socialists did not take action against the Spanish fascists—"Citizen's Militia"—which was organized by Primo de Rivera to combat the growing revolutionary working class movement in Spain, he stated that the socialists in Spain had no reason to complain about the directorium which had abolished the Communists and given the socialists a possibility of peaceful development.

The fascist organization which was organized by Primo de Rivera has nearly a million members—according to its claims—composed of businessmen, landowners and a number of workers and peasants who have been lead into believing that their conditions will be bettered by the fascist dictatorship.

Bulgarian Communist Party Grows Despite Bitter Persecution

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Nov. 22.—Despite the terror which has thrown hundreds of active Communists into jail, the Bulgarian Communist Party continues its activities. The influence of the Communist Party has grown to such an extent in Bulgaria, that the social democrat editor and leader Haralambi was forced to admit to French delegation which had arrived here to aid the comrades who are imprisoned, that: "Our Communists are not only brave, they are heroic. Their party was not weakened by the massacres, but on the contrary, their influence grew, the people are following it not only in the villages, but also in the towns. Altho the party is actually only fighting as a rear guard now, it is fighting energetically and this energy gains the great influence on the masses of the workers."

Opera Costumers Strike to Enforce Union Conditions

NEW YORK, Nov. 22—Costumers for New York's Metropolitan Grand Opera company are striking against the management's sudden reversion to nonunion conditions after five years' dealing with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. Pickets from the union march before the opera house made famous by its "diamond horseshoe" where New York's "400" display themselves be-jewelled in opera season. The Metropolitan locked out the union before the expiration of its agreement, came to a temporary settlement and again broke faith, precipitating the strike. Some of the skilled costume makers have been employed by the opera company, whose principal backer is Otto Kahn, banker, for 15 years.

CREDIT BOOM HEADED FOR A BIG BREAK

Banker Warns Panic Is on the Way

By LELAND OLDS.

Stop, look, and listen! Whether planning to invest in a little Florida land, in a share of industrial stock or just trying to prepare for days when jobs will be scarce, watch your step.

There is little doubt that good business will prevail during the early months of 1926 but genuine reason for doubt about business after that. So says vicepresident L. P. Ayres of the Cleveland Trust Co. in its midmonth bulletin. Ayres is a very good business observer.

He says cautiously: "Sometime in the future building must slow down. When that happens real estate booms will calm down also. If the automobile manufacturers really built next year all the cars they are now planning to build, that industry will surely oversupply its market. Some time the possibility of expanding retail sales of all sorts of goods by selling on easy partial payments will reach and pass the limits of its usefulness. The time will come when even the Florida boom will be checked."

Ayres thinks these developments may overlap and intermingle toward the latter part of 1926. He points out as elements of weakness in the present situation (1) the fact that millions of people of slight financial means have mortgaged their future incomes for present satisfactions, (2) the fact that the newer finance companies have been organized by salesmen and promoters who can be expected to get by only so long as competition is easy and credit cheap, and (3) the fact that the operations of these companies have been made possible by bank credits on terms which will be made more rigorous whenever interest rates advance.

Ayres believes that the real break in the stock market will be postponed until after January 1 by the desire of people to keep their stock market profits out of this year's tax returns. When they rush to realize the paper profits of the boom by selling their securities the results are likely be spectacular.

Signs that Ayres' forebodings are not far ahead of events multiply. First the Boston federal reserve bank raises its interest rate. A sharp break in the stock market follows. Cleveland federal reserve raises its rate. There is a probability that New York will follow in three weeks. The first cut in automobile production is announced by the Willys-Overland Co. Watch your step!

"Christian" Lithuania Tortures Political Prisoners in Kovno

KOVNO, Lithuania, Nov. 22.—Several guardians of the local prison headed by an agent of the secret police, Bronzas, broke into cells, where political prisoners were secluded, and, threatening them with revolvers, dragged out of the cell the prisoner, Kalenda, threw him down on the floor, after having broken his fingers during the fight. Twenty-two prisoners, who protested against this violence, were locked up. On the next day the same guardians took out of the lockup prisoners Lewis Preskin, A. Lifshitz, Loukashevitch and Strubbris, undressed them and beat them with "nagaikas" giving each one 35 to 45 blows.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE BACKS STRIKERS

Backs Hillcrest Silk Mill Workers

WEST NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—The International Labor Defense has immediately come to the aid of the Hillcrest Silk Mill strikers who were arrested for peacefully strolling up and down before the mill at half past four in the morning. The policeman insisted that this was no time to picket altho he knew that the scabs were being brot in at that time. When the strikers insisted on walking two of them were arrested and fined by the police magistrate for "disorderly conduct." The court expressed the opinion that the strikers were not allowed to induce others to leave employment or to tell others of the strike.

Arrest Picket.

On Wednesday Albert Weisbord, organizer for the strikers and secretary of the Central Bureau of the United Front Committees of Textile Workers was also arrested for "disorderly conduct." His disorder consisted in that he went up to a worker at a very considerable distance from the mill and asked her if she was working in that mill which was on strike. At this a policeman came along and using his hands freely made Weisbord move on and then arrested him for disorderly conduct.

At the hearing before the night magistrate of the police court, Weisbord pointed out that the police had threatened to put several strikers in the hospital, that they had actually seized several strikers and frisked them, feeling them all over ostensibly for revolvers or arms but as Weisbord pointed out it may very well be that they were trying to plant such revolvers on the strikers. The strikers are all residents of the town for many years and are most of them married and for the first time on strike. This handling by the police has infuriated them as they have never been accustomed to such treatment before. The answer of the court to all of these charges was the outrageous statement that the police have a right to search without a warrant anyone whom they may fancy has arms at any time. Also the strikers have no right to approach anyone, ask them if they work in the mill, no matter how politely the question may be put. Weisbord was fined ten dollars.

I. L. D. Backs Strikers.

The International Labor Defense has furnished money for the fines and means to push these cases to the limit. The case of the Hillcrest Silk Mill strikers is the fight of thousands of weavers of Hudson county, New Jersey, Astoria Long Island, New York City and Brooklyn and must not be lost.

A big dance, mass meetings and other means of raising funds and publicity for the strikers are being planned by the United Front Committee of Textile Workers of Hudson county with headquarters at 393 Broadway, Union City, New Jersey.

Workers (Communist) Party

Chicago Now Completely On Shop and Street Nuclei Basis

By MARTIN ABERN.

SHOP nuclei in printing, clothing, harvester, railroad, and electric plants were organized at the Section Four reorganization meeting of Local Chicago, Workers (Communist) Party on Wednesday, Nov. 18, 1925 at Roosevelt Hall. Three hundred members registered at this meeting, a number slightly larger than at the Section Six meeting, the week previous.

The total number of shop nuclei in Section Four is nine: three in clothing shops, with 5, 4, and 6 members respectively; 16 in The DAILY WORKER printing nucleus; three in each two other large printing establishments; 12 in a harvester concern; 14 in an electric plant; four in a railroad freight house.

Twelve street nuclei with a total membership at present of 187 members were also organized. About 75 members living or working in order sections are being attached to units in other sections.

Of those present, 126 had union affiliations, as follows: Teamsters—1; carpenters—4; Amalgamated Clothing Workers—22; International Ladies' Garment Workers—4; Track repairers—1; Hod Carriers—6; Food Workers—5; Office Workers—10; Typographical—15; Newspaper drivers—1; Sign painters—1; Journeymen Tailors—1; Barbers—4; Cabinet makers—2; Electrical workers—4; Wood Turners—2; Cleaners & Dyers—1; Butchers—1; Blacksmiths—1; Leather workers—1; Metal Workers—1; Shoe Workers—1; Miners—2; Chauffeurs—1; Laundry Workers—1; Coopers—1. A compilation of the entire city will be made shortly.

Section Six Secretaries Meet Tonight.

Temporary secretaries of the street and shop nuclei organized at the Section Four meeting have been appointed. These secretaries will hold a meeting to organize a provisional section comimttee, on Monday, Nov. 23, 1925 at 6 p. m. at the District Office, 19 South Lincoln street. All secretaries have been instructed to attend.

All other sections now have temporary section committee organizations and are proceeding to the work of getting the shop and street nuclei to function.

It must be emphasized that all officers in the shop and street nuclei and the section committees are only temporary. These were either appointed or elected at the section meeting to start the functioning of the newly organized units. Regular elections will be held later in the nuclei for nuclei officers and also to elect delegates to a section conference which will elect a permanent section committee.

Comrades Being Transferred to Shop Nuclei.

Further, it will be necessary to transfer many active comrades who are not in shop nuclei, to shop nuclei organizations to aid in their work. No comrade is permanetly in a shop nucleus but is subject to transfer at any time. There are many potential shop nuclei to which comrades will be attached. During the period of the section reorganization meetings, such transfers were not made; all comrades were placed in party units as they belonged according to the registration. With all section meetings over, transfers can now be made with the best possibilities for good results.

900 Comrades in Shop and Street Nuclei.

Nearly 900 comrades have registered thus far in Chicago or approximately 80 per cent of the membership. Additional registration cards are coming in daily and the percentage of those who are coming into the reorganized party will be materially increased. All the nuclei are on the job reaching the comrades who failed to register at the section meetings. The party now has the task of developing the street and shop nuclei in existence, to organize live sections, sub-section and nuclei executive committees and to draw in the entire membership into work in the shops and factories. A better organizational base for work has been laid. It has been demonstrated, even to the most skeptical, that the membership would respond to the reorganization. Articles reviewing the complete reorganization of the party in Chicago, the trade union composition, character of the nuclei, etc., will be written.

How to Strenghten Our Press

ARTICLE TWO

(b) Factory Nucleus Newspapers.

NUCLEUS newspapers make an individual appeal to the workers of a special enterprise. Therefore, they make a stronger impression than the dailies, which in the first instance are dearer and which, moreover, approach the workers as a whole. The circulation of factory nucleus newspapers creates the basis for the mass circulation of the Communist daily press. The shortcomings which were hitherto noticeable in connection with the publication of nucleus newspaper, are as follows:

(a) Only some of the factory nuclei publish nucleus newspapers.

(b) The publication of such papers is not regular.

(c) In most cases, there is not enuf life in nucleus newspapers. They fail to connect factory questions with the general political questions. They do not give enuf illustrations. Their technical make-up is frequently uninteresting.

(d) Many nuclei in enterprises where we are in a majority do not publish nucleus newspapers, as they are of the opinion that this is presumably not necessary. In such cases, it is generally the Communist factory councils which endeavor to prevent the publication of nucleus newspapers.

International Press Day should be used for the encouragement of the publication and development of factory nucleus newspapers. The following measures will be necessary:

1. Factory nucleus newpapers should be published for all big and medium sized enterprises. Wherever no nuclei exists, the leading organ should instruct factory or street nuclei to collect suitable material and to make up a factory newspaper for the respective enterprise to be sold outside the latter.

2. The leading organs of the party control factory nuclei and ascertain the reasons for the non-publication of factory nucleus newspapers, or find out why they are not published. Agitprop departments attached to the leading party organs are under the obligation to support the comrades in connection with making up nucleus newspapers. In big enterprises, where we are as yet weak, the upper leading organs of the party should also provide financial support to make the regular publication of a nucleus newspaper possible.

3. In order to improve the contents of nucleus newspapers, the agitprop departments should give the agitprop organizers of the nuclei definite political instructions, and should also draw their attention to drawings, caricatures, etc., contained in some periodicals, which could be easily redrawn for nucleus newspapers. The agitprop departments of the upper leading organs of the party should criticize the contents and technical makeup of nucleus newspapers and express their opinion in writing to the factory nuclei.

4. Model factory newspapers should be published in the illustrated newspaper of the party. In those sections of the Comintern, where the publication of factory newspapers is in its initial stage, it would be useful to reproduce in the newspaper a full sized nucleus newspaper and to publish pictures of necleus newspapers from other sections of the C. I. on a reduced scale.

5. The party bookshops and literature secretaries are to be informed where they can obtain technical material for the makeup of nucleus newspapers, at a cheap rate (for instance, the necessary material for the hectograph, duplicator, etc.).

6. The technical makeup of the factory newspaper should be reproduced at conferences of nucleus leading officials. For this purpose, the respective leading organ of the party should prepare in conjunction with the leading organ of the nucleus of the text for a nucleus newspaper. During the conference, the text is written down and duplicated in order to let the comrades see all the manipulations.

7. The Communist printers' fraction should be mobilized and comrades capable of making up nucleus newspapers or headings for such papers in the printing works where they are employed should be brought into touch with the leading organs of the nuclei in the msot important industrial enterprises.

8. The leading organs of nuclei should be induced to give reports on the history of their nucleus newspapers, on the methods of circulation and the success achieved. These reports should be published in the daily press.

BUFFALO NOTES.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 22.—At an emergency membership meeting of all the party branches in Buffalo, the sum of $125 was raised to help save The DAILY WORKER, and the party printing plant. A DAILY WORKER Rescue Squad was also elected; it consists of members from each of the Buffalo branches, and is setting to work to devise ways and means of immediately raising money for the daily on a larger scale.

New York Hike Postponed.

New York, Nov. 22—The date for The DAILY WORKER hike had to be postponed again, this time until Dec. 6, on account of the Juniors' convention.

HELP SAVE THE DAILY WORKER!

Muskegon Reorganized Into Three Shop Nuclei

By AL SCHAAP.

MUSKEGON, Mich., Nov. 22.—Local Muskegon of the Workers (Communist) Party in District Seven, has completed its reorganization on the basis of shop nuclei.

A 100 per cent registration was taken at a general membership meeting that was held by the branches in this city.

This registration brot out the fact that sufficient comrades to organize three shop nuclei were employed in the larger factories in the city. Five other comrades, none of them employed in the same factory were attached to the shop nuclei, thereby liquidating the problem of a street nucleus.

The three shop nuclei organized are in a radio manufacturing concern employing several thousand; in a foundry employing over 500 workers and in an automobile concern employing several thousand.

Another general membership meeting is being called where speakers in foreign languages as well as English will talk on the functions of the shop nuclei. At this meeting it is planned, to have the initial meetings of the shop nuclei, where organization secretaries, agitprop directors and delegates to the city committee will be elected. Plans will also be laid for the distribution of The DAILY WORKER, other party papers and shop papers which the nuclei will publish shortly.

The comrades in Muskegon are undertaking the work on the shop nuclei basis very enthusiastically, altho there are quite a number of foreign-speaking elements among the membership.

Chicago School to Hold Novel Affair Thursday

In addition to educational opportunities the District 8 school offers Chicago workers a "Hard Times Party" that promises much to give thanks for on Thanksgiving night, Thursday, No. 26, at Imperial Hall, corner Halsted and Fullerton Aves.

In these days of "prosperity" (read Coolidge's speech) the party will be a "Hard Times Party" with prizes for the most poverty stricken costumes and "fines for finery."

A Finnish orchestra will furnish tantalizing tunes—and other features are being kept secret for surprises. Admission for the party and dance will be 50 cents.

DAILY WORKER RESCUE PARTY IN WILLIAMSBURG ON THANKSGIVING EVE

NEW YORK, Nov. 22—On the evening before Thanksgiving, Wednesday, Nov. 25th, a DAILY WORKER Rescue Party is scheduled for Royal Palace Hall, 16 Manhattan avenue (near Broadway), Brooklyn. Readers of The DAILY WORKER from all over New York and Brooklyn should attend this affair, as the evening before Thanksgiving is just as good a night for dancing as a Saturday night and no one needs to work Thanksgiving day. So, at the Royal Palace in Williamsburg there will be music and dancing until the early hours of the morning at The DAILY WORKER Rescue Party.

Everything Done Double at New Years' Eve Ball

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—The New York Workers' School, the Young Workers League, and The DAILY WORKER, are pooling their forces to make the biggest New Year Ball "that ever was" to ring out the old year on December 31.

The two big halls in Harlem Casino, Lexington Ave. and 116th St., have been engaged for the occasion and two bands, and two sets of entertainers are expected to provide the merriment. The proceeds of this triple affair will be divided between The DAILY WORKER, the Young Workers League, and the Workers' School.

Tickets are 50c, if purchased in advance of New Year's Eve, but those people, waiting till the night of the affair will have to pay 75c, at the door. Tickets may be procured from any of the three organizations mentioned, at 108 East 14th Street.

NEWS OF EXPLOSION AT FORD'S PLANTS IS CAREFULLY WITHHELD

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 22—Ford's River Rouge Plant again took its deadly toll of human life and mangled bodies, when an explosion of shellac and gasoline occurred in the motor assembly building. Three were killed outright and seventeen wounded, some of whom are not expected to recover.

Not a word of this disaster has appeared in the local capitalist press and details are very difficult to secure.

Hardly a day goes by but what the Ford plant takes its toll of human life. Each department has its own emergency hospital and a line is always waiting for attention to minor and major wounds received in the Ford productive process.

A. F. OF L. CHIEFS FOR ADHERENCE TO WORLD COURT

Where Morgan Goes They Also Go

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22—The executive council of the American Federation of Labor reaffirmed its adherence to the world court of international justice and advocated participation in the court by the United States.

In every manner possible the federation voices the desires of the House of Morgan. The officialdom of the labor movement never makes a move until the trail has been blazed by the agents of Wall Street. Then the federation lines up its forces behind the procession.

It is conceded even by Borah supporters that a sufficient number of members of both houses of congress are pledged to the adherence to the world court to secure favorable action. Then the A. F. of L. will probably acclaim Morgan's victory as vindication of their policy of "rewarding friends and punishing enemies."

Shoe Workers' Union in New York City in Organization Drive

reached in the Protective where the wages are the highest in the industry, running up to $75 and over per week.

"We want not only good wages, but more sanitary conditions, and above all more even employment. We are also going to force the employers to furnish all the machinery, so that the lasters and others will not have to carry their own heavy tools as they have to do now. And we are not going to ask the masters what the agreement shall be, but we will make the agreement ourselves and tell the owners to sign on the dotted line. This we can do if we are organized."

Get Power.

The next speaker was J. O. Bentall of The DAILY WORKER. He pictured the necessity of the workers getting together, showing first how the capitalist class is organized. "Your bosses are organized one hundred per cent. They pull together and protect themselves against any demand made by the workers. They have the police, the courts, the legislatures, the governors, the congress, the president, the army, the navy, the jails, the penitentiaries and everything else that they need in the process of making profit out of the workers. Out of the 300 shoe shops in Greater New York you have about sixty organized. I want to come back and speak to you when you have 300 shops organized 100 per cent.

"Get power—power in the industrial field. Also get power in the political field. You should be in control of the police, the courts, the legislatures or whatever form of power you may adopt. Get a workers' government that is adapted to the conditions of the workers. Organize your own labor party and get into the fight for your class. Join the workers of all countries in their plans for international trade union unity and become a part of the militant world proletariat that is destined to own and rule the whole earth."

Enroll Many Members.

A. Sormenti spoke in Italian and A. Petri in the Hungarian language, making clear the object of the drive to the different language groups in the industry. L. Landy spoke in Jewish.

J. D. Nolan, general president of the Shoe workers' Protective Union, came to the meeting quite unexpectedly and was received with enthusiasm when introduced. "There is nothing in this world that the workers cannot have if they use their intelligence and organize. There is only one place for the workers in an industry," he continued, "and that is in the organization of the workers which will function for the workers."

Many were enrolled at the close of the meeting. The union is keeping up the drive and will have another meeting in the near future.

Village Libraries Increase.

MOSCOW, Nov. 22.—The number of village libraries has increased to 13,771 and there are 11,143 librarians.

Class in "Capital" Meets Tonight

By EARL R. BROWDER.

The second meeting of the class in Capital, which meets Monday night at 19 So. Lincoln St., will discuss the questions printed in The DAILY WORKER last Monday, and the papers turned in by the students on these questions.

Following are the answers to last week's questions (Capital, Vol. I, pages 41-48):

1. "The wealth of those societies in which the capitalist mode of production prevails, presents itself as 'an immense accumulation of commodities', its unit being a single commodity."

2. A commodity is an object that satisfies some human want, which is produced for the purpose of exchange, and not for the consumption of the producer.

3. The two fundamental factors of a commodity are use-value and value; the former being the substance of all wealth, whatever may be its social form and as varied in nature as there are kinds of commodities; the latter being the common unsubstantial reality in each commodity, a congelation of homogenuous labor power, of labor power expended without regard to the mode of its expenditure.

4. Use-value is the particular quality contained in each separate commodity to satisfy a particular want; exchange value is the form in which the value (the quantity of homogenuous labor power embodied) of a commodity is expressed.

5. Commodities of such different qualities as corn and iron may be placed in relation of equality (a certain amount of one equalling a certain amount of the other) by establishing the measures of each (bushels and hundredweights) of each which contain an equal amount of the common "something" which is value.

6. Use-value plays no part whatever in exchange, except that a commodity must have use-value of some sort; if it is useless then so is the labor contained in it; but the use-value plays no part in determining the relations of exchange.

7. The only common property of all commodities is that all are products of labor.

8. Exchange-value is the only form in which value, the congelation of homogeneous human labor power, can manifest itself or be expressed.

9. The value of a commodity varies directly as to the quantity, and inversely as to the productiveness, of the labor incorporated in it.

10. Every use-value does not necessarily have an exchange-value, for not all use-values are products of labor (air, etc.); but every exchange-value must also have a use-value, for if the commodity becomes entirely useless than the labor expended upon it becomes useless also, and the article loses its value.

Questions for Second Lession.

(Vol. I, pages 48 to 63.)

1. What is the two-fold character of the labor embodied in commodities?

2. Why must the useful labor embodied in a commodity be of a different quality from the useful labor embodied in another commodity?

3. What are the elements which combine to make use-values? Give an example.

4. If we establish that the value of a coat is equal to the value of 20 yeards of linen, does this establish that the two commodities contain equal use-values?

5. Is it possible to establish an equation between things which are qualitatively different?

6. If an equation can exist only between items of the same character, what is the common element in the quation: "One coat equals 20 yards of linen?"

7. If the product of the labor of a tailor (the coat) can be equated to the product of the labor of a weaver (the linen), does this prove that behind the different use-values of the two kinds of labor there lies something which is common to both? How and why?

8. How is it possible for there to be an increase in material wealth without an increase in values?

9. What are the two poles of the expression of value?

10. Explain the importance of and the quantitative determination of the relative form of value.

WORKERS STRIKE HEAVY BLOWS TO SUPPORT COMMUNIST PRESS

America's working class stands steadfastly behind The DAILY WORKER in its struggle to win the long, hard fight against its capitalist debtors. On Saturday, $1,081.54 was added to the fund that is to preserve the world's first English Communist daily newspaper. Of this, $398.85 came from Los Angeles, Cal., where comrades of the WORKERS PARTY have mobilized every effort to save labor's press. From Oakland, Cal., too, came a large donation, sent by the Lettish branch, while Ohio sent almost $200.00, including $79.00 from the Lithuanian party branch of Cleveland and $64.00 from Youngstown. The itemized list is as follows:

The Movement for World Trade Union Unity

By TOM BELL.

This is the seventh instalment of a series of articles dealing with the question of World Trade Union Unity. This instalment deals with the American Federation of Labor and World Trade Union Unity.

• • • •

The American Federation of Labor and the Movement for World Trade Union Unity.

In policy and organizational forms the American Federation of Labor is one of the most backward trade union movements in the world. Samuel Gompers during his long reign as president moulded its policies to suit the needs of the American capitalists. This policy is being continued by his successor William Green.

Th estimation of Gompers by Green given in the following statement in his speech at the Atlantic City convention of the federation throws a flood of light on the entire outlook of the bureaucracy:

> He first attracted my attention in particular because he set his face against the efforts that were being made to bring about a general strike of all the trades in sympathy with the American Rilway Union strike in 1894.

The A. F. of L. has 107 International Unions affiliated to it composed of 31,261 local unions with a total membership of 2,878,297, according to the 1925 report.

The bitterest sort of craft prejudices are systematically inculcated into the membership of the various unions. The officials look upon "their" union membership as something to be carefully guarded against the poaching of other union officials. Jurisdictional quarrels break out periodically and the spectacle of officials fighting over as to which shall "possess" a certain category of workers is always present.

Not only regarding membership do jurisdictional quarrels break out, but also regarding the work to be done by certain unions. The Carpenters' Union and the Sheetmetal Workers' Union are continually at each others' throats over the question of which shall work on metal trim doors and windows. These quarrels keep the unions in perpetual turmoil and breed in the workers the idea that they must fight each other to preserve their interests.

As a matter of fact the A. F. of L. unions have merely organized the fringe of the workers of America. The really successful A. F. of L. unions are those which cater to the highly skilled workers, such as the various branches of the printing and building industries, certain trades in the metal industry, and so on.

According to the census there are 41,614,284 persons over ten years of age gainfully employed in the United Sttes. Of these 32,710,495 are wage workers. Of this huge number of wage workers about 4,000,000 only are organized. The A. F. of L. unions have nearly 3,000,000 million membrs, and the Railroad Brotherhoods, not affiliated with the A. F. of L., have about three-quarters of a million members,. Other independent unions in the food, leather and metal ludustries have very few members and are not influential. The Industrial Workers of the World has shrunk to a mere shadow of its former self and has less than 20,000 members. Thus one-eighth of the wage earners in this country are organized today.

Of the basic industries only the building, coal mining and railroads are organized to any extent. About a half-million coal miners are organized. A quarter-million are outside of the union. At the end of the world war the sixteen unions in the railroad industry had about 1,300,000 members; today they have altogether about 700,000. In 1922 the railroad shop craft unions had 400,000 members; today they have 100,000.

In the food packing industry only a few thousand workers are organized out of the half-million employed. In the steel industry there are a little over thirteen thousand members in the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers. In the automobile industry out of the half-million workers employed a few thousand are organized in several craft unions and the independent Auto Workers' Union. In the lumber industry a few thousand are organized in the I. W. W., and the same applies to agriculture. Out of the three-quarters of a million workers in the textile industry about 30,000 are organized in all the competing unions.

During the world war hundreds of thousands of workers flocked to the unions. For instance, 150,000 textile workers were organized; today about 30,000. Up until 1922 there were 1,300,000 organized in the railroad unions; today there are about 700,000. The Machinists' Union had over 300,000 members at the end of the war; today it has about 100,000. The packing house workers were organized strong enough at the end of the war to force the packers to grant increases in wages and the 8-hour day in the large centers such as Chicago; today open shop conditions prevail in the packing houses. The membership of the A. F. of L. unions in 1920 numbered over 5,000,000; today it is less than 3,000,000. In 1920 the independent unions had 1,000,000 members; today they have much less than that.

The factors responsible for the decrease in union membership were:

1. The severe economic crisis of 1920-21 which threw millions of workers out of work.

2. The capitalists and their government, and all its agencies: courts, troops, police, newspapers, etc., taking advantage of the economic crisis launched a great offensive on the workers. In this offensive the capitalists reduced wages, lengthened hours of labor and smashed unions.

3. The unions having a policy of class cooperation instead of class struggle, led by ten, fifteen and twenty-five thousand dollar a year agents of the capitalists, and divided into over a hundred craft divisions, were unable to lead the workers in the struggle.

4. The great mass of workers absolutely unorganized were used as a weapon against the organized workers.

5. The 6,000,000 unemployed workers being unorganized were a reservoir of strike breakers used by the capitalists in the struggle.

This offensive of the capitalists was well organized and planned and carried out with military precision. The railroad shopmen's strike of 1922 is an example. Seven out of the sixteen unions were picked out by the capitalists and defeated. The unions of the running trades remained at work as the bosses knew they would. A sweeping injunction was secured by Atty. Gen. Daugherty against the shopmen which practically prohibited them striking. Hundreds of strikers were arrested for violations of the injunction; others were framed up. Scabs were employed to break the strike. The result was a terrific defeat for the shopmen from which they have not yet recovered.

A factor that assured the victory of the capitalists in this struggle was the trade union officialdom. The officialdom of the running trades unions prevented the workers striking along with the other workers. The Lewis officialdom of the United Mine Workers safeguarded the mines of the operators by keeping the maintenance men at work while the miners were striking. The officialdom as a whole was opposed to fighting back the capitalist offensive and aided in the defeat of the workers by preaching class cooperation thru negotiation, arbitration and acceptance of wage cuts, etc.

The disunity in the ranks of the workers coupled with the existence of millions of unorganized workers aided the capitalists. Craft after craft was defeated by the bosses while the other craft unions in the same industry continued at work and aided the bosses to smash their fellow workers.

As a whole the capitalists suceeded in defeating the workers. Skilled workers were treated more gently than others, in keeping with the capitalist policy of bribing certain sections of the workers and using them against the other workers. For instance, workers in the printing industry received no wage cuts; the running trades on the railroads were cut only 12 per cent, while the unskilled workers received cuts two and three times that amount, and so on.

During this period the capitalist government openly acted as the executive of the capitalist class against the workers. The Daugherty injunction against the shopmen, Harding's order to the state governors to use troops to secure the operation of the coal mines in 1922, are examples the workers cannot afford to forget.

The post-war offensive of the capitalists of the U. S. on the standard of living of the workers in this country show in a nutshell the effects of the policy pursued by the trade union movement of this country. That policy is summed up in a single phrase: Class co-operation. This policy is based upon the idea that there is an identity of interests between capital and labor; that the workers and capitalists are partners in industry; that they both share in the wealth produced, and they must co-operate with each other for their mutual benefit.

The facts of everyday life prove this to be false. The bosses seek to increase their profits by wage cutting, lengthening the hours of labor, or speeding up the workers. The workers, on the other hand, seek to better their conditions by raising wages, shortening the hours of labor, and resisting the introduction of speed-up systems. On every point the interests of the workers and capitalists are opposed. One can only gain at the expense of the other. Therefore, all talk of co-operation between them is false.

Yet this is the official policy of the A. F. of L. This is preached by thousands of union officials in all the trade unions in the country. Out of this policy comes the idea of compulsory arbitration, as in the International Typographical Union; because of this policy trade union leaders compromise with the bosses and refuse to use the maximum strength of the organized workers to secure their demands as is shown in the refusal of the United Mine Workers' officialdom to call a strike of the bituminous miners while the anthracite miners are on strike, or even pull out the maintenance men who are protecting the mine owners' property while the strike is on.

This policy of class co-operation is responsible for the weakness of the trade unions and the defeats of the workers. The only successful policy for the workers is that of class struggle. The interests of the workers and capitalists are opposed at every point. They are enemies, and the class war is as much a war as any war between capitalist nations. In this country the class war has been bloody. From Homestead to West Virginia the capitalists have used violence against the workers. Even tho the capitalists use every method to get the workers to believe in class co-operation, and support those labor leaders who practice it, they do not believe in it but use all methods to subdue the workers as the history of the labor movement shows.

The A. F. of L. officialdom does not merely content itself with preaching class co-operation. They practice it. Not only that; they are rapidly turning the unions into adjuncts of the capitalists. The unions are being turned into instruments to keep the workers in subjection to the bosses thru the "Baltimore and Ohio Plan," labor banks and life insurance schemes, "group production," etc.

While the A. F. of L. officially condemns company unions it favors such thinly veiled company union schemes as the "B. & O. Plan." Under this plan the capitalist does not need to organize the workers in a union—the A. F. of L. union performs that task. The union becomes responsible for speeding up the workers, and maintaining discipline in the shops. In return the company "recognizes" the union, and the management meets along with representatives of the different departments to devise ways of "eliminating waste." Wm. H. Johnston, president of the Int. Assn. of Machinists, brazenly laid the whole scheme bare when he stated that the union will sell labor power to the companies just as manufacturers of materials used in production do.

This whole trend toward making the unions part of the productive machinery of the capitalists is shown by the following quotation from the report of the A. F. of L. executive council at the Atlantic City convention.

> Production is a group undertaking. It involves finding the best ways for the group to work together. This is the field of personnel relations research. It is of the utmost importance that the trade union should be adequately represented in this field in order that technicians and research workers may at all stages have their attention called to the functions of the trade union and that this necessary agency may be taken into consideration in the development of policies and not have to contest for a place after conclusions are formulated. Trade unions which represent the cumulated experience of many years have a most important contribution to make to this developing field.

In other words, the bosses should recognize that if they give "recognition" to the trade union officialdom production could be greatly increased. No cleared declaration of a complete abdication of any fight against the capitalists was ever made than this.

The only request made upon the capitalists in return for the trade unions aiding in the increase of production is as follows:

> Efforts to improve production methods and eliminate waste must be accompanied by reasonable assurance of regularly of employment.

That "regularity of employment" is non-existent in this country today and a further speeding up of the workers will make it impossible is shown by the figures of employment and production for the past few years. While production increased between 20 to 30 per cent since 1914 the number of workers employed is below that of 1914. Taking average employment in 1923 as 100 per cent, September, 1925, has fallen to 90.9 per cent. On the same basis September, 1914, was at a 94.9 per cent level. The significance of this is seen in the increase of production and population (15 per cent) during this period.

Turning the unions into efficiency departments for the capitalists, and giving up all struggle for the interests of the workers, will further increase the mass of commodities produced and displace still more workers.

The whole tendency of capitalist production is toward the displacement of workers as the following shows: In 1916 it took 1 hour 42 minutes of 1 man's time to make one pair of shoes; today it takes 54 minutes. In 1850, production per man employed was 25 tons of pig iron; today it is 1,179 tons. In 1891 it took 14 to 16 hours of one man's time to produce one long ton of steel; today in Pittsburgh and Chicago it takes 1 hour and 54 minutes. In industries the development has been the same: More production with less workers.

Under these conditions it is a direct betrayal of the workers' interests for the A. F. of L. officialdom to speak of using the trade unions to aid in production methods and at the same time expect steady employment for the workers.

The policy of class co-operation, combined with craft unionism and the existence of millions of unorganized workers leads to defeats for the workers of this country. Those who wish to perpetuate this suicidal state of affairs in the trade union movement are aiding the capitalists against the workers.

Toohey and Alex Reid because they spoke at a mass meeting.

In order to acquaint the workers of Chicago with the situation in the anthracite strike zone, the Progressive Miners' Committee has arranged a mass meeting at Northwest Hall, North and Western Aves., on Tues., Nov. 24, at 8 p. m.

To Speak Tuesday.

Pat T. Toohey, youthful leader in the strike and Alex Reid, national secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee will speak. Admission is free and all workers, and especially union men, are invited to attend.

Wm. F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER is returning from the strike fields in time for the meeting and will have live interesting information for the workers who come to the meeting.

Metropolitan Grand Opera Is Open Shop; I. L. G. W. Picketing

NEW YORK—(FP)—Costumers for New York's Metropolitan Grand Opera Co. are striking against the management's sudden reversion to non-union conditions after five years with the International Ladies Garment Workers union. Pickets from the union march before the opera house made famous by its "diamond horseshoe" where New York's 400 display themselves in opera season. The Metropolitan locked out the union before the expiration of its agreement, came to a temporary settlement and again broke faith. Some of the skilled costume makers have been employed by the opera company for 15 years.

Kharkov Workers Protest.

KHARKOV, U. S. S. R. (By Mail).—A mass meeting took place in Kharkov of workers and political immigrants from the Balkans. After a report upon the terror in Hungary and the process against the five hundred peasants in Bessarabia, the meeting adopted a resolution greeting the heroic attitude of the arrested Hungarian revolutionaries and demanding that the international proletariat take steps to prevent the trial of Rakosi and his comrades. The meeting also demanded the formation of an international non-party commission to examine the cir umstances of the process against the Tatarbunar peasants.

Discover Radium in Murman.

MOSCOW, Nov. 22.—An expedition sent to the Murman coast by the Academy of Sciences for the investigation of the Khivinsky mountains has discovered rich accumulations of new radium deposits in two places on the White Sea coast

Amalgamated Local Gives Business Agents Busy Time at Meeting

cials and the machine men. His speech was a condemnation of those responsible and a demand for punishment of the guilty. He also suggested that the local instruct its joint board delegates to bring this matter before the joint board and demand action at once.

Smaller was followed by the secretary, who spoke in the same way: "These actions and tactics are fascist tactics and we ought to be ashamed of ourselves in permitting fascist methods to be used in our Amalgamated."

A motion was made that the joint board delegates be instructed to take the matter before that body and demand condemnation for those responsible, and punishment for those who participated—in both the Friday membership meeting and the Sunday morning meeting. This was too much for the business agents. They were determined to defeat the motion.

Sing a Different Song.

They took a different course, this time. They pleaded with the members not to pass the motion. They admitted that the slugging was wrong, that it "should not have happened," but argued that the local should not have the motion in its minutes, that it would be "a disgrace."

They argued: "We cannot allow the outside world to know about it. Our enemies would take advantage of it. Should the union be raided, such records would do the union harm." Strangely enough, they did not think of all this when they sent the gangsters to beat up the members!

Pretty Poor "Victory."

A vote was finally taken—and by use of all the parliamentary tricks in the book, by all the machine methods they used, they did contrive to defeat the motion. But only by one vote! Gangsterism is not safe in Local 152 with such a majority of workers who know who is responsible and who demand punishment for those who bruise and beat their brothers and sisters.

INDUSTRIALIZE AGRICULTURE IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Captain Hibben Tells of Training School

NEW YORK—(FP)—Action rather than parliamentarism and talk is necessary to make the world over for labor, says Capt. Paxton Hibben, reserve army officer. In Russia's experiment lies the hope of workers of the world, Hibben told the League for Mutual Aid upon his latest return from Russia, where he first served in 1905 for the U. S. diplomatic corps.

Russia's salvation is in industrialiation of agriculture, says Hibben. Large scale, machine agriculture will knit together individualist farmers and will make their organizations more like unions of city industrial workers. Hibben is connected with Russian Reconstruction Farms, an American organization which sends tractors and agricultural machinery to a model demonstration farm near Rostov-on-Don where thousands of young Russians are trained. Hibben said United States recognition of Russia would help Russian farmers get tractors and harvesters faster by credits like those given western American farmers.

Wipe Out Color Line in Longshore Union

NEW ORLEANS—(FP)—By unanimous vote the white and colored longshoremen who have been on strike for two years hereafter will function as one organization. Harry Keegan, white, is president, and Mose Johnson, late president of the Negro body, has been elected vice president of the amalgamated unions.

Britain's Assault on Communists

The Baldwin government of Great Britain faces a grave situation. On every side it is sorely beset with the contradictions of capitalism. The imperialist vortex in which changes, deeply affecting the destiny of nations, occur over night, has dealt heavy blows against the economic life of Britain. British colonies and dominions no longer absorb the industrial products of the mother country. Investment capital has enabled them to establish their own industries and compete with England itself. From the position of markets for products they become competitors of the industries of the British Isles.

The efforts to increase the exploitation of the peoples of the East meets with opposition as the nationalist movements against imperialism develop. The inspiration for the great wave of anti-imperialism is to be found in the growth and prosperity of the Soviet Union. Hence the bitter hatred against the proletarian revolution in Russia, and those who advocate the principles of proletarian revolution at home.

In the home industries the situation grows steadily worse. The Dawes plan is working to the disadvantage of British industry. The coal and steel industries have been hard hit. The army of unemployed, since the war a serious problem, is rapidly increasing.

A drive against the workers at home must be made and has already been launched in the arrests of Communists, the vanguard of the working class. Britain, like the United States, always fires the opening gun of a war on labor against the most advanced section.

The outcome of the Scarborough labor congress, its favorable attitude toward Russia and the question of world trade union unity, was a challenge to the British imperialists. It means that British labor will refuse to participate in an armed struggle against Russia, and that there will also be the most strenuous resistance to wage cuts. It means furthermore that efforts will be put forth to bring the exploited colonial peoples into the world trade union movement.

British imperialism is fighting back. The Communists, in the front line trenches, have met the first impact of the blow. Unless labor in general resists this blow and comes to the defense of the Communists the next blow will be dealt the main body.

Incidentally it should not be forgotten that Mr. Ramsey MacDonald and his red baiting, time serving crew in the British labor party aided and abetted this assault upon labor by the despicable actions at the Liverpool congress of the labor party, where most of the time was spent maligning the Communists.

The objective conditions for a challenge to British imperialism are at hand. Instead of crushing the Communists the assaults of the government will only strengthen our movement, bringing to the attention of millions of workers the vile role of the MacDonalds and the fear of Communism in the quaking hearts of the imperialist government. This understanding is essential for the workers whose task it is to crush both the treacherous ex-premier, MacDonald, along with the tory premier, Mr. Baldwin and his government.

For the Line of the Comintern

The remarkable Communist gains in the municipal elections in Germany last month, where the large proletarian centers such as Berlin and Bremen increased their representation in the city councils, as well as the gain in the smaller localities, are testimonials to the wisdom and superior leadership of the Communist International.

The German Communist Party, in its efforts to eliminate the right wing tendencies of the Brandlerites, who made such a miserable fiasco of the revolutionary situation in October, 1923, had to depend for leadership upon the Ruth Fischer-Maslow group, a mixture of intellectualism and leftism. Under the leadership of this group the party drifted toward sectarianism. Worse still, no efforts were made to follow the line of the Communist International. A system of double-entry bookkeeping was established, whereby the Ruth Fischer-Maslow group paid lip service to the decisions of the Comintern and then wrote and published articles trying to swing the membership away from that policy with the argument that the tendency of the world party was away from the decisions of the Third Congress and toward the right. Realizing the hopelessness of rescuing this leadership from its confusion and the plain outstanding fact that the party under such leadership was stagnating, the Comintern took decisive steps to place the party in the hands of better elements, proletarian leaders, who would adhere to its line.

Instead of antagonizing the social-democratic workers, a distinction must henceforth be made between the membership and the treacherous leaders of that party. The first result of this was the Berlin united front in the elections that enabled the party at one stroke to re-establish itself as a vital part of the life of the working masses of Germany. In this maneuver the Communists gained tremendously, defeating the bourgeois bloc in the city council, even tho the social-democratic vote declined.

The sectarianism that vitiated the trade union work is corrected and the damage done will be overcome.

The resolution of the Workers (Communist) Party of America places the party in this country definitely on record behind the Comintern in its decision on the Germany party situation, and pledges us relentlessly to fight every deviation from the line of correct Communist tactics.

The German party is the second party in the Communist International. We believe that the new leadership of the German party, in which we have full confidence, will soon fulfill its historic mission—mobilize the masses of Germany for the overthrow of the capitalist class and establish the dictatorship of the proletariat in that country, thereby defeating the machinations of the imperialist plunderers trying to reduce Germany to the position of a colonial dependency and a pawn in the world struggle between the imperialist powers.

HENRY FORD—AMERICA'S DON QUIXOTE. By Louis F. Lochner. With a preface by Maxim Gorki. International Publishers, New York. Price $3.

IF the forlorn slaves divested of everything that passes for initiative and reduced to mere automatons, whose labor power goes to pile up the enormous profits for Mr. Henry Ford, want to learn to what idiotic uses the wealth they create is occasionally put we recommend this book as a revelation.

If they imagine that Edsel Ford, heir apparent to the Ford billions, is a whit more intelligent than his notoriously half-witted father, they should read the account of the musical accomplishments of Ford Junior. The young man's idea of entertaining pacifist ladies and gentlemen of the intelligentsia is to play a drum solo to the accompaniment of an Edison phonograph. Those who had to smirk and endure this afflictiton, like all gentlemen and ladies must when the fond parent is showing off the idiot child, were Mme. Rosika Schwimmer, the Hungarian pacifist, and Mr. Lochner, the author of the book.

As a drum virtuoso, Edsel should qualify for a place in the United States government alongside those other eminent musicians—Mr. Dawes who plays the fiddle and Mr. Coolidge who takes lessons on the saxaphone.

The Ford slaves will also get a thrill out of the description of the ornate mansion at Dearborn their master hired other slaves to build for him. Henry gleefully displayed his tile swimming pool and the magnificent pipe organ installed in the place.

Rivalled Noah's Ark.

AS a menagerie Noah's ark might have surpassed the Ford peace ark, but unquestionably there were zoological specimen on the latter that the proprietor of the ancient ark never dreamed of. Most of them were publicity seekers whose skins had been well tanned from basking in the limelight. So habituated were they to spouting before any and all who would consent to listen to them that they devoted a part of each day to haranguing each other. These "daily discussions" aroused so much mirth among the reporters (who accompanied the expedition and had their expenses paid by the wealth gouged out of the Detroit workers) that they dubbed the good ship "Oscar II." a traveling chautauqua. The only chautauqua attraction missing was the late Bryan, the prince of peace from Nebraska's shimmering plains, and he promised to meet the menagerie at the Hague where the Ford mission for "continuous mediation" was to be established in order to "get the boys out of the trenches by Christmas."

Mr. Lochner informs us that the date was not necessarily arbitrary. If not by Christmas, then by New Years; if not then, Decoration Day; then the fourth of July. Just so the holiday was American and christian. If the armies fought thru New Years and into the next year they couldn't stop on the second day of January, but had to at least continue until Lincoln's birthday.

Pacifists, single-taxers, renegade socialists, birth controllers, artists, pro-Germans, playwrights in embryo, settlement workers, jay-bird lawyers, statesmen and just plain unadorned adventurers comprised most of the queer crew that sailed on the Oscar II.

Tho Mr. Lochner denies the weird tales of reporters to the effect that the ladies and gentlemen aiding Mr. Ford to spend his money for the purpose of establishing peace before Christmas indulged in excesses of violence against each other, he does admit there were some heated discussions. Mr. Lochner, the author, who acted as impressario for the peace ship expedition, categorically denies the story that he had Mr. Ford tied to his bunk in a stateroom because of the auto magnate's violent outbreaks against his brothers and sisters in Christ.

Exit Mr. Ford.

MANY exciting experiences are related by Mr. Lochner in the time intervening from the day the ship left New York harbor on December 4 until the approach of Christmas, which found the expedition in Norway. The decisive day was approaching. It was the 23rd day of December. In forty-eight more hours Christmas would dawn. The day of the days.

But stealthily and under cover of the penultimate night—the fast but one before the day of salvation would break—Mr. Ford faded out of the picture. His trunks were packed. He sneaked out of his hotel. The expedition was left without the guiding hand of the master. He left them, tho he did not abandon them. His purse strings still fluttered to the pacifist breezes. The ladies and gentlemen were left to carry on the heroic, if misunderstood, task after Christmas had passed. Ford had gone, but they remained behind.

The chapters relating to the events of Christmas week and the week following are intensely interesting. We must say, tho, that Mr. Lochner's perspective fails him when he suggests the Ford expedition might have had something to do with overthrow of czarism in Russia. This is excusable, however, for one cannot expect the impressario of the expedition that was to rescue the world from warfare by the journey of the Oscer II., to disclaim any permanent effect resulting therefrom.

We are grateful to Mr. Lochner for revealing how Mr. Ford's spiritual adviser held an influence over the flivver magnate comparable to that of the monk, Rasputin, over the czarina of Russia. Not in the same manner, perhaps, but sufficient to induce Ford to leave his companions in the lurch. Dean Samuel S. Marquis, who took care of Mr. Ford's soul, had no sympathy for the peace trip. Possibly his brand of christianity conformed to that of the wobbly song:

"Onward, Christian soldiers,
Rip and tear and smite,
Let the gentle Jesus
Bless your dynamite."

It seems the eminent doctor spent most of his time in the smoking room with newspaper men cracking vulgar jokes about the zoological exhibition on the upper deck. This conduct was excedeingly distressing to the rainbow chasers, who incidentally thought they had found the pot of gold when they gained access to the profits wrung from the sweat of the workers in the Ford industries.

Blow Them to Hell.

HOW Ford finally withdrew his support from the permanent mediation outfit and decided to howl with the rest of the war jingoes; how he despaired of stopping war thru disseminating sweetness and light and bestowing the blessings of heaven upon humanity and finally decided to go into the business of manufacturing instruments to blow humanity to hell (Ford actually believes there is a hell outside of his factories) is well stated and reveals the real Ford.

This story of the pacifist turned munition manufacturer closes the book. And at its conclusion we must admit that it is well worth reading. Not that Mr. Lochner interprets Ford in the light of politics and economics. That he does not do. He depicts him as a stupid, pliant, half-educated, gullible creature, who finds himself at the head of one of the world's largest combinations of wealth; possibly the richest man in the world and unique in that he depends upon no other capitalists. The motivating forces that created Ford's wealth are not touched upon, which is just as well. Certainly Mr. Lochner, himself a pacifist and sentimentalist, is not the man to estimate Ford otherwise than he did. The book as it stands is a valuable addition to the library of the revolutionist. It strengthens the contempt we hold for the bourgeois swine thrown upon the stage of history. It is just as well that Mr. Ford considers that "history is bunk," because history will deal rudely with him. Mr. Lochner's book is one stone in the monument of shame that is being erected to Ford during his own lifetime.

"Henry Ford, America's Don Quixote," is the title of the book. If Mr. Ford was Don Quixote we cannot resist the temptation to observe that Mr. Lochner, by his own revelation, must have been the Sancho Panza.

Now that Mr. Lochner has done so well in depicting Mr. Ford, perhaps another of the crew of the Oscer II. will devote a volume to Mr. Lochner.

But the next character is Sancho Panza's mule.

Current Economic Tendencies

By Earl R. Browder

By EARL R. BROWDER.

THE trend of American capitalism for the month of October continued upward. Most dramatic of all expressions of this fact was the great boom in the security market, which culminated in the small panic of November 10 when rediscount rates were advanced, and brief liquidation movement set in, only to see the upward trend resumed. Automobile production continued to set new high records over previous years. Agricultural machinery production was over 40 per cent above a year ago. Steel mills are increasing operations with increased volumes of unfilled orders on the books. Railroads continue high records of carloadings, with earnings the highest since the war years. Foreign trade continues to increase. Investments abroad continue to increase over a year ago. All the usual business indicators (including wholesale and retail distribution) point to continued expansion.

The First Rift in the Lute.

FOR the first time this year, however, it is possible to note certain disturbing factors which threaten this wave of capitalist "prosperity." And as in previous years, so it would seem, it it agriculture that will prove to be the Achilles heel of American capitalism. The first symptoms that all is not well with the system of production and distribution of wealth in the United States comes from the agrarian districts. It was brot to the attention of the public in the sudden and unexpected bankruptcy of a number of banks in the middle-western wheat states, which disturbed the political equanimity of the administration in Washington that Coolidge felt it necessary to issue a statement that he had not forgotten the problems of the farmers.

Surely the farmers' problems have not been settled. More than a year ago we pointed out that the alleviation of the agrarian crisis had been brot about by a fortuitous conjuncture of a world-shortage of grain with a large crop in the U. S.—something that was not forseen, certainly not planned, and unlikely to recur in the near future. Figures now available show what is happening to the farmers in this respect, and are convincing proof that the agrarian crisis is still with us.

Prices of grain, cotton, and livestock, declined in the month of October. With sharp decline in the price of wheat, it is still higher in the United States than in the world market. During the week ending Oct. 17, a large quantity of wheat was imported into the U. S. from Canada, paying a duty of 42 cents per bushel. Exports of wheat for the three months ending September 30, were less than 60 per cent of the figures for one year ago. Receipts of wheat at interior markets for September were somewhat under 70 per cent of September last year, with a still smaller percentage for the three-month period. The estimated yield of wheat for the entire country this year is about 80 per cent of last year's crop.

With such a condition in wheat, it is clear that the farmers' "prosperity" has proved even more short-lived than we had expected. Last year's "farm prosperity" was based upon wheat. Certainly corn, also an important crop, played little part, as the crop for 1924 was smaller than for the previous four-year period which was a time of intense crisis. And the 1925 crop of corn, altho larger than last year, is still smaller than the 1920-24 average. Hay, a very important dairy crop, is estimated as being 12 per cent smaller than last year.

What effect the reappearance of the agrarian crisis will have on the course of industrial production is not clear in its details. Certainly it will curtail the domestic market, and intensify the push of American imperialism to develop foreign markets more intensely, conquer new ones, and even more energetically wield its credit monopoly in favor of American industries. It will also stimulate the investment of capital abroad. To what extent these factors will offset one another, and to what extent American industry will find its operations curtailed, cannot be indicated at this time. What is certain is this: That a very disturbing development for American capitalism has shown itself again, upsetting to a certain extent what had appeared to be a very stable equilibrium.

Where Industrial "Prosperity" Comes From.

WE have not wearied in pointing out, again and again, that the fabulous profits now being reaped by capitalism may be traced directly to the increase of exploitation of the industrial workers. In the index figures of the Federal Reserve Bulletin for November we find still stronger support for this contention.

Workers in the manufacturing industries, numbering 5 per cent fewer than in 1919, produced commodities 25 per cent greater than in 1919. The total wages paid to workers in these manufacturing industries was less than 4 per cent greater than in 1919.

How this process of intensified exploitation has been applied in the various industries, is shown with great clearness in the following table, compiled from the Federal Reserve Bulletin.

Manufacturing Industries Index Month of September
(1919-100)

	Employment		Pay rolls		Production
	1925	1924	1925	1924	1925	1924
Iron and Steel	86.6	80.2	87.7	80.1	120	96
Textiles	94.1	90.5	99.1	98.3	107	98
Lumber and products	102.2	100.9	111.9	107.8	160	143
Automobiles	129.4	97.2	155.3	111.8	193	178
General index	95.1	91.2	103.9	99.1	125	118

From 1919 to 1924, in brief, exploitation was increased 14 per cent in manufacturing industries, and at the same time, by increasing the number of unemployed (working a smaller force for longer hours) the basis was laid for further intensification. In 1925 this made possible an increase of exploitation more than 22 per cent greater than in 1919. No wonder the golden stream of profits has been swelling!

No Prosperity for the Workers and Farmers.

FROM all of which the workers and farmers may get another hint, that "prosperity" for capitalism means the opposite for those who toil. Greater profits for the capitalists, spells greater oppression for the masses, for the workers in the industries and farmers on the land.

The ruling capitalist class is able to coin into even greater profits the increasing efforts of those who toil—because they control the machinery of government, the machinery of industry, the machinery of credit, the machinery of marketing and distribution. Only when the workers and farmers cement a firm alliance in struggle, to overthrow the capitalist government, set up a workers' and farmers' government—and then proceed to take over the machinery of industry, credit, marketing and transportation—will prosperity be possible for those who produce the wealth of the world.

Book Reviews

A Book on Stool Pigeons

The Stool Pigeon and the Open Shop Movement, by Jean E. Spielman; American Publishing Co., Minneapolis.

Reviewed by CARL HAESSLER.

The 40-week organization drive authorized by the American Federation of Labor at its Atlantic City convention will carry in its wake a horde of operatives of private detective agencies, eager to frighten the employers and drain them of their surplus cash. An innocent resolution by the Illinois State Federation of Labor favoring organization of bank clerks had the immediate effect of placing on the desk of every Chicago bank executive an offer by the Pinkertons to help meet the menace. Every Labor-Forward movement has as its byproduct the noisome activity of the undercover men.

This makes The Stool Pigeon and the Open Shop Movement pertinent reading. It is a book of 240 pages by Jean E. Spielman, organizer in Minneapoliss and other milling centers for the Intl. Union of United Brewery, Flour, Cereal & Soft Drink workers. Though copyrighted in 1923 and therefore open to considerable revision, its central theme, the widespread infiltration of private detectives into labor organizations, probably remains unimpeachable with its page on page of reprinting and facsimile reproduction of private detective correspondence with employers and the department of justice, always against the worker.

Spielman's preface indicates that he belongs to what may be called the old guard of labor officialdom but that does not delude him as to anti-red incitements, when made by the agencies. "The agitators and radicals," he says, "interpreted in the language of the open shopper, are those striving for higher wages, shorter hours and better working conditions."

While he touches on stool-pigeon honeycombing in the A. F. of L. unions including miners, machinists and printers, and in the I. W. W. and the Communist party, his principal concern is with the flour mills he was charged with organizing. He shows that the Marshall Service, with headquarters in Kansas City, was employed by the Pillsbury, Washburn-Crosby and other mills in Minneapolis. At one time, in 1921, this agency actually kept a decrepit local of Spielman's union alive, because, as the Pillsbury president wrote to the detective head, "a weak organization of this type is better than a disorganized one, and a reorganization later on."

But the employers were seldom satisfied. Like all detective agencies in labor work, the Marshall fed lies to the boss at high prices and failed to deliver the goods. A followup eperative had to report to the agency chief: "The trouble here is this, who ever had this work before faked their reports and Crosby (the Minneapolis miller) is suspicious of agencies."

In view of the pious reformation of a number of radicals in Minneapolis Spielman would probably delate the extremely interesting history of the progressive insurgency of the Minneapolis Trades & Labor assembly which looms large toward the end of his book.

COMRADES BOJOR AND DUBINSKY

BUCHAREST, Roumania, Nov. 22.—The Roumanian boyars not satisfied with murdering Max Golstein, have taken the lives of Comrade Bojor, a Roumanian Communist, and Dubinsky, a Bessarabian comrade, who committed suicide after being tortured by the police for a number of months.

Comrade Bojor passed the last two months of his life in solitary confinement with manacles on his hands and feet.

Comrade Dubinsky was stripped naked and thrown into a cell and forced to sleep on the cold stone floor. The first day he was in the cell, he contracted a cold, and the guards refused to allow him medical care of any kind.

Both of these comrades who had been active in the struggle against the Roumanian boyars were fed rotten Indian corn for meals. These comrades preferring suicide to death by starvation, ended their lives.

ABE KLEIN

Abe Klein, 23 years old, member of Branch No. 4 of the Young Workers (Communist) League of Chicago, and a member of the party died after a short illness. He was secretary of the Butchers' Union in Chicago, and very active in the labor movement

Many of his comrades and coworkers in the union participated in the funeral Comrades Davidson, Hecker and Morris Levin spoke at his grave.

Danish Workers Send Delegation to Russia

MOSCOW, (By Mail).—A Danish workers' delegation consisting of twenty members is expected to arrive in Leningrad.

Name Todd Successor.

BISMARCK, Nov. 22—Gerald P. Nye, of Cooperstown, a country newspaper editor, has been appointed by Governor Sorlie of North Dakota, to succeed the late Senator Edwin F. Ladd. The appointment will be contested by many of the old guard senators headed by Moses of New Hampshire. The appointment came following the decision of the governor not to name anyone for the office, but wait until June 30, 1926 for elections.

Send Workers to Province.

MOSCOW, Nov. 22.— The Moscow organization of the Russian Communist Party has mobilized 883 comrades for work in the country; these include 33.9 per cent volunteers and 10.4 per cent women. In the Saratoy gubernia 450 Communists have been requisitioned for work in the country.

Leningrad Workers Protest.

LENINGRAD, U. S. S. R. (By Mail)—A mass meeting of protest against the torturing of workers in Hungary took place in the one time Taurische Palace, now Uritsk Palace. The protest resolution demanded that the Soviet government do everything within its power to prevent the threatened death sentences.

Vienna Police Assist Russian White Guards

VIENNA, — (By mail)—A congress or Russian counter-revolutionists took place here recently in which 108 delegates participated and decided to form a so-called national people's league. It must be stated that the Austrian government gave voluntarily the right of asylum for some days to these counter-revolutionists while it is less tolerant with regard to revolutionary workers.

The Vienna police pretends to have known nothing about this congress. It is peculiar that it always knows very well about Communists and revolutionary fugitives who come to Austria. The social-democratic member of the workers' delegation which recently visited Russia intended to report his experiences to an Austrian workers' meeting. He was stopped at the frontier and refused permission to enter Austria.

The Chinese student Then-Shi was expelled during the month of September because he had committed the crime of speaking in a number of meetings of the International Workers' Relief in favor of the Chinese workers who are suppressed by international imperialism.

The worker Dorn who was arrested some time ago in a demonstration in Vienna was not only expelled, but has been kept under arrest for weeks before his final expulsion. The list of the expelled workers in Austria is very long. All this shows that the Austrian government and its police are following the dictates of the capitalist states, to persecute by all means the revolutionary movement and to offer protection and asylum to the German fascist leader Russbach and the Russian white guards.

City Club "Investigates."

The bourgeois City Club is carrying on an "investigation" as to how examinations of teachers are conducted in Chicago following the refusal of the school board to confirm the reappointment of Supt. of Schools William McAndrew's henchman, William H. Campbell as head of the board of examiners. The teachers objected to the methods used by the McAndrew appointee and the board upon investigation refused to confirm his reappointment.

GREEK COMMUNISTS CARRY ALL MUNICIPALITIES IN THESSALY, THRACE AND MACEDONIA SECTORS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ATHENS, Greece, Nov. 23.—In the recent municipal elections held in Greece, the Communist Party carried every municipality in Thessaly, Macedonia and Thrace by overwhelming majorities, despite the fact that many of the leaders of the Greek Communist Party are in jail and some have been exiled.

In the other parts of Greece, the reactionaries won by small majorities thru fusing their forces together in a desperate attempt to defeat the Communists.

The government party, under the leadership of the would-be Greek Mussolini, Premier Pangalos, did all that it could to keep the workers of Greece away from the ballot box and after the election did all it could to hinder the counting of the ballots. Many Communist ballots were destroyed by them in an effort to defeat the workers' candidates.

Call Reactionaries' Conference.

Premier Pangalos is now calling a conference of all the reactionary leaders of Greece in order to decide on steps of crushing their Communist opposition. Pangalos, who became premier because of his promises to end the persecutions of the workers and the Communists and who calls himself an upholder of the republic, is forced to call this conference at which leaders of the two royalist factions in Greece will meet with him to devise repressive measures against the Communists.

To Combat Communists.

In January, the elections to the Greek senate, which has been created recently, will take place. In March, elections will be held for representatives to the lower chamber of parliament, the boule. The conference being called by Pangalos will discuss the fusion of the royalists and the Pangalos followers into one party to combat the Communists in these elections. The conference also intends to devise means of keeping the Communists off the ballot.

Declare Elections Void.

In Xanthi and Saloniki, where the Communists won the municipal elections, the Pangalos government refused to allow them to take their places and declared the election void. This is undoubtedly what they will attempt in those parts of Greece where the Communists were able to carry all municipalities.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

MANY people surmised a few years ago, when thrones began to topple and their former occupants adjourned to hastily improvised graves or to eke out a living at any form of employment from telling fortunes to shining shoes, that the old and once highly esteemed aristocracy was as functionless in modern society as the appendix in one's body, provided one has been treated by a doctor who specializes in disposing of appendixes. In which case one need not worry about appendicitis.

DUKES, counts and even lords were never more in demand than today. Tho the youthful female section of America's dollar aristocracy is tiring of the thrill formerly secured by annexing a European count regardless of age or sex, and are turning their eyes in the direction of millionaire bootleggers, a new field has opened up to the Old World's cast-off relics of feudalism. We are referring to the real estate business. A Chicago real estate promoter who specializes in Florida recently imported an English duke and is using him to good advantage in inducing the newly rich to consider the merits of his amphibious property in Florida.

AN investment of $10,000 in sunken orange groves will give the winsome daughter of a hot dog magnate the privilige of shaking the duke's hand. She may be allowed to make him drunk for double the amount. The duke is not placed on exhibition at the real estate shark's palatial offices. He is held in leash for the favored ones who are considered worthy fish for banquets where the duke is wined and dined. It is reported that since the duke's arrival the real estate man who imported him more than trebeled his catch of suckers and was able to dispense with fifty per cent of his sales force.

EVEN had William Jennings Bryan lived until now, it is doubtful if his prolonged duel with the devil of knowledge could have maintained his advertising value to the Florida realty company that was paying him a thousand dollars a week as a means to attract a crowd. One ambitious

Money Wages Remain Stationary, But They Buy Less and Less

By WALLACE T. METCALFE
(Worker Correspondent)

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, Nov. 23.—Wages of the sheet and tin plate mill crews working under the union scale will remain unchanged for the Nov., Dec., period as the result of the bi-monthly examination of sheet sales. The average sales price of 26, 27, 28 gauge sheets (black) was found to have been $3.10 per 100 pounds in the Sept.-Oct. period or the same as in the July-August period.

The examination was held by Jas H. Nutt, secretary of the Manufacturers Association and a committee of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers headed by President Mike F. Tighe. The volume of shipments was found to have been very heavy and if business keeps up the union committee expect the scale to be advanced at the next bi-monthly examination.

MINUTES OF MORGAN BANK SHOW POWER

Secret Orders Issued Thru Government

PEKING, China, Nov. 23—The Japanese are extremely resentful at what they call the "surrender" of the powers to the threat of complete repudiation of all treaties by China, as advocated by Soviet diplomacy. In fact Japan may split away from the consortium of bankers which has bossed the handling of Chinese affairs in the customs conference and other policies.

Dispatches from London published in the Chinese press tell of the methods used by the international bankers' consortium in controlling the diplomats of the various imperialist powers, and even an alleged copy of minutes of meetings in J. P. Morgan's New York office are given.

Show Bankers' Dictatorship.

These minutes cover three days in October, the 19th, 20th, and 21st, but give no hint of the reason for the recent decision of the imperialist powers, to grant China full tariff auton-

JENSEN'S RECORD WHITEWASHED BY JOHN FITZPATRICK

Reactionary Officials Praise Each Other

Officers of the district council of the Carpenters' Union, officials of local unions, prominent members and celebrities who were willing to spend a pleasant evening in expressions of mutual admiration, participated in a banquet on the occasion of the dedication of the new building of the carpenters' district council, located at 12 East Erie street. The big guzzle took place on November 7.

Prominent among those present were Harry Jensen, president of the council, and John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor. Fitzpatrick evidently came to do honor to one he would not have touched with a forty-foot pole a few years ago.

Jensen has not been fumigated since those days, but Fitzpatrick can

CABINET OF FRANCE AGAIN MEETS DEFEAT

Communists Try to Force Elections

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, France, Nov. 23.—The Painleve cabinet resigned last night after a defeat of its tax program by a vote of 278 to 275. Though the vote was not announced as a vote of confidence, the defeat of the government's financial program created an impasse that made the continuation of the Painleve government intolerable. As soon as the defeat was announced Painleve declared that he would present the resignation of his cabinet, which he did instantly by receiving the resignations of all his ministers and presenting them to President Doumergue.

After a short discussion with the president, Painleve, left the Elysee palace and Doumergue summoned M. de Selves, president of the senate, and M. Herriot, president of the chamber of deputies, to discuss with them the selection of a new premier.

Communist Votes Decide.

In the first balloting on other parts of the program of the government, the Communists, who have 26 deputies, refrained from voting. But when article five containing one of the moratorium features came up, they cast their votes against the government thereby forcing the resignation of the cabinet. The yellow socialists who had served the most abominable aims of French imperialism in Morocco, and Syria and who had aided the government imprison Communists were furious at the defeat of the government and stormy scenes followed the voting.

Communists are hoping that the unstable conditions of France and the fact that there is no dominant group in the chamber capable of maintaining a government will force the dissolution of the parliament and thereby bring about new elections. In a political campaign they feel that at this time the situation is such that the working masses can be aroused against all the capitalist parties. The hectic conditions in France may be utilized to mobilize the workers behind the Communist Party in a concerted assault upon the rule of the capitalist class.

Briand or Poincare.

The next cabinet, which will be organized with the object of pacifying the conflicting elements among the capitalist parties, may be headed by either Briand or Poincare. The former, many times premier of France, may try to create a cabinet by bringing the right and left elements of the bourgeois together on a common program to avoid elections at this particular time. He has been trying to get support from the right and still maintain enough left elements to enable him to organize a government. On the other hand Poincare, former premier of the bloc nationale, (the industrialist group) may be able to bring the left socialists, who are loyal servants of the capitalist class, into a bloc with the right in order to try to overcome the Communist menace.

In either event the government can be only temporary, as the conflicting elements within the political groups in the chamber will produce one crisis after another until a new chamber is elected with one group sufficiently powerful to maintain a cabinet dominating. Whether this is possible only time can tell.

The Communists are well pleased with the situation as they view the series of crises as indicative of the breakdown of bourgeois parliamentarism.

EGYPTIANS THREATEN NATIONALIST REBELLION AGAINST BRITISH RULE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 23.—Dispatches from sources in the Near East state that a revolutionary movement is beginning in Egypt to oust the rule of Great Britain. Former Prime Minister Zaghloul Pasha is alleged to be heading the movement, which however, has deeper and more radical roots among the masses. The present prime minister, Ziwar Pasha, a pliant tool of England, has forbidden street gatherings in Cairo as a result of armed clashes and 3,000 British troops have been added to the force of occupation.

COOLIDGE GIVES SECOND LEWIS' STRIKE HINT THE SAME SILENCE AS FIRST

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 23.—The letter of John L. Lewis to President Coolidge, containing a mild suggestion that if the government does not intervene to force the operators to abide by the Jacksonville agreement, the union may call a strike in all bituminous fields, has been considered by the president, but comment is withheld.

A similar weak threat was made some time ago by Lewis, but no attention was given it, and without the membership of the United Mine Workers force Lewis into a real strike call, it is unlikely that the present hint will get a great deal more consideration than the first one.

VICTIM OF THE A. C. W. POGROM BACK AT WORK

Union Members Filling Shop with Protests

(By Worker Correspondent.)

The news of my being beaten up on Sunday of last week by officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and sluggers, and of the previous Friday's sluggings at the membership meetings, reached the shop where I work before I did.

The workers who had witnessed the sluggings, the newspaper stories and pictures had told the story in general. But the brothers and sisters in the shop were anxious to get the details.

All Interested.

I came to work at 10 a. m. that morning because my section works but a few hours a day these days. As I walked into the shop all eyes were turned towards me and as I went past the other workers I was showered with questions from all sides.

"How many sluggers were there?"

"Do you know who hit you?"

"Did they beat up the girls, too?"

"How many 'gats' did they have?"

No sooner did I sit down at my machine than my shop chairman came toward me, saying, "You knew that you would get a beating. Why did you go to the meeting?" It looked as if he had known of the sluggers' arrangements before hand.

While we continued work, pictures of the bandaged workers were passed around and newspapers containing the story. At the noon hour, the workers gathered around me while I answered their questions.

Was It For This?

One brother remarked, "Is this the result of our many years of struggle and sacrifice to build up the Amalgamated, to have our own brothers and sisters beaten up?"

I was told how some of the brothers had been beaten up the previous Friday evening at a general meeting because they had dared to discuss the proposed $25.00 assessment.

"I can't understand why all this happened," said another worker, "those who were beaten up were our most active members. I know most of them. They are always on the job in union meetings, fighting against wage cuts and other boss propositions. Just because they sometimes disagree with the union officials does that mean they should be slugged? And by our own members, too?"

Remember Sigman.

"But what can we do?" asked a girl member. "They have the sluggers and they have the money; and we haven't learned to stick together, to give them a real fight. And if you say anything, you lose your job."

"But they can't always get away with this stuff," I told her. "Look what happened in New York in the I. L. G. W. They tried their slugging tactics there and look what happened."

Sentenced to Death.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 23.—Harrison W. Noel, twenty, convicted murderer of Raymond Pierce, taxi driver, was sentenced by County Judge Edwin C. Caffrey to die in the electric chair during the week of January 10.

Noel was alleged to have killed Pierce, then used his cab to kidnap Mary Daly, six, whom he later murdered.

LEWIS MAKES TIMID HINT OF A STRIKE OF BITUMINOUS MINERS TO ENFORCE 3-YEAR AGREEMENT

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 23.—With his timid and compromising policy proven bankrupt in the face of the anthracite mine owners' determination to crush the United Mine Workers' Union in the hard coal fields, John L. Lewis is being driven by the rank and file of the U. M. W. of A. to make a weak hint of a general strike of all miners, including the bituminous fields.

In a letter sent to President Coolidge yesterday, Lewis humbly asks the capitalist government with strikebreaker Coolidge at its head, to come to the rescue of one of the most powerful unions in America by compelling the bituminous operators to cease violations of the Jacksonville three-year agreement in the soft coal fields.

Lewis Makes Timid Hint.

Government intervention, hated by the coal miners, who wish only a fighting chance to fling their massed power of a national general strike at the heads of the arrogant operators, is directly asked for, and such a strike is only hinted at by asking Coolidge—"whether the union men would be justified in taking their own measures to enforce the Jacksonville agreement."

Lewis asserts that, "substantial coal producing interests have violated and repudiated their written word of honor," and he names the Pittsburgh Coal company, the Consolidation Coal company, the Bethlehem Mines corporation, and the coal interests of the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh railroad.

The futility of appealing to Coolidge for redress against these operators, may be seen in the fact that Coolidge's secretary of the treasury, Andrew Mellon, is heavily interested in some of these companies named as violators of the agreement.

Don't Like to Scab.

It is known that a large portion of the bituminous miners are incensed at Lewis for not calling them on strike before, as they are being compelled to remain at work furnishing soft coal substitute to anthracite users, thus scabbing on the anthracite strikers. The action of Lewis is regarded as forced upon him by this sentiment.

Progressive miners are voicing the opinion that Coolidge will give only a little more recognition to this timid general strike hint of Lewis than he did to the first hint more than two months ago.

That Lewis is wholly unwilling to

CHICAGO LABOR TO HEAR COAL MINERS TONIGHT

Meeting to Be Held at Northwest Hall

William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, arrived in town last night, coming straight from the anthracite strike zone where 158,000 workers are engaged in a struggle to better their living conditions. He will speak tonight at Northwest Hall, North and Western Aves., at eight o'clock. In addition, Pat H. Toohey and Alex Reid, who have been active in the strike, will also speak.

Dunne has been in the strike zone for the past two weeks, writing of the struggles of the coal miners. His close contact with the strikers and their families makes it possible for him to give to the workers of Chicago a realistic picture of the situation there.

Toohey is a young miner, who has been active in the anthricite strike. For attempting to speak at a mass meeting, Toohey, together with Alex Reid, national secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee, were arrested and sent to jail. While Toohey was in jail the reactionary leaders of the union made an attempt to expel him from the union, using every low and despicable method. However, the rank and file of the union refused to expel Toohey from his local union.

Reid is well known for his activities among the coal miners. For years he has been active in the struggle against the reactionary Farrington machine in the state of Illinois. He will deal with the anthracite strike in relation to the situation thruout the entire mining industry.

All workers are invited to attend this meeting. Admission is free.

The meeting is being held under the auspices of the Progressive Miners' Committee.

FILIPINOS IN CHICAGO FOR INDEPENDENCE

Head of Mission to Speak Here

Sergio Osmena, vice president of the Philippine senate and head of the Filipino independence mission now in the United States, comes to Chicago on December 11. The all-America Anti-Imperialist League is cooperating with the Filipino colony of this city to make the visit a historic event in the building up of a united front between American workers and Filipinos generally for the overthrow of American imperialism in the Far East.

Leading up to the visit of the Filipino mission, there will be a series of public meetings, in English and Spanish.

On the night of Dec. 11, the Filipino association of Chicago will give a great banquet in the Auditorium hotel, in honor of the mission. Among the speakers invited, in addition to Senator Osmena, are John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and Manuel Gomez, secretary of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League. Arrangements are in charge of Cirilo Manat, chairman of the special "independence committee" named by the Filipino association of Chicago.

Unions Interested.

It is expected that a considerable number of workers, particularly members of the most important trade unions of the city will attend the banquet. All the speeches will be broadcasted, so that workers who find it impossible to be present can hear the proceedings by simply tuning in on their own, or somebody else's radio set. The full program will be announced later on.

Bitter experience is teaching the Filipinos that their fight for liberty is a struggle against Wall Street. American workers are also confronted with the absolute necessity of destroying the power of Wall Street in their own class interest; for this, if for no other reason, declares the All-America Anti-Imperialist League in its latest bulletin, the American workers must give unhesitating support to the demand of the Filipinos for complete and immediate independence.

British Textile Union Whips Bosses Who Try to Force a Wage Cut

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—The strike victory of 135,000 woolen workers in the Bradford district of England has been ratified by the court of investigation, representing employers and employes. The court recommends maintaining the old wage scale till the end of 1926. The strike came in late July against a proposed five per cent wage cut. The court's findings are published in New York textile journals.

BRITISH MINORITY MOVEMENT ACTIVITIES ARE STIMULATED BY GOVERNMENT PERSECUTION

By TOM MANN.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON—(By Mail.)—The prosecution of twelve comrades including the general secretary of the National Minority Movement, Harry Pollitt, a member of the Boiler Makers' and Shipbuilders' Union, and Walter Hannington, the secretary of the metal workers' section of the National Minority Movement, has stimulated left wing activities among trade unionists.

Hannington is a member of the Amalgamated Engineers and closely connected with the National Unemployed Workers' Committee movement. Another of the twelve being prosecuted is J. T. Murphy a very active member of the Amalgamated Engineers, and still another of the twelve is Arthur MacManus also a member of the Engineers, and Tom Bell a member of the Moulders' Union, and William Gallacher also an engineer and member of the A. E. U.

There are no other six men in the country that have worked more effectively in the unions, to secure a one hundred per cent membership, to eliminate sectionalism and to make working class solidarity a fact.

They are to appear at the "Old Bailey" for trial before a jury in a week or ten days time, they are to be placed on trial for sedition under the incitement to mutiny act of 1797, the same act that the present writer was tried under and sentenced to six months imprisonment at the Manchester assizes in 1912.

Activities of Trades Council.

The Trades Councils in England and Scotland have in earlier times been of great service to the cause of labor, but in recent years they have been frowned on by the council of the Trade Union Congress and by the congress itself. During the past two years, however, it has become recognized that the Trades Councils have a very important role to fill, and mainly as a result of left wing propaganda the General Council of the Trade Union Congress has convened a national conference of Trades Councils in London, and a series of county conference thruout the country, and what is known as the Joint Consultative Committee is preparing model rules for Trade Councils with a view to uniformity of action and the linking up of the councils nation-wide for national requirements.

The Trades Councils have in a number of instances been stultified by the fact that many of them paid so much attention to political affairs that they seriously neglected industrial matters. Many now see this to be an error and definite action is being taken to industrilize the councils and to prepare for concerted action over a big field.

Alliance of Trade Unions.

With the object of preparing for definite action early in 1926, when the miners and other unions affairs are expected to become critical, several of the largest unions have been engaged forming an alliance. Draft rules have been agreed upon and these are being sent to the members of the unions concerned, but the National Union of Railwaymen submitted proposals which were not accepted and they have withdrawn, which detracts seriously from the fighting efficiency of the new alliance. Some are of opinion that the proposals made by the officials of the National Union of Railwaymen were intended to sabotage the alliance; if this is so, it is a very serious matter and will deserve and receive strong censure.

promoter recently offered to pay the Roumanian debt to the United States if he could have the services of the queen of that country to boost his business. He promised to return her in any condition she desired. That lady, however, was unable to accept the offer as she was then engaged to write a series of articles on "How to wear a crown" for the Hearst papers.

SOON, members of Europe's royal families will be as plentiful in the United States as persons mistaken for Martin Durkin, who defeated the Chicago police department and was obliged to go to the hospital to recover from the strain of laughing at the efforts of the police to capture him. An Austrian count married the daughter of an oil king. The oil man felt so peeved because his daughter did not marry into royalty that he threatened to disown her unless she disowned the count. But the count refused to be disowned until the oil magnate raised the price of gasoline half a cent a gallon and gave half a day's proceeds to the perfectly satisfied husband.

THIS particular count, Salm something or other, is now in New York, but is not making much headway. He is working very hard, nights, and never looks at the clock. A fellow like him should get along. But the competition is too keen. Why should the daughter of a near beer king marry a count of no account when any steamer may come in laden to the Plimsoll line with the monarchial output of Europe? And why should dukes, kings, and other antiquities degrade themselves by marrying for gain, when they can earn an honest living either at a circus or drawing attention to a sub-division in need of advertising?

CALVIN COOLIDGE told New York business men a few days ago that American money saved Europe after the war. The business men must have gotten a deep feeling of satisfaction out of such exalted recognition of their generosity. The papers tell us that they applauded the president when he told them they were a lot of good fellows. Next he told them that in future business would suffer from no foolish restrictions, which hampered it in the past. Business has now been purified, Calvin told them.

THE situation in Europe is fairly satisfactory to American business now. After the war Europe's only export trade consisted of penniless aristocrats and missions in search of loans. While the aristocrats could be utilized to amuse the daughters of the business men and the manufacturers had no objection to the bankers loaning the begging expeditions money with which to purchase the products of American factories, the European workers were dangerously near following the example of the Russian workers and peasants and getting rid of their robber rulers for good. Our masters did not like the prospect at all; hence their generosity.

THIS is where the American dollar stepped in. Wall Street is now managing the financial affairs of Germany, Hungary and Austria. Recently a $100,000,000 loan was granted to Mussolini to enable that assassin to stabilize his rotten currency and to give a new lease of life to his still rottener government. France and her ally, Poland, are on the brink of a financial precipice, but Wall Street will put them on their feet, temporarily, if they agree to Wall Street's terms. In the meantime England is flirting with France, perhaps hinting of an alliance against England's only formidable competitor in the capitalist world—the United States.

IT is rather significant that France and England have made an "oily" alliance in Syria and Mosul, against the Druse tribesmen and the Turks, ostensibly. But there is bigger fish in the pond than the Druses and Turks. Only a few days ago a London correspondent of a big American newspaper announced that war had broken out between the Standard Oil company and the British oil interests. This is nothing less than a skirmish in the inevitable conflict between the British and the United States government.

IT is plain to anyone with the slightest insight into the ways of capitalist diplomacy that Britain is preparing the diplomatic ground for a struggle with the United States. In view of the refusal of the United States to settle the French debt on terms favorable to the latter, the recent agreement between France and England for joint action in the oil fields of the Near East are significant. Also England's offer of 20 per cent of the Mosul oil to Germany. When Washington intervenes to "save" the Druses or the natives of Irak, you will know it is the Standard Oil talking.

Tax Book Profits.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—In a 5-to-4 decision, the supreme court held today that distributions made by a corporation to its shareholders in 1917 are taxable to the shareholder at the 1917 tax rates, if the corporation has earnings for that year to pay them.

SOVIET SCHOOLS TRAINING LABOR TO RUN SOCIETY

New Intelligentsia Comes from Workers

KHARKOV, Russia—(FP)—"Universities train the generals and other high officers who command the affairs of modern society. If the workers ever expect to take control of the world they must have their leaders trained in the universities."

This is the educational proposition laid down by Jean Riappo, chairman of the higher education committee of the Ukraine. Riappo supports his contention by pointing out that in czarist days there were three kinds of schools in Russia, the common schools for the children of workers and peasants, the high schools for the children of the little business men and the universities and technical schools for the aristocracy and the masters of industry. This system produced an ignorant working class and a highly trained ruling class of landlords and capitalists.

In 1913-14 the universities and technical schools of Russia contained 64 per cent aristocrats and children of the big business men, 30 per cent children of small business men, 4 per cent children of peasants (who made up over four-fifths of Russia) and 2 per cent of children of the workers.

"Universities gave the training to the class in power," Riappo argues, "and this training was a great source of strength to the Russian rulers. The universities were a big element in maintaining a czarist dictatorship."

Then came the revolutions of 1917. By 1918 there were no aristocrats left in the universities, but in their places the children of the new-rich class of business men made up the great body of university students. In 1920, 70 per cent of all Russian university students belonged in this class.

"Here was a real danger. The workers and peasants of Russia had taken possession of the economic machinery and of the government, but the training for the exercise of power was being given not to the children of workers and peasants, but to the sons and daughters of business men. We were threatened with the same danger that overtook Germany—a dictatorship of the new-rich business class."

Riappo continued: "We had to act quickly. Workers were not ready to enter the universities. They could not get ready, officially, as they had never gone even through the elementary schools. So we created the workers' faculties (rabfacs); sent the men there direct from the factories and in 3 or 4 years had them ready for the university courses. Some of these factory workers did their 8 hours in the shop and then did 4 or more hours in school, five evenings a week. In other cases their unions paid their way through the rabfacs and the men gave full time to study.

"At the same time we built up a system of technical schools in the factories and in the industrial centers. Today, in the Ukraine, 67 per cent of the students in these technical schools are the children of workers and peasants.

"Between the rabfacs and these technical schools, we have solved our university problem. In 1920 there were only a few more children of workers and peasants in the universities than there were in 1917. By 1924, 24 per cent of the university students were from peasant families and 18 per cent from workers' families. In 1925, workers and peasants made up 56 per cent of the university student body. This fall the per cent is about 65 per cent.

"There are three landmarks," Riappo concluded. "Aristocrats, 1914, 64 per cent of university students; small business men's children, 1920, 70 per cent; and in 1926, workers and peasants, 65 per cent. That shows the swing of the pendulum. The workers and peasants of Russia have taken economic and political power. Their sons and daughters, in the technical schools and universities are learning the art of using that power for the benefit of themselves and their children."

Riappo smiled. "You, in the United States," he said, "accuse us of being undemocratic in our education. Undemocratic? Perhaps, but we are also wise. We are safeguarding the workers' republic by seeing that the workers get the training necessary to protect their own interests. That means university education and we propose that the workers keep what they have gained by learning how to use their power efficiently."

Refusal of Pardon to Whitney by Governor May Aid Fight on Law

SAN FRANCISCO—(FP)—The refusal of Gov. Richardson to pardon Anita Whitney means, according to the Whitney committee formed in San Francisco, that the movement for her pardon will be turned into agitation for repeal of the California criminal syndicalism law. This is satisfactory to Miss Whitney, who refuses to ask for a pardon while nearly 80 I. W. W. members are serving time for the same "offense."

Communists An Obstacle to Millerand's Hope for French Fascist Victory

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, fascism in France looks about for an opportunity and bides its time for an auspicious moment to strike for power. In fact, it is declared that the League of Patriotic Youth, that has already paraded its blue-shirted followers by the thousands thru the streets of Paris to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and beneath the Arc de Triomphe, offers its chosen dictator in the person of Alexandre Millerand, late occupant of the presidential palace, and previously a power in several cabinets.

With the second fall of the Painleve cabinet, Sunday, the numerous forces within the French capitalist state again come into collision in the struggle to organize a new cabinet to take up the nation's financial problems.

• • • •

In the ambitions of Alexandre Millerand and his followers, there is a parallel to the coup d'etat that made Benito Mussolini the fascist dictator of Italy.

Mussolini was a "socialist." So was Millerand. They were both considered firebrands in their youth. But both have developed into the vilest of traitors against the working class. Millerand, like Mussolini, stands today for principles directly opposite to those he championed when at Saint-Mande in 1896 he proclaimed the right of French workers to strike.

• • • •

Millerand would-be fascist dictator of France, did not wait for the war to offer him an opportunity to turn against labor. Ten years before he had championed, along with Viviani and Briand, in the Second (Socialist) International, the right of socialists to enter bourgeois governments. This trio saw their treason capture the French socialist party during the war, when French socialists were taken into the war cabinets.

• • • •

It was in 1920, during the wave of revolutionary enthusiasm that was sweeping Europe's working class, that Millerand, as president, used the whole power of the capitalist state to crush the French general strike of that year. In recent years Millerand has attacked Herriot's vatican and Soviet policies, thus endearing himself to the most reactionary elements in France, including the royalists who plot the return of a monarchy.

• • • •

It is declared that the League of Patriotic Youth, organized by Millerand's tool, Pierre Taittinger, extreme conservative deputy, is spending millions of francs to strengthen the organization. No mention has so far been made of where these lavish funds come from.

But the sight of Wall Street handing out a $100,000,000 loan to Mussolini's dictatorship in Italy might naturally be considered as easing the way for spending huge sums in France in the hope that Morgan may look with equal favor upon a fascist tyranny in Paris.

• • • •

Millerand, however, has several obstacles in his way that did not confront Mussolini. The Italian Communist Party was young and inexperienced when Mussolini seized power. The French Communist Party is today one of the best in the whole Communist International. The Italian party was still organized on a social-democratic, geographical basis when Mussolini triumphed. The French party is today built solidly upon a shop nuclei basis, firmly imbedded in the masses of French labor. Millerand may wish to be a French Mussolini. But the French workers in increasing numbers, under Communist leadership, struggle for a Soviet Republic.

The issue becomes daily clearer above the petty scurryings of bourgeois politicians to form short-lived cabinets to deal frantically and hopelessly with the insoluble contradictions that will continue as long as capitalist rule lasts.

I. L. D. PROTEST MEETING AGAINST JAILING GITLOW

Labor Organizations to Participate

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—A protest demonstration against the imprisonment of Benjamin Gitlow, arranged by the International Labor Defense, will take place Tuesday, November 24, at 8 p. m., at Webster Hall, 119 E. 11th Street.

Comrade Gitlow is well known in the labor movement as one of the best fighters for its cause. The decision against Gitlow is a decided menace to the working class of the whole country. The sustaining of Gitlow's conviction by the United States supreme court supplies a precedent which will mean a railroading to long terms in prison of many other well known fighters in the ranks of the labor movement.

The International Labor Defense is fighting this case, and calls upon all labor bodies and working class organizations to take the same stand. This decision of the United States supreme court must be met with a united front on the part of all workers of this country. Come to the demonstration. Demand the freedom of Comrade Gitlow.

Among the speakers to address the meeting are Louis Hyman, general manager joint board of the Cloak, Dress and Reefer Makers' Union, Sam Lipzin, chairman Amalgamated Action Committee, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, Robert Dunn, member national committee International Labor Defense, William Weinstone of the Workers Party, P. P. Cosgrove, of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union and many others.

LABOR PLANKS DISCUSSED BY 'HOBO' MEET

By L. P. RINDAL.

(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Calif., —(By Mail)—News bulletins received here from V. C. Anderson, delegate from the International Labor Defense to the International Brotherhood Welfare Association's convention at Denver, Colo., state that this "hobo" gathering is discussing a program containing such demands as unemployment insurance, a shorter work day, a labor press, and international co-operation.

James Eads How, the "hobo millionaire" is a "back number" at the convention, according to reports. The migratory workers are antagonistic to his ideas of improving social conditions by getting such charity as doughnuts and coffe. Tho he gets a lot of advertising from the capitalist press, he doesn't get many good words from convention delegates.

Hundreds of men are at the convention and one woman, Susan S. Harris, organizer from Colorado Springs. She is a white-haired nurse of English education, now out of work.

LENROOT TO LEAD WORLD COURT FIGHT

Best Spokesman Cal Can Get

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—Senator Irving L. Lenroot, of Wisconsin, is relied upon by President Coolidge to lead the administration forces in its fight for the world court. Lenroot held a long conference with Coolidge on the possibilities of passing the measure to endorse the participation of the United States in the permanant court on the basis of the Harding-Hughes-Coolidge demands.

Unyielding warfare upon Senator Borah and the other irreconcilables is the watchword of Lenroot. The Wisconsin senator was almost as vindictive against Senator Hiram Johnson of California as he was against Borah. Both Johnson and Borah occupy important positions on the foreign relations committee, while Lenroot is a comparatively new member of that committee. The committee will probably recommend nonconcurrence in the administration proposals, and Borah will lead the fight against the court.

Lenroot, himself, is a machine politician of small-bore type. He never had an idea worth repeating in his whole life. His utterances are recognized as the phonographic reproductions of Wall Street. In his own state of Wisconsin he threw his support to the opponent of young LaFollette in the last senatorial election held in that state and was miserably defeated in spite of the fact that he pleaded with the voters to support Coolidge's administration. The defeat was a rebuke to Coolidge. But Lenroot is the only staunch Coolidge man on the foreign relations committee so he will be pushed forward. The political situation in Wisconsin is such that Lenroot will meet defeat next year when he runs for reelection.

Tho a stubborn fight is predicted it is conceded by most political observers that the proposition of this country's adherence to the world court will win. Lenroot claims that the administration has assurance of support from at least 75 senators, enough to win the fight.

Under a rule adopted at the last session of the senate, discussion on the world court will commence [illegible]cember 17 and may be continued [illegible] into 1926.

The sponsoring of adherence to the court by the government is openly talked of as a move in the interest of American finance capital, especially since Coolidge's New York speech last week wherein he not only advocated adherence to the world court but also threw out a strong suggestion in favor of this country entering the league of nations. He said that the government must follow American investments into European affairs.

TRADE UNION DELEGATION TO RUSSIA PLANNED AS MOVE TO FOLLOW UP PURCELL MESSAGE

By ART SHIELDS.

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—Two farewell mass meetings to Albert A. Purcell, chairman of the International Federation of Trade Unions, packed two big theater auditoriums to fire department limits the night before he sailed back to England. They applauded him again and again as he urged his message of one big international union movement of the workers of the world and they voted unanimously for the sending of an American trade union delegation to Russia as the preliminary step towards bringing the 6,000,000 Russian unionists into the "all-inclusive international" that Purcell sees as necessary to the safety of the working class.

Timothy Healey, president of the Stationary and Marine Engineers' International Union introduced Purcell at his first meeting and said he wanted the world to know that there were labor men in America who were not afraid to fight for international working class unity.

Louis Hyman, manager of the New York joint board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union gave an ardent talk for world solidarity of the toilers; P. Pascal Cosgrove, organizer of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union, reported that what he saw in Russia three years ago was very good from a labor standpoint. Alfred Bolton of the New York stereotypers and oth r unionists added their voices for the program.

Warm Response in Mexico, Too

Purcell sailed on the Berengeria happy in the thought that the ice of American labor isolation was not so firmly set. His manager tells of enthusiastic meetings in Boston, Toronto, Montreal, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, Kansas City, Baltimore and smaller cities and Purcell himself reports the warmest response from the Mexicon labor movement which routed him thru the cities in the republic to the south of us.

In Montreal James Simpson, vice president of the Canadian Trades and Labor Assembly declared his desire to go with the trade union delegation that he believes will investigate Russian affairs for American unions, and in American cities the local trade union conferences that sponsored the Purcell meetings are going on with the agitation here. The money left over from the $1,100 given at the two New York meetings will be the nucleus for the treasury such a trip will need.

Must Bring In Russian Unions

"If a delegation to Russia is made up of men who know the insides of workshop and the functioning of trade unions it will see the facts the British trade union delegation reported," said Purcell.

"The six million Russian union men are as bona fide a union movement as the British or the American, and their miners, for instance, have won better conditions for themselves than the miners in any other part of the world. No world program for the workers can be a success without the cooperation of this great Russian movement."

Purcell's argument for Russian inclusion into an all-embracing international is a workday and practical one. Imperialism is grinding down the workers of Asia and Africa at a few pence a day and is using their products to beat down our own conditions. Unless we bring them up we will go down, says the chairman of the I. F. T. U. The world labor movement must meet the challenge.

Beware Black International.

Wherever imperialism sets its foot, whether in Indian China, Japan or Siam there must our organization unite the victims to raise their standards. World trade union unity for action against imperialism and for the mutual protection and betterment of the workers. It will take the united power of the world's workers: the job is too big for just part of the movement alone.

And as to the outcry against the reds that is halting the unity movement, Purcell warns: "Beware that in your fear of the Red International you do not fall into the arms of the black capitalist international."

HELP SAVE THE DAILY WORKER!

I. W. W. CASTS A NET TO GET NEW GENERAL SECY.

Members Want to Know Candidates' Policies

The 17th general convention of the Industrial Workers of the World, in its closing hours made a list of nominees for the office of general secretary-treasurer, now held by Arthur Coleman.

Coleman was nominated but declined, as did Carl Keller and Nick Radivoeff. The three highest, which, if they do not decline, will go on the ballot are James P. Thompson, Ed Delaney and Herbert Mahler. Thompson is a hardy perennial; he is always nominated and always declines.

Also Rans.

If any of these three declines, the next in line takes his place. The other nominees who are in the also-ran class are Ernest Verlack, O. Hendricks, J. B. Golden, Chas. H. McKinnon, J. Lorden, Chas. Lundquist, John I. Turner, who was defeated last year by a few votes not being counted—Albert Hanson and Phil Engel.

Members of the I. W. W. around Chicago are wondering what happened to the resolution, supposed to come before the general convention from the small industrial union convention where it passed by a vote of nine to seven, providing that candidates for office in the general organization should be required to state their attitude toward the tasks confronting the organization and outline how they intend to conduct the organization affairs if elected.

Want No More Blank Checks.

Great numbers of members are interested in getting away from blind voting for unknown quantities and are wondering if this resolution chanced to get "lost." If it is, the candidates would do well to declare their stand on organization problems anyhow, as there is a real sentiment against signing any more blank checks and those who hang back will be suspected. If they vote for policies, then they want also to vote for men who believe in them to carry them out.

Evidently the experience of last election, when in defiance of the constitution only two names, instead of three, went on the ballot, had some effect. The convention elected a committee to see that the ballot went out in the correct form this year.

Militant Picketing Again Closes Mills

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 23.—Aggressive picketing forced the big B. B. & R. Knight Co.—cotton manufacturers—to cease trying to operate the Royal Mills at River Point where weavers are striking against the speed-up system that substitutes 32 looms for 16 per man.

DAILY WORKER KEPT STRIKE GOING 3 WEEKS

So Says Labor Faker in Deep Disgust

By JAMES J. BOUZAN.

(Worker Correspondent)

UTICA, N. Y., Nov. 23.—The statement made by Norman T. Thomas, superintendent of the Utica Steam & Mohawk Valley mills, to the capitalist press, is a lie.

He said that the workers are willing and satisfied to run more machines. The workers told Thomas, thru their committee, that they will not run more machines. Thomas replied to "try." But the workers said, "No, we can't run any more."

Nice Job!

But then what did Mr. Thomas do? He stopped for a day or two the weaving room in the Mohawk mill. The bosses told the workers they would to go on night shift or get out.

When weavers came into the mill looking for a job the boss said, "I'll put you on nights, 24 looms, $46 a week. You don't have to take the cloth off. Twelve hours a night."

This Is Democracy.

The following is a notice posted on the wall of the spinning room:

"Doffers must pick up bobbins that they drop on the floor immediately. They are not to be left on the floor to get all covered with dirt. If any doffer feels that she cannot bend her back, or, that is too lazy to pick them up, please notify the second hand and he will get their bill for them.

"If they don't do that, they will get a surprise if this room is not kept cleaner. Do not fool yourselves. There are plenty of others waiting to take your job."

DAILY WORKER Ran Strike.

Joseph R. White, organizer of the United Textile Workers of America, again has attacked The DAILY WORKER. He said that if it wasn't for The DAILY WORKER in the last strike we would have gone back to work two weeks earlier. The DAILY WORKER kept us out two weeks.

But White never said anything about some workers staying in the mills when the strike was called. The bosses send all the workers home for two months, keeping from 50 to 75 in each mill, not for production, but to fix up the machines for speeding up all of us when we got back to work.

And Then He Phoned It!

The workers read The DAILY WORKER and like its fighting spirit against the bosses. But White doesn't want to fight the bosses. Only once he told them to go to hell—and that was over a telephone! Maybe it was up for us workers to hear, at that!

SAN DIEGO FULL OF UNEMPLOYED, HUNGRY WORKERS

Crowds Pack Agencies Looking for Work

By CARL GIEBE.

(Worker Correspondent)

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Nov. 23—Chances for honest workers to make a living here are very poor. Hundreds of idle men hang around employment offices all day long, waiting for jobs. But most of the jobs go to the offices charging a fee of from $2.00 to $20.00 so the worker that is broke is always out of "luck."

The government employment agency is worse than a lottery. Chances are 100 to 1 against a fellow getting work there. The big blackboard is usually clean, except for some Mexican writing on top for cotton pickers in Arizona, or some such impossible place.

It is a pathetic sight to see the men crowd around the rail. Now and then the man in charge calls out for a dishwasher or a pick and shovel man—fifty cents an hour—or for a common laborer to do a couple hours' clean-up work. The men stand around all morning in a state of nervous tension, anxious to take anything. Many of them haven't slept in a bunk or bed for weeks.

What brings workers to San Diego? It is the propaganda of the chamber of commerce, which advertises this city as among the "favored" spots, with much farm labor needed because of recent rains. And there is supposed to be a building boom here.

But workers soon find out, after they have spent their small bank account for railroad fare—that the "boom" is only for capitalists and that if they don't watch out they will be thrown into jail for "vagrancy."

If you want to thoroughly understand Communism—study it.

DAWES PLAN WILL CUT STEEL WORKERS' WAGES; ONLY LEFT WING PROGRAM CAN AID THEM

By ISRAEL AMTER.

Five to six hundred thousand steel workers are slaving away in the mills of this country. Of this big number only 11,382 are organized. The Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, whose president is Mike Tighe, is making absolutely no effort to line up the steel workers, in spite of the fact that there is a big sentiment for organization.

What do the steel workers face? They face the United States Steel corporation, a billion dollar concern, which, in the last quarter, paid a dividend of $42,000,000; the Bethlehem Steel corporation, with $700,000,000 worth of stock, and various other corporations and independents, who work on "gentlemen's agreement" under the guidance of U. S. Steel. In the nine months of 1925, U. S. Steel earned $122,000,000, equalling the returns of 1924.

The last quarter's returns are $11,000,000 more than the same period of 1924. The steel industry is working from 80 to 85 capacity, according to the statement of the steel barons, which accounts for the huge prosperity that it is enjoying—that is to say, the steel owners.

Prosperity—For Bosses.

Mr. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel corporation, forsees continued prosperity for the steel industry—i. e., the steel magnates. What is the attitude, however, of these men at the top toward the workers?

The honorable president of the United States, that "well-wisher" of the working class, Mr. Coolidge, declares that they are to be given a share in the prosperity of the country. The steel magnates formulate this idea as meaning that the steel workers shall become shareholders in the steel concerns. Mr. Wadleigh, a well-known engineer, declares that this will be a means of making the workers take an interest in the welfare of their concern. Very true, indeed! But what does Mr. Schwab think of this scheme?

Dawes Plan Brings Wage Cut.

In a recent interview in which he sized up the situation, Mr. Schwab declared that the international situation and the return of Germany to the world market mean an intensification of competition. "This will necessitate a lowering of the cost of production and consequently a reduction of wages."

The steel barons are not waiting for Germany to become a keen competitor. They know that England is practically helpless at the present time, her steel industry for the most part operating with machinery that in the United States would be considered obsolete. The industry of France has made tremendous strides since France incorporated Alsace-Lorraine. Nevertheless the high technique of Germany, the low wages and the ten to twelve hours a day under the compulsion of the Dawes plan are placing Germany in a position to present considerable competition.

Mr. Schwab does not really fear this competition, for American steel manufacturers, of all manufacturers of the world, are in a position to scrap old machinery and install the very latest at no matter what cost. But Gary and Schwab are not satisfied with their profits—hence wages are going down. In the past four months wages have been slashed 6 to 7%. Thus in May-June, a 29-30 gauge doubler received $.877 per 1,000 pounds; in July-August he received only $.849 and in September-October his wages were again reduced to $.820 per thousand pounds. The same reduction took place in every department of the steel industry.

Living Costs Go Up.

In the past half year the cost of living has mounted; one has only to regard the price of eggs and butter to realize that they are no longer within reach of the workers. If, according to Schwab, the steel mills are working at almost full capacity, then wages of necessity should go up—but on the contrary, they are going down, the excuse being greater competition on the world market.

The purpose of this is perfectly obvious. Gary and Schwab know very well that steel production cannot continue at the present rate of production. The building trades, the backbone of the present "prosperity," has reached its peak. 1926 will witness a recession in the building trades. The automobile industry, which this year will reach a figure of about 4,000,000 cars, has overproduced and now is forcing a tremendous export trade. Automobile production even this month is slackening and men are being laid off.

They "Insist" on It.

In this description of the steel industry, one cannot forget the promise of Mr. Gary to abolish the 12-hour day, and his complaint thereafter that the workers insist upon working more than eight hours. True, for the simple reason that they cannot live on the eight hours' pay that they get.

500,000 to 600,000 steel workers are exposed to the worst exploitation that several billions of capital can impose, and are practically without organization. What has Mike Tighe to say about it? What are Mike Tighe and his machine doing to alter this situation? What has the American Federation of Labor done and what does it intend to do?

Only 11,382 of the mass of steel workers are in the Amalgamated Association, and Mike Tighe sits resplendently on his throne and declares everything is well with god in his heaven.

For Unity on Program.

The Amalgamated Association is an industrial organization and can be turned into a gigantic force if properly led and built up. This can only be done by all the left wingers and progressives uniting on a militant left wing program, and forcing Mike Tighe either to act in the interest of the organization or get out.

All the progressives must realize that today the fight must be not only against wage reductions, but for wage increase; for a 100% organized industry; against the speed-up system which is driving thousands of men out of work. To these basic demands must be added a campaign for a labor party, for if there is any industry in which the workers feel the heel of the capitalist government, it is the steel industry, where the workers, owing to lack of organization, are the helpless victims of government assistance to the steel barons.

Mike Tighe controls less than 50% of the 11,000 workers in the Amalgamated. He controls 86 of the small lodges, against 14 big lodges which are left wing or progressive. In these latter lodges the left wing is making great progress and must now strive with all energy to line up every progressive on the left wing program.

Major Issues.

These are the major issues that the left wing must drive home to the organized steel workers. And no small disputes should keep them apart. They must have a big delegation at the coming convention of the Amalgamated Association in April. No move should be tolerated, such as the non-payment of assessments, to disfranchise members in the elections for the convention. The assessment question must be fought out at the convention. Victory cannot be won by stepping aside from or outside the organization. The fight must be fought inside this convention—and if it need be, at further conventions.

If the whole left wing and the progressives line up behind the left wing program, they can give Mike Tighe the fight of his life. It will mean either action—which is not to be expected of Mike Tighe—or ousting of the reactionary machine. The question of organizing the steel industry is of greater importance than that of the assessment—of greater importance both to the men inside and outside the Amalgamated Association.

Blackie Ford Gets Support of Frisco Unions in Defense

"Ford's arrest amounts to persecution," the carpenters say in their protest resolution. Ford's trial is set for Dec. 1.

GREEN DECIDES UNIONS CANNOT BAR COMMUNISTS

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—The breach between the Bookkeepers', Stenographers' and Accountants' Union and Local No. 22, of the International Ladies' Garment Union that for awhile took the form of a strike against the clerical department of the garment offices was healed at a conference directed by William Green, president, American Federation of Labor.

Green advised the union to admit again to full union privileges Anna Berman and Irving Fraulkin, the two office workers the bookkeepers' union had attacked as Communists.

Green told the conference that the bookkeepers' union could not afford to bar workers. It is a struggling organization that annually appeals to the federation for assistance and the problem of organizing the office workers generally is a difficult matter. His advice was followed.

Sitting in at the conference were Leonard Bright, president of the union; Louis Hyman, manager of the New York joint board of the garment workers and others concerned. The strike followed the refusal of the local union to discharge these two clerical workers barred by the bookkeepers. At the time of this trouble the local garment body was functioning independently of the international union but since then it has come back and a peace pact has been ratified.

Willimantic Holding Out After 38 Weeks

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Nov. 23—The strike of American Thread Co. employes against the 10 per cent wage cut enters its 38th week. More than 2,000 are affected.

THIS APPRENTICE'S STORY MUST BE TOLD IN PAINTERS' LOCALS UNTIL OFFICIALS DO SOMETHING

By J. P., WORKER CORRESPONDENT.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 23.—Being a painters' apprentice I think it would be well to describe the conditions under which we have to learn the trade and under which we are allowed to join the Painters' Union.

We have an apprentice school here in Cleveland which is controlled by the bosses and by the city board of education. The Master Painters' Association and the board of education each have two representatives on the apprentice committee as against two representatives of the union.

These six men, together with the secretary of the Building Employers' Association and the instructor of the school are the ones who decide all the policies and arrangements under which the apprentices work.

"Great Opportunities"—To Scab.

Having control of the school the bosses use it to carry on their propaganda. Members of the Building Employers' Association, as well as the instructor, deliver lectures to the apprentices, telling them of the wonderful prospects before them of the great opportunities that a painter has of becoming a contractor and a boss, etc.

This is really propaganda against the union, giving the young fellows an idea that the union is only a temporary thing, while the important thing is the "chance" of becoming a boss.

Discriminate Against Progressives.

Apprentices who happen to have progressive or radical opinions are discriminated against and forced to a lot of trouble. According to the agreement, apprentices are supposed to attend the school for four hours a week. If they happen to be late for a few minutes, they are forced to waste a half a day on their own time in order to go to the apprentice committee to explain the reason for being late. In many cases they are punished by being forced to attend school for three or four days a week also on their own time.

On one occasion, for being late ten minutes to school, my boss was instructed by the apprentice committee to dock a half day's wages out of my pay. During the past week I was ordered to attend school for four weeks, without pay, simply because of the false statement made by the instructor of the school.

He claimed that I had been notified to appear before the apprentice committee, altho several of the apprentices who were present at the time he claimed to have informed me, declared that he had not told me anything about the matter.

No Help From Union Officials.

The District Council of the Painters' Union did not even care to listen to me when I tried to appeal from the decision of the boss controlled apprentice committee, instead the business agent wanted to know why I had not saved enough money during the time I had been working to be able to spend four weeks in school without pay.

The instructor of the school is very much prejudiced against some of us because we tried to prevent the board of education from using the free services of the apprentices during school hours to paint several schools, while at the time there were many painters out of work.

Fifteen of us were forced to paint two schools, outside work, which we all are experienced at. The excuse the teacher gave was that we would get experience on the job, but the fact is that the experience that we really need is on inside work painting woodwork, varnishing, paperhanging, etc., which is more advanced than painting the sides of a frame building.

An Open Shop Forum.

When the school was first organized about a year ago, all the apprentices were enthusiastic about it, since they were actually learning something about the trade. But during the last couple of months, the school has become dead and uninteresting, very little about the trade is being taught; instead the school is used as a forum by the Builders' Association.

The school is so dead, that some of us were put to work fixing the plumbing and the toilets in the school building, which is old and in bad condition, located on W. Fourth St., a factory and warehouse district.

Union Should Step In.

If the apprentice schools are to be really run for the benefit of the apprentices a lot of changes must be made. In the first place, the school should be under the control of the union, and not of the bosses. The apprentices should be represented on the committee in charge of the school.

The wage scale at the present time is very low, when we remember that an apprentice in forty hours turns out as much work as a full time union painter, altho only getting about half the wages. This applies to apprentices who have already served two or more years. Beginners are even worse off as far as wages are concerned, receiving only from fifteen to twenty-five dollars a week for the first year.

I hope the Young Workers League will begin to pay some attention to the young apprentices and begin to organize apprentice clubs, which will be a means of giving the apprentices a chance of organizing themselves to obtain better conditions and wages on the job, and to receive more attention and consideration from the union.

CUTTERS' LOCAL PROGRESSIVES FIGHT GANGS

Dubinsky Tries Old Terrorist Rule

(Worker Correspondent)

NEW YORK CITY—Many militant fighters of Local No. 10 of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union were badly beaten and bruised, by the gangsters of the reactionary bureaucratic machine of that local, at a mass meeting arranged by the Progressive Cutters on Thursday, Nov. 19, at Webster Hall, for the purpose of acquainting the masses of the cutters as to the correct state of affairs and conditions in their local.

The demogogic and phrase monging Manager Dubinsky, knowing of the meeting in advance, organized his gangster clique to break it up, but without considering, that the progressive cutters were well prepared for it.

Pogrom Tactics.

Their reactionary tactics against the cutters manifested itself by their pulling out knives, cutting up many cutters assembled and breaking chairs over their heads. As a result of this Comrade Berkowitz, an energetic fighter, in the ranks of the workers, against the bosses and their tools, the reactionaries, was badly beaten and slashed over the head. He had to be immediately taken to the doctor.

This conflict is a continuation of the fight between the rank and file and the reactionary bureaucratic machine, who is still in control of Local No. 10 and is fighting the lefts with his corrupt tactics of "gangsterism," even after the peace resolution which was adopted between the Joint Action Committee and the General Executive Board, which was supposed to have created harmonious co-operation between the various crafts of the International.

The rioters were finally ejected from the meeting. After the turmoil had somewhat abated, the chairman, Comrade Horowitz, proceeded with the meeting, declaring "this outburst of violence and bloodshed of our outspoken reactionary Dubinsky will not shake the determination of the progressive cutters. On the contrary it will tend to strengthen their determined will to clean Local No. 10 of this despotism which prevails in it."

The following speakers, Berlin, Svoss, Lukin, Shapiro, Brown, Bernstein, Cooper, spoke giving their own opinion about the splitting tactics perused by the vile smelling skunk, Dubinsky. All condemned his atrocities committed against the cutters assembled at that meeting and a resolution adopted demanding Dubinsky resign.

Illustrating Banking Control of Industry; Both Woven Together

By WALLACE T. METCALFE

WARREN, Ohio, Nov. 23.—In a report to the stockholders, President Wick of the Trumbull Steel company of this city writes that the company owns 600 acres of land of which 30 per cent is used for manufacturing purposes. The company has 40.5 acres under roof, 17.1 miles of trackage with all equipment and 4,500 workers employed.

For the past month or so, this steel company, one of the finest independent steel mills in the Mahoning valley, has been under the management of Jas. A. Campbell, president of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., because of the financial difficulties its old management experienced.

A new loan has been floated in Wall Street and the subscription books for their 13 millions six per cent 15-year mortgage gold bonds closed on Nov. 13. According to the Wall Street report $1,500,000 was subscribed to in Mahoning valley.

Trumbull Steel Co. has an agreement with the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel & Tin Workers. It is one of the few companies in Mahoning valley having such an agreement.

British Labor Party Man Says American Labor Is Moribund

BALTIMORE—(FP)—Rhys Davies, British labor member of parliament and under-secretary of home affairs in the MacDonald cabinet, told the Baltimore open forum that American working men are still as much capitalists in their outlook as are the owners of the plants where they are employed. American labor's political condition he termed moribund.

MINOR SPEAKS AT HUGE MEET IN LOS ANGELES

Over $300 Donated to Daily Worker

By L. P. RINDAL

LOS ANGELES, Calif. —(By Mail) —Celebration of the Russian revolution here included a mass denunciation of capitalist "justice," with protest resolutions against the continued imprisonment of the I. W. W. in San Quentin, Calif., seventy-two in all, against the sentence imposed on Charlotte Anita Whitney, and against Comrade Ben Gitlow's confinement in Sing Sing.

"Fear of the workers power is shaking the world," said Robert Minor, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party, in addressing the huge gathering in the Music Art Hall. "The only country on the up-grade is Soviet Russia; the standard of living there is higher than in any other country in Europe and this because of the revolution. When so much can be done in backward Russia in eight years, it can be done in the United States in eight months."

When William Schneiderman, who was chairman of the meeting, announced the collection, $303.79 was donated for The DAILY WORKER. Singing of the International was led by the Junior group, who likewise carried on the sale of literature and anniversary buttons, under the direction of Anna Cornblath and Emmanuel Levin.

Worker Correspondents of Novy Mir Produce 'Living Newspaper' Issue

The second number of the "living newspaper" issued by the Chicago workers correspondents of the Novy Mir last Saturday night made a bigger hit than the first. The Workers' House was crowded, and even the local "intelligentzia" made its appearance.

The contents of the second number was also better and more plentiful than the first one. The three cartoons copied from Pravda brought forth laughter and applause from the audience.

The number was divided into different sections: political, fiction, life of the Russian colony, humor, poetry, etc. The audience enjoyed the evening, with the exception of two individuals, the editor of the local white guard Russian newspaper and his assistant.

The "living newspaper" is now an established institution in the Russian colony. It will be "published" periodically from now on.

Daily Worker Dance for All New Yorkers on Thanksgiving Eve.

The next DAILY WORKER Rescue Party in New York will be a Grand Ball at Royal Palace Hall, 16 Manhattan Ave. (near Broadway) in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, on the evening before Thanksgiving, Wednesday, November 25th.

Since Thanksgiving day is a legal holiday this Wednesday night is just as good for a dance as a Saturday night, so that the beautiful Royal Palace Hall should be crowded with friends of The DAILY WORKER.

NEW YORK WORKERS' SCHOOL HAS CLASS IN TRADE UNION WORK

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—A course in trade union work is the big feature in the courses to start in the Workers' School on Wednesday, Nov. 25. This course will take up the structure and growth of the American trade union movement and the major political, economic and technical problems met with by union officers and union members with special reference to the duties of politically awakened workers, active in their unions. Some of the problems to be taken up are: The organization of the unorganized; class collaboration; shop committees; etc. Leading trade unionists will participate in round table discussion of strike strategy; specialists will take up the problems and technique of wage and price negotiations and agreements. Labor and the law; politics in the labor movement, the world trade union movement, and the fight against reaction and reformism, are some of the special topics included.

The first topic to be discussed is the History of the American Labor Movement. All participants in the course are expected to read pages 1-13 of the small pamphlet, "Trade Unions in America," and pages 1-52 of the pamphlet, "Bankruptcy of the American Labor Movement," by Wm. Z. Foster. Supplementary reading recommended is as follows:

Commons—"History of Labor in the U. S.," pages 3-21.

Hoxie—"Trade Unionism in the U. S.," pages 1-176.

Carlton—"History and Problems of Organizing Labor," pages 12-102.

In all cases there will be a minimum assignment of necessary reading and additional assignments for those who want to do advance work in the same subject either in preparation for the class work at a later date.

After a discussion of the development of the labor movement as divided into the periods of 1827 to 1837, to 1857, to 1872, and to 1920, the Knights of Labor, the American Federation of Labor and the I. W. W. will be discussed. Some of the questions to be put to the students during the first hour, are:

1. What was the effect of the development of large corporations on trade unions?

2. What is the structure of the American Federation of Labor?

3. What is meant by an industrial union?

4. What is meant by revolutionary unionism?

5. What is a company union?

6. Discuss the characteristics and weaknesses of the I. W. W.

7. Discuss the limitations of the American Federation of Labor.

The main subjects to be considered in Lesson 2, entitled: Organizing the Unorganized, are:

1. To what extent are the workers in this country organized (with a special study of: large scale industry, small scale industry, American and foreign-born, skilled and unskilled, Negroes, youth, women.)

2. What are the methods used by the employers to prevent organization of the unorganized.

3. What methods would you suggest of organizing the following: small shops, large shops, contracting shops, out-of-town shops, and the various categories mentioned in the first question.

4. Organizing methods in particular industries.

5. Use in organizing campaigns of the press, mass meetings, leaflets, rank and file organization committees, the united fronts, the official trade union machinery of the American Federation of Labor, trade organizers, shop nuclei.

6. Discussion of obstacles to organization furnished by class collaboration, slack seasons, jurisdictional dispute between unions, company unions.

7. How can the party aid in the organizing of the unorganized?

From the scope of these first two lessons, it can be seen that this course will be of fundamental value to every trade union official or active trade union worker. Leading experts in various fields will discuss the subjects involved as will all of the members of the class. Since the class will include the most active, progressive trade unionists, the discussion is expected to furnish many valuable contributions. A stenographer will be on hand to take them down and material derived from this course will be published from time to time for the use of trade unionists in other cities. The instructor, Bert Miller, is to give two such courses simultaneously, each of them forming part of a party training course of which the other parts are Marxism-Leninism and party history and problems. However, a few separate registrations for the trade union course will be taken. Those interested, should register at once as no new registrations are likely to be accepted after the course is actually under way. Registrations will be taken any day or evening at the headquarters of the New York Workers' School, 108 E. 14th St.

Other courses offered for Wednesday night are: Marxism-Leninism, instructor, Bert Wolfe; Marxism, Leninism, instructor, D. Benjamin; Intermediate English, instructor, Pauline Rogers; Advanced English, instructor, Eli Jacobson.

Workers' Schools Notes

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—A course in Marxism-Leninism, instructor, Bert Wolfe, and a course in Party History and Problems, instructor, William W. Weinstone, are the principle courses beginning Tuesday night. In addition, there will be a course in Intermediate English and possibly, one in Contemporary Drama.

The study of Party History and Problems has as its political aim the orientating of our leading comrades for a solution of future problems thru the study of present and past ones.

In each period of the party history, the problems will be taken up and discussed from the viewpoint of the Communist International. Effort will be made to relate the C. I. viewpoint at the various congresses with the party attitude toward such problems as the party organizational structure and the federation, the legal and illegal organization; the united front and labor party, trade union work; agrarian and Negro work and imperialism.

A Party of Lenin.

The course in Marxism-Leninism aims to give a political base for the study of party problems. Part I, dealing with Marxism, will take up the origin and the philosophical, political and economic aspects of the proletarian social science which bears the name of Marx. How, out of utopian socialism, metaphysical materialism and Hegelian dialectics, he welded a scientific basis for socialism, his participation in the revolution of 1848 and the lessons he derived therefrom, his activities in the First International and his conflicts with the anarchists and Lasallean social-democrats, the fundamental economic concepts of Marxism leading up to the accumulation of capimonopoly and imperialism, the revisionist and opportunist attacks on, and distortion of Marxism, and finally, a study of "Lenin as a Marxist," in which the roots of the present day Communist theory and practice will be shown to be imbedded in Marxism—these are the basic elements of the course.

Following directly from the study of "Lenin as a Marxist" in Part I, and from the study of capitalist accumulation, Part II, entitled Leninism, will begin with a study of the economics and politics of the era of trusts, monopoly, export of capital, imperialism, and the polemic with Kautsky concerning "super-imperialism." This will be followed by a study of class divisions and class struggles in the imperialist epoch, the colonial peoples, the peasantry and the petty-bourgeoisie; and then a detailed study of the proletariat, the aristocracy of labor, opportunism, revisionism, and the break of Lenin with the Second International. The proletarian revolution, its basis in objective and subjective conditions, the relation between workers and bourgeoisie revolutions, the revolution as a problem of power, Bonapartism, Luxemburgism, Trotskyism will also be taken up and after consideration of the Russian revolution and the Communist International as "product" of Leninism, the final subject will be a "Party of Lenin."

South Slav Branch W. Brunswick, Pa.	15 00
So. Slav Br., Nashawauk, Minn.	14 75
Total	$169.00

Workers' Dilettante Club, Clarion, Pa., along with the check for $47.50, sent a short letter in which they say:

"Dear Comrades: Upon the basis of the resolution of the South Clav Bureau, which was printed in the Radnik, for the support of The DAILY WORKER, our Independent Dilettante Club at its meeting decided immediately to undertake to support The DAILY WORKER, and indeed to give at once $20 from the treasury, and also to make a collection among the members, which brot in $27.75, making altogether $47.75.

"This is our small gift for our fighting organ, The DAILY WORKER, for we know that The DAILY WORKER is the only Communist daily newspaper in the English language.

"The Committee."

Note: This letter, written by workers, shows that the idea of Communism is spreading constantly among the masses of South Slavic workers. This club is not a party unit, but it is doing its duty towards the Communist movement better than many party units. The action taken by this club should serve as an example for all our comrades and our organizations, so that they too may perform their Communist duty.

During the first ten days of our thousand-dollar campaign, we have collected $269.00. We urge all comrades to do their duty within the set time, so that we may help to free The DAILY WORKER of its financial difficulites.

Charles Novak, secretary, South Slavic Bureau.

Battle School Heads and Police During Education Week

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—The Young Workers League, in its vigorous campaign against the capitalist American education week, has met the organized opposition of the school principals the police and the courts. Since the 14th of November, the Young Workers League has held many indoor and open air meetings in front of the evening public and high schools, with thousands of workers who attend these schools flocking to these meetings. Great numbers of leaflets were distributed.

The principal of Morris High School in the Bronx summoned the police to arrest the comrade distributing leaflets. The comrade was arrested and $500 bail given. He was fined $20.

In Williamsburgh, Brooklyn, the gangster unity of principals and police was even more complete. There the capitalist forces formed a triple alliance. A gang of capitalist boys, sons of the noted open shoppers, were laying low waiting for the "Reds." When our comrades began to distribute leaflets the gang informed the principals who in turn called out the police. The comrades had already disposed of the leaflets and were beginning to leave when they were arrested. They fined $10 each. To intimidate them their fingerprints were taken.

In spite of these persecutions the membership of the Young Workers League will continue to expose the American Legion and the national board of education and their sham "education week."

Y. W. L. Organizes Two Branches in Region of Heavy Industry

By GEO. PAPCUN

REPUBLIC, Pa., Nov. 23.—Two Young Workers League branches have been organized in the strike region here by the Pittsburgh league for the purpose of starting nucleus work in the mines and steel mills. The Pittsburgh league expects to organize many more in the coal fields.

Cleveland Jewish Br. Gives Fourth Jubilee

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 23.—The Jewish branch of Cleveland will celebrate its fourth anniversary on Dec. 19 at the Carpenters' Hall, 2226 East 55th, street.

The celebration will be a gala affair. In addition to the Freiheit Gezangs Verein, the committee in charge has arranged a treat for the workers of Cleveland. Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, general secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, and Comrade M. Olgin of the Jewish bureau of the party, will be the speakers. The reputation of these two comrades as speakers is sufficient to guarantee that Carpenters' Hall will be packed to the doors.

This is the first time since the party convention that these two comrades have been in Cleveland. Every party comrade will want to hear them—so get your tickets at once, before they are all sold.

"Dance of the Books" on Thanksgiving Eve.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—"The Dance of the Books," to take place at 108 East 14th St., on Thanksgiving Eve, will offer many novelty features appropriate to so festive an occasion.

The entire top floor of the Workers School at 108 East 14th St. will be devoted to the festivities and a big samovar will keep things warm. A very nice musical program will be one of the features. The proceeds of the "Dance of the Books" are to go to the Brower Memorial Library. Get your tickets at the School 35c.

When that argument begins at lunch time in your shop tomorrow—show them what the DAILY WORKER says about it.

MINUTES OF MORGAN BANK SHOW POWER

omy with the only provision that China promise to abolish the "likin" or tax on goods between provinces inside China.

In themselves, however, the minutes show how the international bankers can make or unmake nations, change the policies of governments and control the destinies of peoples.

The bankers who handle Chinese bonds do the bossing. The New York minutes show that in Morgan's office in the above named days in October there met C. S. Addis, representing the British banks; R. St. Pierre, representing French financiers; H. Kashiwagi, of Japan, and Thomas W. Lamont of Morgan and company. Lamont was the chairman.

Wanted Chinese Bankers.

The minutes show that the consortium desired to bring Chinese bankers into the group the better to aid the international banditti in the plunder of China:

"The council reiterates its desire to see the formation of an effective Chinese group to be admitted as a member of the consortium upon terms of equality with the other banking groups. The consortium's Peking representatives are to be instructed forthwith to proceed with the discussion of the foregoing question with such important members of the Chinese banking community as the Peking representatives consider appropriate."

The minutes show that the bankers discussed how they should have the governments handle the question of the Chinese customs conference. They say:

"The meeting then proceeded to a discussion of some phases of the Chinese situation relating to the finances which all necessarily form part of the deliberations of the customs conference.

Good Offices.

"It was resolved that the council's present views touching upon the financial problems of the Chinese government should be embodied in the attached memorandum and that the good offices of the American group be utilized in the transmission of said memorandum to the United States department of state, with a request that the memorandum or a summary of same should be forwarded in confidence to the delegates of all four governments at the forthcoming special conference and to the group of representatives at Peking, with the expressed hope that the government delegates be requested to keep the group representatives informed as far as possible of developments, upon question involved."

This was signed by Addis, St. Pierre, Lamont and Kashiwigi.

The memorandum, which the minutes say were attached, gives in detail the manner in which the bankers expect the diplomats to handle China. The fig-leaf of disavowal of any political control is hung over the naked control of the bankers in the following words:

"Properly" Bankers' Business.

"The political questions in prospect are quite outside the scope of the consortium. The political situation in China cannot, however, be treated by itself. It involves financial considerations which may properly be considered to lie within the competence of a consortium of bankers. It is to this aspect of the question that the attention of the council is now directed."

No Politics—But!

It does not claim that bankers should have anything at all to do with political affairs, but it instructs the representatives of the imperialist powers what questions to bring up, and advices that—The inauguration of a modern system of national accounting would do much to assist this—meaning the adjustment of expenditures of the Chinese government.

Funding of the Chinese debt is taken up and then in paragraph six the hint is given that the imperialist powers work out a plan in conference with the Chinese government at Peking and some of the military Chinese provincial governors to suppress the nationalist liberation upheaval. It says:

Wants Canton Suppressed.

"Recognizing the difficulty which the Chinese government is experiencing in exercising control thruout the country and understanding the desirability of security and the co-operation of the provinces, the special conference (of diplomats) may see fit to suggest the institution of a discussion to this end between the Chinese government and the provinces."

There is evidence that the censor has closed down on the proposal for what particular measures this three-cornered conspiracy against the national liberation movement was going to take. But the proof is certain that the influence of the bankers in China is supreme—so far as is in their power to control the imperialist governments. Controlling the Chinese national revolution is, of course, another matter.

SIX VICTIMS IN ONE WEEK IN FEUD BETWEEN GENNA AND VINCI GUNMEN FOR BOOZE MONOPOLY

Following the revelation, made by the attorney for the two Genna gangsters, who were recently sentenced to 14 years in jail, that over 300 Chicago policemen and state's attorney's detectives were on the payroll of the Genna gang, which dominated ward politics in the Italian colony around West Taylor street and controlled the major portion of the booze peddling on the southwest side, comes the sixth killing in a feud on the south side between the Genna and Vinci dope-peddling gangs within the past week.

Fight for Monopoly.

This feud of the Vinci gang against the Genna gang challenges the monopoly of the latter of the booze, dope and vice traffic on the South side, has so far taken the lives of six gunmen in the past week. The feud started with the murders of Samoots Amatuna, one of the Genna gunmen, and that of a South side saloonkeeper, Edward Zine, who was shot in front of his home after attending the funeral of the Genna gunman. Michael Vinci, who since the death of the Genna leaders has attempted to take over the monopoly of booze and dope peddling on the Southwest side and add it to that which he held on the South side was the first of the Vinci gunmen to fall in the feud.

Following the killing of Vinci, two other gunmen were killed that were members of the Genna gang. Then followed the murder of John Mannati, when he attempted to shield the murderer of Vinci and denied knowing Vinci, whom he had assisted in terrorizing the Italian colony in the eleventh ward and in peddling dope and booze and controlling his traffic in vice.

Well-Known to Police.

The Vinci gang has been well-known to the police on the South side. This gang has been used by the politicians in the eleventh ward to "line-up" the Italian vote. The Pekin station of the police department which has control of this district, during the past summer has broken up a number of street meetings of the South Side English branch of the Workers (Communist) Party and has spent considerable time and energy in keeping working class speakers off the streets, and has allowed the Vinci gang to flourish under their noses.

How Many on Payroll?

In the trial of Sam Vinci for the murdering of John Minatti, it is doubtful if there will be an expose of the number of policemen that were in the employ of the Vinci gang.

CONDEMNED POLISH COMMUNIST ESCAPES TO SOVIET RUSSIA

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 23.—Comrade Lescinsky, who recently escaped from a Warsaw prison, is now in the Union of Soviet Republics.

Comrade Lescinsky at the beginning of the Russian revolution, which brought into being the dictatorship of the proletariat, was a member of the council of people's commissars as representative of the Polish districts, this was before the Polish districts separated from Soviet Russia.

When the white terror regime took over the Polish government, they immediately decided to sentence Lescinsky to death and the sentence to be executed whenever he was caught in Poland. Despite this standing order for his execution, Comrade Lescinsky returned to Poland and carried on illegal revolutionary work under an assumed name.

During the course of his activiites he was arrested by the Polish police and sent to jail. The Polish police did not know who they had in their hands at first. Just a day or two before Lescinsky's trial, the police were able to find out the real identity of this active comrade. Before the judge was able to call out the real name of Comrade Lescinsky and call for the immediate execution of the sentence, Lescinsky escaped and is now in Soviet Russia.

DETROIT "RED TEA" RAISES $328.46 FOR DAILY WORKER

Pledges to the amount of $520.00 and $328.46 in cash to save The DAILY WORKER were the net results of the "Red Tea" given by Detroit readers and sympathizers of the American Communist press last Saturday night at the House of the Masses. The participants were stirred by the realization that other meetings were being held at the same time in other Communist centers for the same cause.

Red candles gleamed from the tables, where girls and women in the brilliant costumes of many nations served tea, sandwiches and cigarets under the sign of the Hammer and Sickle.

"The capitalists with whom The DAILY WORKER has to deal in buying paper, ink and other supplies will foreclose and stop the presses unless $10,000 is sent to headquarters in a week," Edgar Owens, district organizer, told the comrades and friends. "The DAILY WORKER started 22 months ago on the proverbial shoe string. It has obtained other shoe strings since. And now it needs one more. Bear in mind that the working class will never be revolutionary in the United States until the English-speaking workers are brought within the scope of the revolution.

"And The DAILY WORKER is the first Communist daily in the English language in the world. Being of the left wing even of the radical movement, The DAILY WORKER faces a harder struggle to survive than the average paper of the labor movement. If the present struggle to save The DAILY WORKER and The DAILY WORKER plant is not won, we shall have to start all over again and build once more all that we have today. The struggle would then be much harder."

Sam Spargel, Russian pianist, and Max Levy with Rebecca Katzman as accompanist, contributed vocal and instrumental numbers which helped open the pocket books. Maurice Sugar, the chairman, after the collection and refreshment sales were counted, announced that cash in the amount of $328.46 and pledges in the amount of $520.00 were the results of this Red Tea.

The English branch of the Workers Party extends its sincere thanks to the comrades and sympathizers who made their Red Tea so gratifying a success.

The Movement for World Trade Union Unity

By TOM BELL.

This is the seventh instalment of a series of articles dealing with the question of World Trade Union Unity. This instalment deals with the American Federation of Labor and World Trade Union Unity.

The American Federation of Labor and World Trade Union Unity.

IN 1919 Gompers attended the first congress of the International Federation Federation of Trade Unions at Amsterdam. He aided the bureaucrats of the unions in the Allied countries to apply the policy of the Allied diplomats there. But when these bureaucrats were forced thru pressure of the European workers to place on their program the abolition of capitalism and the socialisation of industry, Gompers could not stand it and withdrew from Amsterdam. The leaders of Amsterdam being anxious to secure the affiliation of the American Federation of Labor, tried to explain to Gompers that he was taking the socialization of industry plank in the program too seriously, and this was no bar to the affiliation of the A. F. of L. to Amsterdam. But Gompers could not even stand for a program of socialization which was never intended to be the guiding line of the activity of Amsterdam.

In spite of the fact that the A. F. of L. is not affiliated with Amsterdam, some of the international unions are affiliated with the industrial secretariats affiliated with Amsterdam, such as the United Mine Workers of America which is affiliated with the Miners' International. These affiliations, of course, mean nothing so far as achieving international unity is concerned. The relationship with the industrial secretariats merely consist of rewarding some deserving official with a trip to Europe to attend the meetings of the secretariats.

This isolation of the A. F. of L. from the international trade union movement reflects the foreign policy of the department of state of the United States imperialist government. The policy of the A. F. of L. follows in the most careful manner the policy of the imperialist diplomats, as can be seen by the following facts:

Before the entry of the United States into the war in 1917, Woodrow Wilson urged all Americans to be "neutral even in thought." At that time it did not suit the financiers and industrialists to enter the war, and their president preached neutrality. The A. F. of L. policy was also "neutral even in thought."

In 1917 the financiers finally decided that this country would enter the war on the side of the Allies. Wilson, the "peace president" of 1916, became the advocate of war against "Hun militarism." The policy of the A. F. of L. was just as easily changed to advocacy of a war of extermination against the Central Powers. Thruout the A. F. of L. unions' propaganda in favor of the war was carried on vigorously. Trade unionists who opposed the imperialist war were denounced, and the trade unions became part of the recruiting machinery of the U. S. army. Gompers sponsored the formation of the Alliance of Labor and Democracy, a united front of leading labor fakers and yellow socialists such as Walling, Spargo and Russell, to line the labor movement up behind the war aims of the Allies and the United States. Gompers also went on a mission to the Allied countries to propagandize the workers of those countries, who were tiring of the butchery, in favor of continuing the war and assuring them that the workers of the United States were supporting the Allies.

At the end of the war the United States imperialists actively participated in European affairs during the peace conference of Versailles. While Wilson represented American imperialism at the Versailles peace table, Gompers co-operated in the formulation of the idea of the labor office of the league of nations along with the labor fakers of the Allied countries. Active participation in European affairs by the imperialist diplomats of the United States had its counterpart in the participation of the A. F. of L. in the European labor movement.

The landslide victory of the republican party in 1920 on a platform of withdrawal of the United States from European affairs, the defeat of the league of nations, and the establishment of the policy of United States isolation, found a ready response from the A. F. of L. Gompers spurned the Amsterdam International. It is interesting to note that one of the reasons for the A. F. of L. withdrawal from the Amsterdam International was the clause in the constitution binding all affiliated sections to carry out the decisions of the executive bureau. On the same grounds the republican party advocated that the United States should not join the league of nations.

So exactly does the policy of the A. F. of L. parallel that of the United States government that there can be no question as to the A. F. of L. officialdom being the labor wing of the American imperialist government. The following formula shows this to be true: Under Wilson: 1916—"Neutral even in thought"; 1917—"War to end war"; 1919—United with European labor fakers in labor office of league of nations and Amsterdam International. Under Harding: Withdrawal from Amsterdam International.

Now that the financiers of Wall Street see the necessity of plunging headlong into European affairs and openly taking over control of several European nations to protect their investments, and at the same time break the grip of Britain in European affairs, they have started a movement for the entry of the United States into the world court of the league of nations—the first step toward formal entry into the league itself. Coolidge is the chief propagandist for this step, and is supported by the other republican leaders. Naturally the A. F. of L. also supports this step and comes out for the entry of the United States into the world court.

No matter what the imperialist Washington government advocates it will be supported by the A. F. of L. officialdom.

But the isolation policy of the republican party of 1920 underwent a change until in 1924 the United States again intervened officially in European affairs by the bringing of Germany under the Dawes plan. Again the A. F. of L. policy undergoes a change and Gompers sets his sails for re-entering the European labor movement thru negotiations with representatives of the German and British trade unions at the El Paso convention of the A. F. of L. in October, 1924.

The Dawes plan is supported by the capitalists of Germany, France and Great Britain (Ramsay MacDonald was premier of Britain at the time). The Dawes plan bringing loans from America saved German capitalism from utter collapse. The reactionary labor leaders of these countries support the scheme also. The burden is borne by the German workers in the shape of reduced wages, longer hours and more intense exploitation. The workers of the rest of Europe are menaced by a reduction of their standard of living because the bosses demand wage cuts, the abolition of the eight-hour day and more production in order to compete with the cheap commodities produced in Germany under the Dawes plan. Great revolts of labor will be brought about because of the Dawes plan in Europe.

American financiers support the Dawes plan as a means of safeguarding their investments in Europe. The United States government re-enters European affairs to aid the financiers. The A. F. of L. follows suit to prevent the European workers revolting against the Dawes plan, and the burdens placed upon them to produce interest on the American loans.

The A. F. of L. plans to establish connections with the Amsterdam International to strengthen the right wing officialdom in their fight aganist the movement for trade union unity directed by the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee and rapidly gaining the support of the rank and file of the trade union movement of Europe.

For this purpose Gompers carried on negotiations with the British and German delegates to the A. F. of L. El Paso convention regarding the entry of the A. F. of L. into the Amsterdam International.

At the Atlantic City convention of the A. F. of L., October, 1925, the policy of the A. F. of L. as the bulwark against trade union unity became clear. A. A. Purcell, fraternal delegate to the convention from the British Trades Union Congress, and president of the Amsterdam International, made a brilliant speech in favor of recognition of Soviet Russia and international trade union unity at the Atlantic City convention. During his speech Purcell said:

> I come to make a call for the unity of the world's workers—for the world brotherhood of all those who toil.
> In Britain we have twelve per cent of our workers permanently unemployed. And our experts tell us that unemployment must grow increasingly worse.
> I am proud of the genius for organization and the essential grip of things which my class in Russia has displayed.
> I say that you, workers of America, have much to learn from Russia. I do hope that, from now on, the organized workers of America will establish the closest fraternal relations with the organized workers of Russia.
> Just as the general council of the Trade Union Congress, representative of the whole trade union movement of Britain, has sent delegations to Russia, so I hope and trust the American Federation of Labor will do the same.

Green, in replying to Purcell's speech denounced the movement for world trade union unity as Bolshevism, as a plot of "Moscow," and so on. He said that the A. F. of L. rejects all attempts to > . . . substitute for our philosophy the philosophy of Communism. We are not ready to accept that, and we wish that our friend, who has so kindly advised us and has offered us such frank suggestions might take back to the Russian Red International this message, that the American labor movement will not affiliate with an organization that preaches that doctrine or stands for that philosophy.

The report adopted against world trade union unity says:

> We convey to the world the most solemn warning of which we are capable that we will not willingly tolerate in the western hemisphere any old world movement which seeks to impose itself upon American peoples over the will of those peoples. What the United States government, thru President Monroe, expressed to Europe as a warning against armed territorial aggression we convey in equally emphatic terms regarding aggression by propaganda. The Americas stand for democracy. The Pan-American Federation of Labor is the recognized international labor movement of the Americas. Through it the American republics give expression to the aspirations and ideals of their wage-earning masses and the American peoples are determined that it shall so continue.
> Neither the Red International of autocratic Moscow nor any other international may in complacency ignore this definition of American labor policy.

Thus the A. F. of L. officialdom disposed of the question of world trade union unity. Very cleverly the question was linked up with Communism, Bolshevism, and every other bogey used to scare the American trade unionists, who have been thoroly poisoned against all revolutionary workers' movements by the capitalist press, and the capitalist trade union officialdom. But in spite of all the anti-Red propaganda of Green & Co. the fact that they fight world trade union unity is plain.

But the A. F. of L. officialdom only opposes unity with that section of the world trade union movement that desires unity to fight capitalist exploitation and imperialist wars. Toward the reactionary Amsterdam International leaders Green is quite friendly. In his speech against trade union unity Green made a small reservation which is worthy of note:

> . . . we are willing to join with and co-operate with labor movements thruout the world, that rest upon sound, fundamental principles of democracy and justice and righteousness and human liberty. . .

Toward the reactionary trade union delegation from the German Trade Union Federation Green displayed the utmost friendliness, because Fritz Tarnow, their spokesman, denounced Bolshevism and stated:

> The greatest problem which has to be solved in Europe is the restoration of a sound economy. . .

Naturally Green welcomes such a fine supporter of the Dawes plan and the enslavement of the German workers to increase the wealth of the House of organ. In reply to the speech of Tarnow, Green replied:

> I want to call upon all our national unions, our state and central bodies, our local unions everywhere to meet these brothers as they travel from place to place and extend to them every facility for making the most comprehensive and all embracing study of the problems in which they are interested.

Purcell, who toured the country speaking before mass meetings of thousands of enthusiastic trade unionists for world trade union unity, received only opposition from the A. F. of L. officialdom, and the Washington Post demanded his deportation as an "undesirable" on its front page.

The convention also passed a resolution instructing the executive council to continue negotiations with the Amsterdam International regarding affiliation. The A. F. of L. officialdom will again participate in the European labor movement in response to the need of the American financiers for the protection of their European investments. To fight against world trade union unity, to aid the reactionary officialdom of the European trade unions to prevent revolts of the workers which would endanger Wall Street's investments—these are the reasons for the tendency on the part of the A. F. of L. officialdom to affiliate with the Amsterdam International.

Regarding the recognition of Soviet Russia the officialdom showed its hatred toward the workers' republic in the resolution which said:

> The American Federation of Labor urges the government of the United States to maintain the position it has taken in favor of the non-recognition of the Soviet regime.

This attitude lines the officialdom up with the Coolidge government in opposition to Soviet Russia. It is a more reactionary stand than that taken by the capitalist politician Borah, who favors recognition of Russia.

These imperialist agents in the labor movement fit the policy of the A. F. of L. to the policy of the capitalist government of Washington. They even parrot the phrases of American diplomacy when they use the phrase, "Monroe Doctrine of Labor." In this phrase they declare that the present reactionary officialdom will dominate the trade union movement of this continent in the interests of the United States capitalists. They also intend to use the trade union movement of this country as a bulwark against the movement for world trade union unity.

The interests of the capitalists of the United States demands that the trade union movement shall base its policy on class co-operation: Craft unionism as a mean of dividing the forces of the workers; the trade unions to become a unit in the capitalist productive machinery, the "B. & O. Plan," compulsory arbitration and no strikes; bitter warfare against all elements who dare to oppose this policy and bitter opposition to world trade union unity.

The interests of the workers demand: Amalgamation of the craft unions into industrial unions each covering an industry; organization of the unorganized; class struggle against the capitalists; a labor party uniting the workers for political action against the capitalists and the objective of the entire movement to be the establishment of a workers' and farmers' government.

The movement for world trade union unity in the trade union movement of this country means a fight against the entire policy of the officialdom. It means wresting the unions from the labor agents of imperialism who dominate at present, linking up with the trade union movement of the world to unite the forces of the workers for warfare against capitalist exploitation of the working class. International trade union unity is a step toward a united front of the workers in the battle for their emancipation from capitalist wage slavery. In this movement all those workers who are class conscious, courageous and militant will work for its success.

ITALIAN FASCIST DICTATORSHIP KEEPS JAILS FILLED WITH WORKERS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROME, Italy, Nov. 23.—The persecution of workers in Italy is becoming greater now since the Italian dictator Mussolini has been able to get the fascist-controlled parliament to virtually grant him powers that not even Julius Caesar dared demand when he was in the height of his glory.

According to the latest figures issued by the Italian Red Aid there are on an average no less than ten thousand workers in the jails of Italy at all times. In the motnh of July, the report points out that there were 8,950 prisoners, in August 9,450, and in September the number had risen to 10,131 altho the "amnesty" was supposed to have released 1,606 prisoners.

Arrest More Workers.

When the bourgeois press and the Italian fascist news agencies were heralding to the world that 15,000 prisoners were released from jail under the "amnesty" order of the Mussolini government, 1,954 workers were arrested and thrown into jail because they dared to resist the fascist dictatorship. In an earlier dispatch to The DAILY WORKER it was shown that out of the 15,000 prisoners that were released under the amnesty order that only 1,606 were workers and that the others were fascist murderers and thieves who assist the black-shirted monarch to oppress the Italian workers.

In July, 380 were released and 934 arrested, in September, 957 were released and 2,275 were arrested.

Recent Trials.

During the month of July there were 270 political trials involving 1,485 workers of which 713 were sentenced to jail. In August, there were 85 political trials, with 854 accused and 461 were sentenced. In September, there were 112 trials, with 1,023 accused and 530 were sentenced. In all of the sentences long terms at hard labor were handed out to the workers involved.

American Children's Health.

Are American children undernourished? The U. S. Children's Bureau in its weekly notes on child welfare, states that physicians and nurses holding child health conferences in 43 states under the federal maternity and infancy act report that malnutrition, or undernourishment, is prevalent among the children they examine. Other frequent defects are eye, nose, and throat abnormalities, cavities in the teeth, orthopedic defects, glandular enlargements or insufficiencies.

Indiana Klan Head Spent $350,000 to Escape Jail Term

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 23.— D. C. Stephenson, former head of the ku klux klan and a factor in Indiana politics, who is now wearing prison garb for the murder of Madge Oberholtzer, instead of cavorting around the Indiana sand dunes in a nightshirt, spent $350,000 in an attempt to escape sentence for the murder for which he was convicted.

Out of the $500,000 that he was able to gather in one way or another, he has but $147,000 left at his command. When questioned as to whether he would serve his life sentence, he smiled knowingly and declared that he would be freed eventually. It was said his attorneys' fees amounted to $127,000.

Instead of being known as the head of the klan in the state of Indiana, he is now plain number 11,143.

Painleve Again Forced Out

For the second time within a month France is without a cabinet. The second Painleve cabinet has gone the way of the first. On October 28 the cabinet was forced out because of the failure of Caillaux, the finance minister, to stabilize the franc with the aid of American banking capital. The reorganized cabinet left Caillaux, the much touted finance wizard, out.

But the financial and economic situation in France could not be stabilized by the mere change of a cabinet, Technically the second Painleve cabinet met defeat on its financial program. Actually its fall has far greater political significance than the mere repudiation of the tax program.

In the final voting that resulted in the resignation of the cabinet the votes of the 26 Communist deputies were decisive. The European and American press stands bewildered before this fact. The chamber of deputies, after the vote that sent Painleve to the president with the resignation of his cabinet, was in turmoil, with the socialists hurling maledictions at the Communists because they voted against the government. Charges were made that the Communists voted with the right and against the left bourgeois parties, the most powerful of which is the radical socialists under the leadership of ex-Premier Herriot. The facts are they voted against the government, not with any other group.

Without the participation of the Communists the government had a majority. Realizing that their votes would block the government the Communists threw their votes against the government. The fact that the right bourgeois parties also voted against Painleve in no way establishes an identity of interests between the two extreme groups in the chamber. The right bourgeois parties want a voice in the government, believing that thereby they can help guide the ship of state thru the raging seas of European politics and defend their own economic group. The Communists want to block any effective bourgeois government and force new elections in France. There is no group in the chamber of deputies that can maintain a government against the others. Every failure of a cabinet brings nearer the time when the chamber will face dissolution and new elections will have to be held.

This offers an opportunity for the Communists to speak to the masses of France in the intensity of a political campaign. Then they will go before the workers and expose the shameful role of the so-called socialists and the bourgeois parties of the left whose hands drip with the blood of the colonial peoples in Morocco and Syria. They will tear the veil of lies and slimy hypocrisy from the murderous faces of the socialists who were responsible for the butchering of the helpless people of Damascus. They will expose the treacherous role of the bourgeoisie hirelings masquerading as socialists who aided the Painleve government in jailing the Communist defenders of the working class.

With the Riff and Syrian wars, the fall of the franc, the Locarno pacts, the desperate efforts to crawl before American bank capital, the imprisonment of the leaders of the working class, and many pressing local issues as campaign material the Communists will raise such a storm among the masses that the shabby pretenses of bourgeois democracy itself will tremble. An election campaign at this critical time may set in motion the forces that eventually will unleash a veritable avalanche upon the heads of all bourgeois parties.

Scenting this danger the bourgeois parties of the right and left may strive to consolidate their forces in a new cabinet. The next premier may be Artistide Briand. This former apostle of the general strike, who has many times stepped into the breech and steered the bourgeois of France thru serious crises, may be able to unite the conflicting elements on a temporary policy until conditions become more settled. Or the left, frightened by the Communists, may rally to the support of a right cabinet, in which event the detestable Poincare, of the industrialist group, would form another cabinet.

In either event the Communists will throw their votes against the government whether of the right or the left and continue the fight, until the irreconcilable economic conflicts again produce a crisis, when they will again maneuver to kick out the government.

Regardless of any temporary measures the bourgeois parties may take the future belongs to the Communists.

The Facts Now Available

When newspapers thruout the world carried accounts of the great harvest in Soviet Russia, and ventured the opinion that the 1925 production almost reached the best of the pre-war years of Russia, the ever watchful propagandists of the forces striving to keep the rest of the world in a state of fear and hatred of the Soviet Union, tried to refute the statements. Soon the papers that had inadvertently carried accounts of the bumper crop and the general improvement of economic conditions in that country began to print stories questioning the reports.

After several months we now have the authentic reports from the Soviet Union, compiled by a group of Russian university economist, most of whom are non-Communists, which we will publish in the magazine section of THE DAILY WORKER on next Saturday morning. The report proves by unimpeachable documentary evidence that of all European nations Russia is the only one on the upgrade, while the others are going down.

With the French cabinet gone, the German cabinet slated to go December 1, and the Baldwin cabinet of Britain fearing the temper of the present session of parliament, the continuity and stability of the government of the Soviet Union makes it appear almost an ancient institution.

The reply of the anthracite miners to the arrogance of the employers who proclaim their determination to crush the union must be the spread of the strike to include the maintenance men and also the miners in the bituminous fields.

GERMAN PRISONS HOLD THOUSANDS OF RED WORKERS

Fake "Amnesty" Freed Only Fascisti

By LEN DE CAUX.

BERLIN—(FP)—A monster political trial began Nov. 16 in Leipsic of the former executive of the German Communist Party. More than 100 witnesses are to be called, 400 books and documents are to be used as evidence, and it is estimated the trial will last three months. This trial follows that of 16 Berlin Communists, accused of treason in November, 1923. This in its turn followed the trial of Maslow, kept 15 months in jail without a trial and then sentenced to 4 years imprisonment.

According to a rough estimate Germany leads European countries in the number of its political prisoners, having 7,000 more than are imprisoned in Italy or Poland, which come next with 6,000 each. The great majority are Communists and other radical workers, most of the fascist element having benefited by Hindenburg's amnesty. This loudly proclaimed amnesty of political prisoners proved a very one-sided affair, as only those arrested before Oct. 1, 1923, have been released, and then only those imprisoned for carefully selected offences. The result is that the reactionary Kapp putsch participants are released, while the greater part of the working class prisoners are left in jail.

Trials following the October revolt in Hamburg have greatly increased the number of working class political prisoners. 500 workers sentenced altogether to 1000 years imprisonment is the estimate to date of the outcome of these Hamburg trials.

Jensen's Record Is White Washed by John Fitzpatrick

tolerate his presence now without a gas mask. When the carpenters and several other building trade unions were fighting the infamous Landis award a few years ago, aided by the Chicago Federation of Labor and by Fitzpatrick, Jensen was sabotaging the fight.

Jensen Now Deloused.

Jensen could not stick his nose into the New Majority, official organ of the federation, at that time. Fitzpatrick was then a progressive, but now he has turned his coat, and is receiving his reward in the form of purses of gold from his former reactionary enemies. Harry Jensen looks as good to him as Oscar Nelson, Victor Olander or any of the old war horses of the Gompers machine.

Fitzpatrick trotted out some nice compliments to Harry Jensen at the banquet. He forgot to dwell on Harry's funking of the Landis award fight. He forgot to mention the scab agreement that Jensen signed with the building contractors. He forgot to tell of Jensen's expulsion of several good musicians from Local 181 and how he was forced to have them reinstated again after the members rebelled and forced him to allow their fellow workers the privilege of membership in the Brotherhood. Fitzpatrick did not mention any of those matters, presumably because there are some 25,000 members in the carpenters' district council and the Chicago Federation of Labor needs the per capita. Anyhow Fitzpatrick does not dislike the labor fakers any more.

Fitzpatrick Gave Them a Pain.

So raw was Fitzpatrick's eulogy of Mr. Jensen, that some of those who came to dine felt like taking the air to relieve their minds. Many of those who hitherto believed that the president of the Chicago Federation of Labor became a reactionary thru conviction changed their views when they heard his fulsome praise of Jensen, whose truckling to contractors is known to every intelligent member of the Carpenters' Union.

A souvenir booklet was used for the banqueters, mainly for the purpose of getting the pictures of General President Hutcheson published. All the local officials from Jensen to Wm. Osterhaus, had their mugs in the book. "Czar" Hutcheson and his official family are there with pictures of the various buildings owned by the Brotherhood. Even should the reactionary fakers lose the union to the progressives, they are sure of jobs as janitors and caretakers. Unions with one or more banks can kick out their present leadership, happy in the thought that they will not be compelled to beg their bread on the sidewalks. It's tough on a labor faker to lose his job, but from labor faker to bank president is not so bad.

Illinois Power Company to Enlarge Holdings

'HONEST OPERATORS' OF ILLINOIS CANNOT FOOL PROGRESSIVE MINERS

Stuyvesant Peabody, president of the Peabody Coal company with large interests in the Illinois mine field, yesterday stated that the "attempt to call out the miners in Illinois and other fields where the agreement has been observed is to do the very thing of which John L. Lewis complains in his letter to Coolidge."

Progressive miners of Illinois have often pointed out repeated violations of the Jacksonville agreement by these "honest operators," violations winked at by Frank Farington, president of the Illinois district. Nor is it forgotten by the Illinois miners that Peabody, along with other Illinois operators are part of the operators' association which is following a plan of crushing one section of the union at a time, while pleading peace and obedience to the agreement in the other fields.

Miners Are Forcing Spread of Coal War to Bituminous Fields

have a show-down and call a general strike in the bituminous fields and was forced by the members of the U. M. W. of A. to do even so much as hint at such action, is seen by the fact that on Nov. 17, he offered the anthracite operators a five-year agreement and added that he would negotiate—"in a spirit of compromise and give and take."

Tries Compromise.

Lewis then stated, "Whenever the representatives of the operators are willing to meet the representatives of the miners in amicable negotiations to work out a contract for from one to five years continuous operation of the mines, the miners stand now and have been prepared to meet them.'

It is evident that Lewis was willing to bind the miners to an unheard of term, five years, rather than follow the lead of the Progressive Miners' Committee in the anthracite strike, which advocates calling out the maintenance men, thousands of whom are manning the pumps and keeping the operators' property in good order while their brothers are being starved out and the union crushed by the operators.

Operators Out to Kill Union.

The answer to this offer of compromise was to be expected. The operators regarded it as a sign of weakness and last Thursday in their New York meeting they announced they would refuse to meet with the union officials and were out for "a fight to the finish" against the union.

The present mild hint of a strike in the bituminous mines is the best reply that the situation, which calls for immediate and militant general strike action, could get out of Lewis, whom progressive miners point out as having deserted the policy of struggle and adopted the ruinous policy of compromise and collaboration.

Those "Honest" Operators.

That collaboration is still Lewis' policy is seen in his letter to Coolidge, in which he says that the "savage and dishonest" actions of the violators of the agreement, have "added to the burden of honest coal operators."

The progressive miners have often asserted that there is no such thing as "honest operators," and that the plan of wrecking the union is well worked out by attacking locals or districts one by one, and when a general strike is demanded, to hide behind the excuse that the rest of the operators are "honest" and are abiding by the agreement. Yet they all belong to the operators' association and are following an open shop policy to wear down the union and ultimately wipe it out.

Rail Union Chairmen Fail to Agree; Quit Without a Decision

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, whose 250 general chairmen have been conferring on wage demands, yesterday broke up the session by adjournment and D. B. Robertson, president of the union, went back to Cleveland headquarters, after it was reported that the chairmen were unable to agree on what the increase should be that is to be placed before the roads for agreement. No explanation of the details are given.

GERMAN CABINET TO QUIT AFTER PACT IS SIGNED

Communists Jeer Luther as Capitalist Lackey

BERLIN, Nov. 23.—The German cabinet will resign immediately after the Locarno pacts are signed in London, on Dec. 1st, Chancellor Luther announced in the reichstag this afternoon, when he appealed before that body to urge the ratification of the Locarno pacts.

Chancellor Luther's announcement came as no surprise because it had been generally understood that he had agreed that he and his cabinet quit as the price of socialist support for the ratification of the Locarno documents.

When the chancellor made his entrance into the reichstag this afternoon he was greeted with jeers by the Communists, who shouted, "Here comes the representatives of American big capital."

The Horthy hangmen intend to legally murder both Rakosi and Weinberger in an attempt to crush the Hungarian workers' revolutionary movement.

Chile Voices Protest Against Nitrate Trust Tool, General Pershing

ARICA, Chile, Nov. 23.—The Chilean government has instructed its representative on the Tacna-Arica "plebiscitary" commission to withdraw as a protest against the actions of General "Black Jack" Pershing, who is in the disputed territory with a number of American "blue jackets" to "maintain" laws and order for the nitrate interests of the United States.

The protest of the Chilean government comes after the refusal of Pershing to carry out his promise of promulgating an election law which would govern the "plebiscite." The Chileans demand that the conditions of the "plebiscite," which is to "decide" whether Chile or Peru gain the disputed territory be announced at an early date, in order that preparations can be made for the "plebiscite."

Building Employers in No Position to Attack the Unions

The building construction employers can take little share in the fond expectation of other bosses to cut wages and smash the unions, according to the figures made public yesterday by the building research bureau of G. L. Miller and company.

Figures compiled by the bureau from official reports of the average paid-up membership in the seventeen building trades unions in the United States showed that they now have a membership of more than 864,000. This represents a gain in the last two years of approximately 44,617 new members, an increase of 5 per cent over their former membership. In the opinion of the bureau this places labor is a stronger position to oppose wage cuts.

SOVIET EDITOR TELL HOW THEY RUN NEWSPAPER

"Dawn of the East" a Model Publication

By SCOTT NEARING.

TIFLIS—(FP)—The Dawn of the East is an official daily of the Trans-Caucasian Federation. The Soviet commissars of the federation appoint an editor who is nominally in charge. The local managing editor decides what shall go into the paper, which has a circulation of 30,000 and goes throughout Trans-Caucasia. It is the largest of the 11 papers published in Tiflis.

"What do they put in your American papers?" Editor Dagvodse asked me. I told him.

"Ours is very different," he said. "We publish 6 or 8 pages each day. Two pages are devoted to international news; one to Russian news; one page to general Trans-Caucasian news; one to local news and news concerning the life and doings of local workers. Party news, discussions and questions make up about a page."

The Dawn of the East accepts ads. But not to the exclusion of the news.

This paper, the editor explains, is as much a part of the educational machinery of Trans-Caucasia as is a school. Each day it aims to put ideas before its readers. While it deals principally with Trans-Caucasia and the Near East, the most distant parts of the world appear in its columns.

Dagvodse, a Georgian, is more teacher than business man or editor, as they have developed in the United States. In his early thirties, quiet, direct, very much in earnest, he gives an impression of a man in a classroom with 30,000 pupils preparing and presenting some new lesson every day.

Ships Used by White Guards Against Soviets Reclaimed by Russians

BUCHAREST, Roumania, Nov. 23—A number of ships that were stolen from the Soviets and used by the counter-revolutionists against the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics have disappeared and their disappearance has been explained by saying that Russian sailors have signed up with a ship and then after the ship was under sail, mutinied and forced the ship into Soviet ports.

Seize Petr Veliky.

The Petr Veliky, one of the ships used by the Russian white guards under Wrangel against the Soviets, was recently sold by Wrangel to a Greek armament concern and after being rechristened the Emmos was sent to Costanza. At the mouth of the Bosphorus, eight Russian members of the crew, who had joined at Costanza, forced the captain and navigation officers to change their course and sail into the port at Sebastopol. When the ship reached Sebastopol it was returned to the rightful owners, the Soviet government.

Theophani Disappears.

Another ship, the Theophani, which had also been stolen by Wrangel and used against the Soviets also disappeared in a mysterious manner and it is claimed that the crew rebelled and forced the ship to change its course and dock at Sebastopol where the Soviet authorities claimed the ship in the name of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

EDUCATION AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

By SADIE AMTER

The public school along with teaching the three R's to the youth of the country trains them to be loyal slaves for the capitalist system and the bosses.

From the moment a child enters the public school he is doomed to be poured into the mould made according to the American capitalist rule standard.

First comes the song which every American infant learns in its first school week about "the land of the free and the home of the brave." It is not a bad song as songs go. The music is melodious and "rockets red glare" gives a thrill. What we have against the star spangled banner is that it is a flag of the capitalist class. Wherever it waves, it waves over intolerable wrongs against the working class and under its pretty folds are concealed innumerable crimes against workers, in America and elsewhere.

The Song and the Flag.

The patriotic song and the flag makes the child see yellow devils in China, black devils in Africa, brown devils in Mexico, bewhiskered devils in Soviet Russia. The song and the flag prepare him for war against any one and every one and effectually stops him from asking why. The appeal to the emotions is so strong that under its influence principles fall to shreds and any old war and any old fight will serve whether against the Negro, the Jap or the members of the working class on strike. Therefore the song and the flag.

Next comes obedience and the law. Obey your teacher or be punished. Obey the rules of the school under penalty. And after a few years of unquestioning obedience pupils are quite ready to become todaying slaves to all who are in authority. The school child is taught never to question the right or the wisdom of this authority nor what it stands for. To question it is treason. And there is no answer because there is no principle. Governments have been built with the power of the ruling class over the ignorant and unawakened workers.

The capitalist system sets itself the task of making the children of the working class defenders of the very system which is responsible for their suffering. How else would it gain its supporters?

Questions Children Ask.

The thoughtful child of today asks the following questions:

Why is school so uninteresting?

Why must there be so many rules and punishments?

Why is there no chance for discussion?

Why are we always told that the wars of the past were all glorious, especially wars fought by the U. S. A.?

Why do they talk about thrift when we don't have enuf on father's wages?

Why are our parents so poor when they work so hard, while we are taught that hard work will win riches?

The struggle for existence, the strike, the police, the jails are rapidly teaching the workers what the schools have failed to teach and in consequence the time cannot be far distant when a workers' government will throw the whole corrupt system into the rubbish heap in the company of rusty crowns, thrones and thumb screws.

The school of the future will be a school for the health and happiness and the development of human beings.

Happy children of the future!

ANTHRACI KERS' VICTORY DEPENDS LLING OUT ALL MAINTENANCE MEN FROM MINES

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

Article IX.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 24.—The operators' ultimatum of a five year aggreement containing a no strike clause (the provision that work shall not stop while negotiations are in progress and the further provision that the operators shall have the right to re-open the wage question at any time) has been followed in this district by renewal of propaganda by agents of the operators among the miners.

It is stated by miners and sympathetic businessmen that all the machinery which the coal barons have at their disposal here is being utilized to create sentiment for the terms of the operators' ultimatum. Dressed as miners, these agents, some of them businessmen whose enterprises face bankruptcy as a result of the strike, are circulating among the workers and urging a settlement on the operators' terms.

Demands for Relief Increase.

The breakdown of the local capitalist enterprises which depend upon miner's trade is proceeding by geometrical progression—each week sees double the amount of business cessation over the previous week. Among the miners the number of appeals for relief is increasing rapidly.

There can be little doubt now that the coal barons intend to starve the miners into submission. They hope that as the strike continues there will arise by economic pressure and propaganda enough sentiment for their terms to enable them to get support for them from the miners themselves.

Officials do Nothing.

The union officialdom is doing little if anything to counteract this disruptive campaign. An incident which occurred in Local Union 1687 of Wilkes-Barre is illuminating in this respect. The strikers are now attending the local meetings in large numbers, when these are held—in itself evidence that the rank and file are now taking a deep interest in the strike.

At the local meeting in question a resolution was introduced calling for the organization of an international strike relief fund, the sending out of a call for assistance to all organized labor bodies, the prosecution of the fight for the full demands of the miners with renewed energy, the rejection of all arbitration proposals, the calling out of all maintenance men and a general strike in the whole coal industry.

The local union membership was in favor of the resolution but the travelling auditor, J. B. Gallagher, was present, and after the introduction of the resolution he issued an instruction that no more meetings of the local, which has 1,600 members, be held.

The local officials seem to be eager to discuss everything in the world but the strike.

Do They Pay Organizers for This?

At the last meeting of Local 1052, a large local with about 1,200 members, some 500 were present. The officials showed up late accompanied by an organizer named Gleason. Gleason spoke in favor of the drive for the "community chest"—a class collaboration charity movement—and urged a day's pay assessment for this fund which is administered by the local parasites, to be taken from the third pay of the miners after the strike was over. He also asked permission for the local officials to attend the banquet which was to wind up the "community chest" campaign.

Both of these motions were repeatedly defeated by the members but the chairman finally declared them carried.

In Local Union 151 some 18 families have been given relief and one of the coal companies was allowed to employ 30 miners to repair a shaft. The relief committeemen in this local who examine each request for strike pay receive $10 per day.

Always the "No Strike" Clause.

As this strike continues and the defeatist propaganda of the operators and their agents is intensified—many of these stoolpigeons even urging a 10 year contract with a no strike clause—the fact becomes clearer that the left wing, the Progressive Miners' Committee, has the responsibility for the prevention of the loss by the union of the gains it has made since

FILIPINOS NAIL U. S. LIES ABOUT INDEPENDENCE

American Press Scored for Fake News

Indignation is a mild term to express the attitude of Filipinos resident in this country to the fake news stories which are appearing in the capitalist dailies, purporting to show that the Philippine people do not want independence and would support Governor General Wood's iron heel rule if it were not for a handful of "troublemakers."

It is pointed out that this argument is so base and so contrary to palpable fact, that it discredits out-of-hand everything else that the newspaper correspondents have to say about conditions in the Philippne islands. Everybody in the Philippines knows that popular opinion there is so overwhelmingly in favor of independence that no Philippine candidate can be elected to any office who does not declare himself for it unequivocally. Both houses of the national legislature are controlled by the national party from top to bottom. Despite the illegal intrigues of Gen. Wood, the legislature voted almost unanimously to send the independence mission headed by Senator Osmena to the United States. Moreover, not a single Filipino voice was raised against the demand for independence, the only objection offered to sending the mission was that it might not go about its task energetically enuf.

Attention of The DAILY WORKER is called to the big "independence fund" recently raised in the islands by popular subscription. The fund was greatly oversubscribed. The Filipinos responded almost as one man, and within a few months millions of pesos were collected for the purpose of intensifying the struggle for complete and immediate independence from American imperialist domination.

CAL BACKS PERSHING IN TACNA-ARICA ROW; WEEKS GOES TO CHILE

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 24.—President Coolidge continues to support General Pershing who is bossing the alleged plebiscite commission overseeing the dispute between Chile and Peru concerning the Tacna-Arica dispute over the boundary between the two countries.

Coolidge says he will back up Pershing regardless of the withdrawal of Chilean representatives from the commission after charging unfairness in the plebiscite arrangements.

Some significance is seen in the departure for Chile from the Argentine of the U. S secretary of war, John W. Weeks. Weeks has been visiting the Argentine, and imperialist diplomacy is seen to be behind these "visits" of the Yankee official.

ROUMANIAN DEBT PLAN REJECTED

Standard Oil Does Not Like Laws

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 24—The Roumanian debt commission proposal was turned down by the American commission. Apparently the Roumanians asked for as favorable terms as those granted to Mussolini. The funding of the $46,000,000 debt is still in the air.

Standard Oil Evens Score.

The Mellon counter proposal is along the general lines of the British debt settlement. Seemingly the Standard Oil displeasure with the Roumanian laws as pertaining to oil concessions has the effect of making Uncle Sam a harsh creditor.

AUSTRIA AND JUGO-SLAVIA HIT FASCIST

Mussolini War Threats Rouse Fury

(Special to The Daily Worker)

VIENNA, Austria, Nov .24—The excitement that gripped the people of Austria during the days immediately preceding the outbreak of the world war is in evidence here because of the belligerent attitude of the braggart fascist government of Italy. It became known thru political channels that Mussolini called into Rome a number of his foreign ambassadors to discuss with them the probable effect upon various nations in case he launches unprovoked attacks on Austria and Jugo-Slavia.

Dr. Dinghofer, president of the Grosse Deutsch party, disclosed during the recent convention of that party a secret plan by which Italian fascisti plan to invade the country with a force of 60,000, unless the government apologizes for an anti-fascist speech of an Austrian deputy in parliament. This arrogant endeavor of Mussolini to extend the terror dominating Italy to surrounding countries is bound to lead to a fierce struggle, and if fascist troops invade Austrian territory they will be crushed. The Communists of both Italy and Austria will launch a concerted drive against the fascist forces. If the blackshirts march to attack Austria the working class of Italy will knife them in the back.

Radich Threatens Fascists.

BERLIN, Nov. 24—Stephen Radich, leader of the Croatian's peasant party and Jugo-Slav minister of public instruction, in a speech at Laibach last night, hurled defiance at Mussolini and the Italian fascist hordes that threaten to invade Jugo-Slavia and Austria.

"If the adventurer policy wins in Italy it will not only have us against it," said Radich, "but also Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Roumania and Turkey."

Radich added that he had no quarrel with the Italian people but that every means would be used to crush the blackshirts of fascism in case they invade the country. After going into what he imagines the political situation of the surrounding nations in Europe, most of which he misinterprets because of political inexperience and the political short-

5,000 JAPANESE TEXTILE WORKERS STRIKE AGAINST LOW WAGES AND CONDITIONS IN KAWASAKI MILLS

TOKIO, Japan, Nov. 24.—Five thousand Japanese textile workers walked out at the Kawasaki textile mills demanding higher wages and more consideration from the bosses. A number of strikers have been arrested following a demonstration in which they carried banners protesting against the inhuman conditions they are subjected to.

The textile workers of Japan are growing more restless and the government fears that the walkout of these five thousand Japanese workers may be followed by strikes in other textile mills.

The average Japanese worker is forced to work 12 to 16 hours a day, 7 days a week for a small wage in the cotton mills and there is but little organization to protect them from the bosses, who beat the workers if they do not work fast enough.

THANKSGIVING

WHAT has the world to be thankful for on the day which is supposed to be set aside so that we can offer up incantations to the spook in the sky for manifold blessings we are supposed to enjoy? How can the world be thankful when:

• • • •

IN this country 158,000 miners are striking for the right to be recognized as human beings while the combined infamy of the mine barons, the government and the reactionary officials are leading them to destruction. Thousands upon thousands of children toil long hours amidst the most ghastly surroundings. Wage cuts are in effect in many industries and new ones are threatened, with the workers' standard of living constantly falling. The burden of taxation is being piled higher as the capitalist government lightens the debt of the Italian despot, Mussolini, and places it upon the shoulders of the working class of this country.

In Italy, where the workers suffer under the most savage tyranny, every day sees new excesses against all who dare challenge the dictator.

In France the instability of the government is proved by the rapid fall of cabinets and the continuous decline of French currency, while mercenary hordes of French soldiers try to scourge from the face of the earth the natives of Syria and Lebanon.

In England unemployment is increasing at an alarming rate and the permanent army of unemployed that has averaged two million since the war is now increasing every day.

British airplanes leer menacingly from the largest air base on earth, ready at a moment's notice to sweep down upon Turkey to defend British domination of Mosul oil, while the American Standard Oil concern withdraws from the Mosul group preparatory to fighting.

American warships traverse the Mediterrenean from Gibraltar to Alexandria, thence to Beirut and from there back toward Sidon, as a threat to British forces mobilized across the Lebanon border in Palestine.

In China the diplomats representing American, British, French and Japanese bankers, try to gain diplomatic victories preparatory to the complete subjugation of that nation. Each group strives to gain advantages for itself against the others, with the American House of Morgan in the lead.

In Egypt, Britain faces a serious crisis with the parliament meeting in defiance of an edict and deposing the premier selected by British interests.

In northwestern Africa, in Morocco, the Riffian soldiers fighting against French and Spanish despotism are taking advantage of the rainy season to prepare for the battles that will come with the opening of spring.

In the Philippine Islands the natives there suffer under the iron heel of Major General Leonard H. Wood, the agent of Wall Street, while representatives of the people of those islands come here to implore the despot to liberate them.

Thanksgiving in the capitalist world is a vacuous jest, a sardonic grimace at the suffering of the millions that groan in chains. There is only one place on the face of the earth where the masses can be thankful for their lot. That is in the Soviet Union, the one place in the world where the condition of the worker is constantly improving. The workers of all the world can be thankful for the Soviet Union because it is the outpost of the world revolution, a living inspiration to the struggling workers and peasants thruout the world to rise and destroy the capitalist despoiler of humanity.

But we do not offer thanksgiving to any god in the skies. The victories we gain and will gain in the future we owe only to our own strength, our power of organizaiton, and to the invincible leadership of the world revolution; a leadership built up from the best elements of the working class from every country in the world—the Communist International.

Thanksgiving for the ruling class means a cheap apology for the decaying structure of capitalist society. We refuse to recognize or celebrate this thing, at the best a survival of the cannibal feasts of savages.

Our celebrations commemorate living realities; the victories of the Bolshevik revolution, the eighth anniversary of which has just passed. Instead of utilizing capitalist holidays to give thanks to capitalism the revolutionist takes advantage of the relief granted him from work on the job in order to prepare himself and his class to strike the blow that will shatter capitalism to its foundations.

GITLOW IN JAIL WHILE SMITH AND WALKER SPORT AROUND SOUTHERN CITIES

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—While Benjamin Gitlow, candidate for mayor of New York City on the Workers (Communist) Party ticket is behind the walls of Sing Sing prison serving the balance of a five to ten year sentence imposed on him in 1920 for his connection with the manifesto published by the left wing of the socialist party, the successful capitalist candidate Jimmy Walker is breathing the balmy air of Florida and Governor Smith is recuperating from election strain on the board walk of Atlantic City.

Gitlow returned to Sing Sing on November 9th, shortly after the United States supreme court handed down a decision upholding the constitutionality of the New York criminal anarchy law.

Federal Prisoners Have Nothing to Be Thankful to U. S. For

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—Federal prisoners will look in vain for pardons, this Thanksgiving Day. Judge Busick, Labor Hater, to Preside over Ford's Trial

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 24.—Judge Busick, the bitter labor hater, was selected by Gov. Friend Richardson to preside over the trial of Richard Ford, charged with the murder of a deputy sheriff in the Wheatland hop strike riots in 1913, Ford had already served twelve years on a charge of having incited to murder the district attorney of Yuba county during the strike.

No sooner had the prison board released Ford on parole than the reactionaries had him rearrested. The present prosecutor is a son of the county prosecutor who was among those killed in 1913.

Suhr who was convicted with Ford is still in prison. Neither of the two men were charged with having killed the prosecutor and the deputy sheriff and even the jury that tried the case have since signed a petition acknowledging that the verdict was unjust.

ZEIGLER MINERS FACE TRIAL FOR MURDER, NOV. 30

I. L. D. Needs Funds for Defense

(I. L. D. News Service.)

ZEIGLER, Ill., Nov. 24.—The trial of the progressive members of the Zeigler local of the Illinois Miners' Union who were framed by the coal operators aided by Frank Farrington's reactionary machine and by the local officials of Governor Small, is scheduled to begin on November 30th.

Klansman Kills Miner.

Frank Corbishley, a brother of Henry Corbishley, leader of the progressives, is charged with the murder of a radical miner who was actually killed by a member of the ku klux klan. The indictment of Corbishley is an attempt to whitewash the kluxer.

Tho the indictments are based on the flimsiest evidence and would not stand up in a court that was not under the thumb of the coal operators, there is grave danger that the miners may be railroaded to prison and Frank Corbishley to the gallows unless a vigorous defense is conducted in their behalf.

Need Funds.

The Farrington machine has placed obstacles in the way of raising funds for the defense of those miners among the local unions in Illinois. This makes it ever so much more necessary for the workers thruout the country to contribute generously to the defense of the Zeigler miners who are among the best union men in the United States.

A. C. W. OFFICER TRICKS MEMBERS BY ADJOURNMENT

Crude Autocracy Not to Last Forever

By BEN GORDON.

(Worker Correspondent)

The reactionary machine in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union is trying to employ all methods to suppress the question of who is responsible for the slugging of the members at recent meetings. They know the members are indignant at such methods to shut off free discussion on union problems.

Having no defense they are trying to shut off discussion on the question in the local membership meetings.

This was shown at the meeting of Local 269 held a few days ago. The members felt angry over the whole affair. They put the responsibility squarely upon the officials.

A "Ruling."

In the hall there were three members who were victims of the sluggers on Sunday a week ago, one with his head still bandaged. No sooner had the meeting opened than some of the brothers raised the question. The president immediately made a ruling that this question will be discussed after the nominations take place, because this meeting was both a regular and special meeting. The ruling was accepted.

Under discussion of the Joint Board report, the question of the $25 assessment came up. Those who spoke on it brot forth the manner in which this matter was handled at the general membership meeting, where no discussion was permitted and how those who were only suspected of wishing to discuss it were beaten up by none other than the officials and members of the union.

The president again objected and the officials had a hard time convincing the members that the assessment matter had already been passed by all other locals and it would be use-

SHACHTMAN TO WRITE NEWS OF ZEIGLER, ILL., FRAME-UP ON MINERS

The frame-up to railroad the militant miners of Zeigler, Ill., one of whom was murdered by a ku klux klansman at a local union meeting some time ago, will proceed with the case being called for trial at Zeigler next Monday.

The International Labor Defense is sending a special publicity representative, Max Schachtman, to cover the news of the trial. Readers of The DAILY WORKER are promised comprehensive reports of the case in daily dispatches from the court sent out by the I. L. D. Press Service.

DETROIT POLICE KILLED BREINER DURING RIOTING?

Patrolman Admits He Fired Two Shots

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Nov. 24. — During the course of the trial of Dr. Ossian H. Sweet and 10 co-defendants for the alleged murder of Leon E. Breiner, who was in a mob of white ruffians that stoned the home of the Negro doctor, Clarence Darrow, noted Chicago lawyer, brought out that Patrolman Frank Lee Gill had fired two shots at the Sweet residence on that night.

The patrolman was forced to admit on cross-examination that he had fired two shots at one of the Negro residents whom he saw on the upper rear porch. Dr. Sweet admitted that he had a number of pistols in the house and also a shotgun, in order to defend himself, if it were necessary, since he had been threatened by an organization of white landlords who threatened him with death if he did not sell his new home to them and leave the neighborhood, but that on the night that Breiner was slain that none of the occupants of the house had fired the shot.

The defense had a photographer come before the trial with a number of protographs to show that Breiner could not have been killed by a shot fired from the house but that the patrolman, who admits firing at the house, must have slain Breiner.

Police Shoot Breiner?

The photographer Stephen Tickey, introduced a number of pictures which shows the possibility that the patrolman may have slain Breiner during the rioting.

The police that were at the house at the time of the raid attempted to make it appear as tho there had been no trouble at the Sweet residence and that the Sweets had purposely shot Breiner. The state in its attempt to convict the 11 Negroes for the murder was given a setback when, under cross-examination, the police were forced to admit that they had considerable trouble in dispersing the mob.

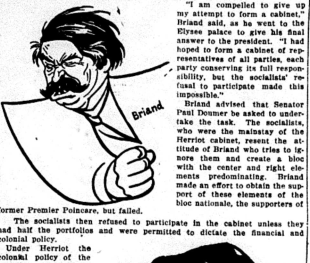
EX-PREMIER BRIAND OF FRANCE FAILS TO GET MAJORITY SUPPORT; QUITS ATTEMPT TO FORM CABINET

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, France, Nov. 24.—Aristide Briand, eight times premier of France, failed to form a cabinet when requested to do so by President Doumergue. Briand endeavored to form a cabinet by securing promises from the various parties that would enable him to have a substantital majority.



"I am compelled to give up my attempt to form a cabinet," Briand said, as he went to the Elysee palace to give his final answer to the president. "I had hoped to form a cabinet of representatives of all parties, each party conserving its full responsibility, but the socialists' refusal to participate made this impossible."

Briand advised that Senator Paul Doumer be asked to undertake the task. The socialists, who were the mainstay of the Herriot cabinet, resent the attitude of Briand who tries to ignore them and create a bloc with the center and right elements predominating. Briand made an effort to obtain the support of these elements of the bloc nationale, the supporters of former Premier Poincare, but failed.

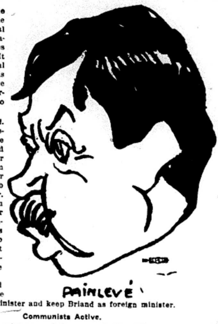
The socialists then refused to participate in the cabinet unless they had half the portfolios and were permitted to dictate the financial and colonial policy.

Under Herriot the colonial policy of the socialists was brutal suppression of the natives of the colonies and mandated areas. It was while the radical socialist, Herriot, was premier that the butcher, General Sarrail, was dispatched to Syria.

Doumer May Succeed.

Acting on the suggestion of Briand, the president summoned Senator Paul Doumer and invited him to form a cabinet. Doumer asked for 24 hours to consider the matter. That means that within the next twenty-four hours Doumer will confer with the various leaders and try to reach an agreement whereby he can be assured a majority in the chamber of deputies.

Doumer announced that if he accepted he would act as finance minister and keep Briand as foreign minister.



Communists Active.

With no cabinet in existence and the economic life of France in a chaotic condition, with unemployment threatening for the first time since the war, the Communists are taking advantage of the upheavals and carrying on intense agitation in the proletarian centers.

The butchery in Damascus and the resultant war in Syria are utilized to rouse masses of workers, and expose the real character of the government as the enemy of the working class.

Prominent Communists flout the notion that any one of the bourgeois parties can create a stable cabinet in France and assert that elections must soon be held to break the deadlock that has been reached. They state that no matter what sort of artificial agreements may be made to prolong the present chamber, the existing antagonisms are bound to destroy it.

REBELS HURL FORCE AGAINST FRENCH HORDES

Communists Plan Joint Action in Near East

BULLETIN.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—The Druse rebels have defeated the French garrison at Rushaya in a sharp battle and have burned the town, according to an exchange telegraph message from Beirut. The French shelled the invaders.

Two thousand French reinforcements are enroute to Rushaya.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BEIRUT, Syria, Nov. 24.—Fighting is dying down in Syria and in Lebanon the Druse are slowly crushing the French forces. The French concentrated at Rushaya for a drive against the Druse and Syrians in revolt against foreign military despotism, but their preparations were anticipated by the rebels.

Last night a fierce attack was made on the Rushaya garrison, sheltering the French forces and a fierce battle is raging with the invading forces of French mercenaries on the defensive.

Censorship Heavy.

With each defeat the French forces have increased the censorship and it is exceedingly difficult to get the true facts of the fighting until several days after the events. Meanwhile capitalist reporters are writing lurid stories from their own fertile imaginations in order to satisfy the demands of their newspapers for sensational stories, whether true or not.

Reports are current that Communists in Syria and Palestine have created a committee of action for the purpose of resisting combined French and British attacks which have been threatened, as British forces here are apprehensive lest the upheavals in Syria spread to the British mandates areas.

Communist Party in Czecho-Slovakia Gets the Biggest Vote

Slovakia. The same is also true of all the other parties with the exception of the Communist Party.

Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia.

The following number of votes were cast for the various parties in the first sector, Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia:

Agrarians, 686,000, gain 82,000; clericals, 664,000, gain 201,000; Communists, 657,000; social-democrats, 552,000, lost 526,000; Behomian socialists, 551,000, gain 80,000; German social-democrats, 406,000, lost 283,000; German agrarians, 397,000; German clericals, 324,000; Zivnostnic (party of small bosses), 275,000, gain 152,000; national democrats, 255,000, lost 132,000; German nationalists, 326,000, and the Strana Stransky (bosses' labor party), 84,000.

Bubnik Defeated Badly.

In this sector the followers of Bubnik put up a ticket and were very badly defeated. All of the Bohemian papers attempted to make it appear that the Bubnik party would poll a larger vote than the Communist Party. All attempts were made by opposition parties to get Communist sympathizers to vote with the Bubnik followers. In spite of all these expenditures of energy, the Bubnikites polled less than 5,000 votes as they are not mentioned in the official election returns.

Other minority parties that put up tickets were badly hit in this election. Many received but several thousand votes.

Vote in Slovakia.

In the second sector Slovakia, the returns were as follows:

Rev. Hlinka's party, 472,000, gain 238,000; agrarians, 250,000; Communists 198,000 votes; German agrarians 106,000; Magyar clericals 100,000; social-democrats 60,000, lost 449,000.

Vote in Podkapatska Russ.

In the third sector, Podkapatska Russ, the Communist Party polled the largest vote, which was 75,000. The other parties polled such small votes that even the official Czecho-Slovakian press bureau has kept silent about the number they polled.

In these parliamentary elections, which are the first the Communist Party engaged in, the party gained 930,000 votes, according to the official incomplete reports. The social-democrats in this election lost 1,258,000 votes.

Organized on Shop Basis.

The Czecho-Slovak Communist Party which was able to make this showing in the recent parliamentary elections was reorganized on the shop nucleus basis prior to this election and due to its activity in the new form of organization was able to gain the support of great masses of workers in Czecho-Slovakia. Tho the party at present polled more votes numerically than any of the other parties, it is not the majority party in the national assembly.

NOTE: A pre-election forecast of the elections will be found on page six in which the author analyzes the line-up of the various groups.

Chicago Bankers' Sheet Startled at Communist Criticism of Coolidge

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the Chicago Daily News considers it of sufficient importance to have the viewpoint of the Russian Communist daily, Pravda, on Coolidge's recent speech, rushed by radio from Moscow to Chicago. In fact, the big Chicago daily newspaper, that its late owner, Victor F. Lawson, turned over to La Salle street bankers, is quite startled that the Pravda should give four columns on its first page to a summary and editorial opinion of what "Cautious Cal" had to say to the money men of New York City.

To be sure, what the Daily News publishes is just a gasp in ten lines, to the effect that the headline in the Pravda declared, "America is 'Saving' Europe from Revolution," with this short quotation:

"Coolidge sings a hymn to the dollar. America is the bulwark of the world counter-revolution."

WHEN the Pravda puts quotation marks around "saving," it ridicules the idea that American dollars can save capitalism in western Europe from the wrath of its oppressed workers and farmers. All that Coolidge can do is to take the credit for the American dollar, claiming it has so far staved off the inevitable.

IT is interesting to note that the Chicago capitalist daily had to go to a Communist publication to find any disagreement with an attack on Coolidge's utterances. There is no disagreement in the ranks of the profit press. The applause of the harlot dailies differs only in degree.

Thus the Chicago Journal, which is democratic in politics, declares that what Coolidge said in his address had been uttered better and more frequently by Woodrow Wilson, even before he became president. The Journal confesses that the best thing Coolidge said at New York was the following:

"While it is true that the government ought not to be and is not committed to certain methods of acquisition which, while partaking of the nature of unfair practices, try to masquerade under the guise of business, the government is and ought to be thoroly committed to every endeavor of production and distribution which is entitled to be designated as true business."

THE Journal, however, declares that the best that Coolidge did in his New York speech was cheap buncombe compared with the word artifices coined by the president who "kept us out of war," and then fooled Europe with his "14 points." It, therefore, cites the "crystallized English" of Wilson, as follows:

"Big business is necessary and natural. The development of business upon a great scale is inevitable and desirable. But that is a different matter from the development of trusts, because trusts have not grown. They have been manufactured, not by natural processes, but by the deliberate planning will of men more powerful than their neighbors in the business world. I deny, as they claim, that the trusts are inevitable."

IT is difficult to find the parallel that the Journal editor claims exists between these two utterances. Wilson was still living in the era when the government kept up a sham battle against the trusts. His was the day of the Industrial Relations Commission, that sought to expose the iniquities of "big business." It was Wilson's commission that "investigated" the food trust.

But that is now past. Coolidge's administration has put its O. K. on mergers among these same great packing interests. It has refused to investigate the bread monopoly. It is urging the consolidation of the nation's railroad system. The White House recognizes all "big business" as "true business," especially when it maintains "open shop" conditions and crushes every attempt of the workers to organize and fight against the wiping out of all living standards. Even LaFollette before he died, had to admit that "trusts are inevitable." No doubt, Wilson also changed his mind in fact, if not on paper. But they all adhered to the social system that kept these trusts in private hands for private profits.

HAVING thus established the worship of the dollar at home, and shielding it with prison sentences for protesting workers, the way is cleared as effectively as possible for the spread of this dollar worship to other lands.

But the Chicago Daily News, in common with other capitalist dailies, is worried about what Moscow thinks of this dollar worship. And well it may worry. The same fight against dollar worship that the Russian workers and peasants won in 1917, will be crowned with victory in every land, even in the United States.

less to reject it. After long discussion it was passed.

No More Autocracy.

But one point was made clear. In the future all assessments must be submitted to a referendum vote. A motion to that effect was passed instructing the Joint Board delegates to bring this recommendation up to the board. The Joint Board report was accepted and nominations followed, both for the local and the Joint Board.

The next order of business was the question of who was responsible for the sluggings. But no sooner did the local finish nominations, than the president declared the meeting adjourned.

Can't Stop Their Mouths Forever.

There is no doubt that if the officials had permitted discussion, they would have had a busy hour explaining the fascist tactics and defending the sluggers who beat up the brothers and sisters of the local. As it is many are waiting for the certain chance that the time will come when they will speak and be heard.

were thrown around the governmental buildings and the important streets. In spite of this terror the parliament met at a hotel in defiance of the authorities and passed a vote repudiating the government and electing a new premier.

On Monday the British controlled government that exists only by power of bayonets and has no legal existence warned local hotel managers against permitting political meetings within their buildings.

Defy British Tools.

In spite of this order many hotel managers have volunteered to house the parliament and the members of the opposition who are fighting for complete liberation of Egypt from the yoks of Britain have defied the authorities and announced that they will hold the next session of parliament whenever they deem it necessary to do so.

The working masses are rallying behind the nationalist movement against Britain and violent outbreaks will certainly follow any attempt on the part of the invaders to arrest the members of parliament who are trying to drive British forces out of the country.

LEWIS AND CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE CONFER SECRETLY; BOSSES MEET

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 24 —If John L. Lewis is going to carry on a war against the mine operators, he is choosing a peculiar way to battle. At least the fact that he was closeted for several hours in secret consultation with J. Elvin Markle, chairman of the joint committee of anthracite operators and of the miners, does no more than add to the impression that his suggestion that he may call a strike of bituminous miners is only a bluff.

The two met and conferred at the Union League Club, and neither would reveal what had been discussed. It was learned, however, that the policy committee of the operators had met during the day and, also in secret, had discussed the strike. The two conferences are seen to have a connection.

COOLIDGE TO REFUSE LEWIS' PLEA, REPORT

Confers with Green Over His Message

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 24—President Coolidge has intimated that he will pay no more attention to John L. Lewis's second hint of a strike in the bituminous mines than he did the first hint given more than two months ago.

Lewis' letter, asking if the miners were not justified in choosing their own measures to enforce the Jacksonville agreement if the government did not intervene to compel the operators to abide by the contract, was placed on Cal's desk. He conferred with Hoover, Attorney General Sargent and even with William Green, head of the A. F. of L., it is understood.

Will Get Refusal.

Evidently, Coolidge does not view Lewis' assertions and threats as of any importance, since Lewis makes no move really to call a general strike. His answer has not yet been composed, but it is foretold that Lewis will get a refusal to intervene.

This does not mean that Coolidge is opposed on principle to government intervention in strikes. On the contrary he is going to ask congress in his coming annual message for specific authority to break strikes by government intervention.

Let the Operators Do It.

In this case, tho, he feels that the operators can break the union without his assistance. The only possible danger to this program is the demands of the progressive miners to call out the maintenance men and let the mines be flooded, or, to extend the strike to the soft coal fields.

Coolidge does not think Lewis really wants to make a 100 per cent strike in the anthracite by withdrawing the maintenance men, any more than he thinks Lewis was seriously intending to call out the bituminous miners to enforce the Jacksonville agreement.

Nothing was revealed by Coolidge or William Green as to what Green's position was upon the matter of Coolidge asking authority from congress to intervene in all strikes he feels like.

Blows for Fascism Come from Austria and Jugo-Slavia

sightedness of the class he serves. Radich hit upon one problem in connection with the fascist threat that aroused the audience to a storm of approval. He said that in addition to those national forces opposed to fascism "there is another whom I will not name, who will overthrow you as Austrian, Hungarian, Prussian and Russian militarism were overthrown." Radich referred to the social revolution, but he hesitated to mention the working class by name as the one force capable of crushing the ambitious and idiotic dreams of the maniac, Mussolini.

Italian Communists Furious.

ROME, Italy, Nov. 24—In spite of the heavy censorship that has prevailed since the fake attempt at assassination of the fascist brigand, Mussolini, was staged in order to detract attention from the government's acquittal of the murderer of Matteoti, news of the preparation of fascism to attack other countries has infiltrated thru the ranks of the working class and on every side the hope is expressed that the tyrant will provoke a war to give the working class at home a chance to stab him in the back. It is certain that the workers of Italy will not follow the braggart into wars of foreign conquest to avenge his "honor" because people in other legislative bodies speak the truth about him.

Anthracite Victory Depends on Spread of the Coal Strike

1900. The line of the coal barons is fairly clear, it is to prevent the calling out of the maintenance men and the bituminous miners at all costs while working overtime to disrupt the strike, discourage the miners and secure an acceptance of terms which will make of the union a mere efficiency agency for the bosses.

The left wing must make every effort to overcome this offensive, acquaint the miners with the danger and organize the rank and file for the most stubborn kind of resistance. A defeat for the anthracite miners is a defeat for the whole labor movement and more disastrous than all the other results will be the fact that such a defeat will be administered in the name of a victory for the gospel of the "community of interest" between the operators, business men and miners. The incident of the "community chest" already cited is only one sample of the manner in which this propaganda is carried on.

RUSS CHEMICAL TRUST WILL BUY DRUG MACHINERY

'Chemugol' Will Spend $1,700,000 in America

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 24—Orders for factory equipment amounting to over $1,700,000 will be placed in this country by the president of the First Soviet Combination of Chemical, Glass and Allied Industries "Chemugol" Gourvitch who arrived here last week and took up headquarters in the offices of the Amtorg Trading corporation which is acting as agent in effecting and carrying out the orders.

Part of the orders will be for equipment for large glass works which the trust "Chemugol" has under construction in the region of the Donetz Basin, and the negotiations for these purchases will be carried on by Mr. Gourvitch in association with Paul Kivkillo, vice-president of the Syndicate of the Silicate Industries "Prodasilicate," who is at present in this country. Gourvitch is accompanied by a staff of five engineers and technical experts.

Places Orders in Europe.

Prior to his arrival in this country Gourvitch spent some time in Europe where he placed orders for the sum of about $2,000,000, mostly in Germany and Belgium. Here, as in Europe, the trust "Chemugol" intends to purchase machines of the latest patents which have become an urgent necessity in building up the expanding chemical and glass industries in the Soviet Union. According to Gourvitch, the increasing internal demand puts before the "Chemugol," which is responsible for 50 per cent of the output of chemical products in Soviet Russia, the task of doubling its production within the next year.

The "Chemugol" controls the chemical, glass, and allied industries in the Ukraine and Southern Russia. The gross annual output of its factories amounts to $37,500,000. The value of the products placed by the "Chemugol" on the market is about $25,000,000. The program of production for the fiscal year 1925-1926 exceeds materially the pre-war output. This program provides for an output under technical conditions as they are at present. The "Chemugol" is taking immediate steps to increase its production by re-equipping along modern lines some of the existing factories and the building of a number of new works. It is in connection with this task that Gourvitch is now in this country.

To Study American Industry.

Beside making purchases for the immediate technical needs of the "Chemugol" Gourvitch will make a study of the organization and latest achievements of the chemical industry in the United States, as well as of the possibilities of the participation of American capital in the rebuilding of the chemical industries in the Soviet Union.

CITY COLLEGE OF N. Y. STUDENTS VOTE AGAINST MILITARY TRAINING

By SYLVAN A. POLLACK.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 24.—By an overwhelming vote of 2,092 to 345 the students of the College of the City of New York voted against the continuance of military training at the college, ending a three-day referendum that had stirred the institution from cellar to roof.

According to Sidney E. Mezes, president of the college, approximately 75 per cent of the students' body had participated in the vote and in his opinion if the rest of them had voted the majority against the continuance of military training would have been much bigger, in spite of the fact that as it now stands, the vote is decisive.

The agitation against the military training was started by an article in the armistice day issue of The Campus, the undergraduate publication, which was followed by a mass meeting in the main college building under the auspices of the Social Problems Club. At the meeting a committee was appointed to present a demand to the student council for a referendum on the question of continuing the compulsory courses in military training.

Text Book Exposed.

More of the amazing instructions in the text book used in the military science course at the college have been brot to light. The book is the 1923 edition of the Manual of Military Training, written by Col. James A. Moss and Major John W. Lang.

"Bayonet fighting is possible only because of red-blooded men naturally possess the fighting instinct. This inherent desire to fight and kill must be carefully watched for and encouraged by the instructor." These instructions are given on page 1, Chapter XXVII, of the manual.

"Break His Neck."

On page 24, Apendix I, the manual gives instructions in killing, holding and kicks. It reads: "Force him (your opponent) to the ground and break his neck by suddenly throwing the feet well to the rear and falling forward, tightening the arms and pressing the shoulder tightly against the back of his head. This hold, when properly executed, will break the opponent's neck, or, failing, is still effective as a strangle hold.

"Raise the right knee until the thigh is horizontal, and at the same time slightly bend the left knee. Kick out viciously, then bring the foot back to the original position in order to avoid its being caught in a leg or toe hold. If the opponent is down, attack with the usual type of kick to his vulnerable parts."

Instructions in hand to hand fighting on page 23, appendix 1, read: "The principles of sportsmanship and consideration for your opponent have no place in the practical application of this work. In a fight with a bigger and stronger man, avoid aimless struggle and work deliberately to disconcert him by butting with the head, kicking his shins, grabbing his gas mask, etc., so as to make an opening for a disabling hold or blow."

On the first page of the book it is stated: "Everything that you do in military training is done with some immediate object in view, which, in turn has in view the final object of winning battles. The object of all military training is to win battles."

The pacifist character of this struggle must be turned into correct channels thru the unity of the students, young workers, soldiers and sailors in a real struggle against capitalist militarism by fighting for concrete demands.

Coal Miner Sends in Appreciation of Daily Worker

Dear Comrades: I take the pleasure to kindly inform you that I received bundle order of The DAILY WORKER containing splendid declaration on behalf of the eighth anniversary of the workers' and peasants' rule in Russia under the leadership of the Communist International.

ITALIAN SENATE RATIFIES SOVIET COMMERCE PACT

Manufacturers Eager for Russian Trade

ROME, Nov. 24—By a vote of 158 to 15 the Italian senate approved the commercial treaty between the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and the Italian government.

Heads of various manufacturing combines have been visiting the Soviet legation's headquarters here in an attempt to get some Soviet Russia's trade. Long-term credits have been offered by a number of these combines.

Russian Colonel in Czarist Army Now Guards Gould Estate

NEW YORK, Nov. 24—Alexander Martynoff, who was a colonel in the Russian czar's imperial army and for five years before the Russian revolution, chief of police in Moscow, is now wearing the uniform of a Holmes' patrolman and is guarding the home of Mrs. Finley J. Martynoff was noted for his betiality in Moscow during his term as chief of police and at the outbreak of the Russian revolution fearing that the Russian workers and peasants would remember the inhuman tortures which he subjected them to, would cause his arrest and imprisonment, he fled to Crimea.

Aids Denikin.

In Crimea he joined the forces of Denikin and was made the chief of police in Kiev. In Kiev, he did all that he possibly could to suppress any attempt on the part of the workers or peasants to join hands with their comrades that were fighting the Denikin forces.

When Denekin was defeated, he fled to Constantinople, where he organized a detective bureau and aided the reactionary Turkish government to weed out the revolutionary young Turks, who wanted to abolish the sultan and change the form of government. But he did not serve his masters long in Constantinople as the young Turks overthrew the sultan and declared a republic.

In White Guard Haven.

He then fled to the haven of all white guardists, America, where members of the working class are barred from holding opinions contrary to those running Wall Street's branch office, the White House, and heartily embrace the oppressors of workers in other lands. He arrived here in New York and ever since has been working guarding the properties of rich parasites that live off the labor of American workers.

ATLANTIC COAST LINE OPERATORS TIE UP TRAFFIC

Telegraphers Strike for Higher Wages

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WILMINGTON, N. C., Nov. 24.—The strike of the telegraphers on the Atlantic Coast Line railroad has tied up the movement of freight to such an exetnt that nearly all the road's spurs near here are cluttered with freight cars. Over 7,000 freight cars are on trucks and spurs of the road without any waybills and the destination of these freight cars unknown.

Tie Up All Traffic.

The telegraphers have been on strike but a short time but they have been able to hopelessly tie up the traffic on the road. The company officials are beginning to make overtures to the men to come back to work. The men refuse to accept any compromise agreements, but demand that the company accede to their demands of an increase of 7 cents per hour and two weeks' vacation at full pay.

The tieup of the roads not only affects the road in North Carolina, but the same is true in South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Company Hires Scabs.

The company in order to break the strike hired many so-called "operators" that had graduated from telegraph "colleges" to do the scabbing. The scabs are unable to do the work and as a result trains are running behind schedules and freight is congested.

Trains are ordered to leave their terminals, they stand on the track for a number of hours, then the orders are to proceed, but no sooner have the trains started along their way, than they are ordered to stop and wait further instructions. This has caused trains to run anywhere from four to ten hours late.

The other railroad unions are aiding the telegraphers and they see to it the train service laws are strictly enforced, which provide that train crews and trains can only work a certain maximum number of hours.

Train Hits Bus.

The congestion of the freight has caused many accidents. Recently a bus with about 30 children was hit by a Coast Line train, killing a number and injuring the survivors. The crossing at that point, where the accident occurred, was loaded to capacity with freight cars which have been standing there since the strike. The freight train had been "cut" to let traffic pass the crossing. The bus driver was crossing this point and unable to see what was going one behind the freight cars, was struck by a train.

Unemployment in Great Britain.

LONDON, Nov. 24—The unemployment situation continues to grow worse—as may be seen from the following quarterly figures of unemployment. (These figures are the averages of the monthly figures published in the Labor Gazette): 1924: January-March, 10.8 per cent; April-June, 9.5 per cent; July-September, 10.4 per cent; October-December, 11 per cent; 1925: January-March 11.5 per cent; April-June, 11.5 per cent; July-September 12.1 per cent.

During July, August and September unemployment has been increasing in a number of the important industries: shipbuilding; the boot and shoe trade; steel melting; pig iron manufacture; pottery; iron ore mining; marine engineering.

HAGUE COURT PASSES BUCK TO LEAGUE OF NATIONS ON MOSUL

(Special to The Daily Worker)

THE HAGUE, Nov. 24.—The permanent court for international justice decided after hearing the report of a commission that had been appointed to investigate the dispute between England and Turkey over Mosul oil fields, that the decision of the league of nations council, that is to be made on the question of Mosul shall be final and binding. It also decided that the decision must gain a unanimous vote in the league council and that the votes of Turkey or England will not be considered in determining unanimity.

Turks Defy Court.

When the court was first instructed to discuss the issue, the Turks in an emphatic manner showed that they would not abide by the decision of the league of nations, which they claim is British-controlled, or the Hague court, if the decision was detrimental to the Angora government and in favor of the British government.

England is insistent that Turkey relinquish her claims to Mosul, which she gained in the league of nations mandate for Irak, and thus allow her to exploit the oil fields over which the two powers are now fighting.

Passing the Buck.

The decision of the permanent court for international justice is a mere passing of the buck to the league of nations as it realizes that its decisions cannot be put into operation, due to Turkey's refusal to submit to any decision, and is an attempt to hide its weakness.

Russian Sea Captain Discovers Ancient City Beneath Caspian Sea

MOSCOW, Nov. 24—An oriental city which flourished thousands of years ago but was lost to history, has been discovered beneath the waters of the Caspian Sea by Captain Atayev, head of the Soviet Caspian merchant marine and has been confirmed by a group of Russian scientists.

The captain had his attention called to the submarine city when, having deviated from his usual course, on a voyage from Persia to Baku, his leadsmen found that the depth changed rapidly, alternating at irregular intervals as tho there were holes in the bottom of the sea. Returning over the same route on a calm sunny day, the captain was able to see on the bottom of the sea the clear outline of streets and houses, stretching for miles along the coast, near Cape Shikhova.

FEDERAL TRADE BOARD 'PROBES' ELECTRIC TRUST

Commission on Another Whitewash Expedition

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The federal trade commission has now declared an "investigation" of the General Electric company and its holdings. The investigation is being carried out much against the will of the administration and will undoubtedly result in no action being taken against the public utilities trust which has been formed in this country.

Morgan Controlled.

The General Electric company is controlled by J. P. Morgan and controls 145 power companies in the United States, Canada and Latin-America.

This company owns large water power rights in all parts of the United States and has at the present time over fifty applications for power sites filed by its subsidiaries before the federal power commission in its attempt to gain the addition of 4,000,000 horse power of electricity from water sites now owned by the government and not as yet under private exploitation.

Tried to Grab Muscle Shoals.

This company which has gained control of the formerly British-owned Alabama Power company also attempted to gain control of the Muscle Shoals project, which could be developed so that it would supply sufficient power for a large section of the southern states.

The Underwood bill which the power trust attempted to jam thru would have turned the Muscle Shoal project over the Alabama Power and thus into the hands of the Morgan interests.

Strangle Industrial Combines.

The group that has forced the present "investigation" of the electric power trust claims that this concentration if allowed to develop will strangle the industrial corporations of the country thru its control of electric power and charge that the trust already has control of the lighting of homes, stores, factories, etc.

Austrian Archduke Prepares for Fascist "Revolt" in Hungary

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Nov. 24.—Archduke Albrecht of Austria is continuing his organization of fascists in Hungary, with the intention of becoming the Mussolini of Hungary. The Budapest press points out that when the Italian fascist head, Benito Mussolini, spoke of other countries turning to fascism that he had in mind Hungary.

Archduke Albrecht has been in the good graces of the Italian fascist and is engaged to be married to the youngest daughter of the Italian king, Victor Emmanuel, if he succeeds in becoming the dictator of Hungary.

The supporters of "King" Otto, the son of Empress Zita—and a Hapsburg, are worried as this plan of the archduke may interfere with their plans of putting their "king" back on the throne.

Archduke Albrecht held a conference recently at Mondsee in Tyrol with a number of the heads of former kingdoms to discuss a fascist coup in central Europe.

Bourgeois Opposition Press Killed in Italy

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROME, Italy, Nov. 24—Mussolini has suppressed the independent organ The Corriere Della Sera of Milan. Farinnaci, secretary of the fascist party, declared that Crespi brothers (industrialists) "must choose between pro-fascist or anti-fascist."

Under the fascist regime Mussolini has a right to suppress and confiscate the property of anti-fascist publications. The Crespi brothers yielded and Senator Albertini, the present director resigned as he opposed the fascisti. The new manager will be a fascist. Thus the last vestige of freedom of press is eliminated. The Communist underground press is the only press left in Italy to expose the terrorism and rottenness of the fascisti.

BRAZIL BOSSES IMPORT CHEAP JAP LABORERS

Japanese Government Supplies Brazil Scabs

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SAO PAULO, Brazil, Nov. 24.—Until recently Brazil has been able to get all the immigrants she wanted from foreign countries—especially European—by the old methods of false representation, lies and deception. As nowadays much more publicity is given to the actual state of agairs in Brazil, it is no longer so easy to get immigrants in this way. Urged on by the employers, the Brazilian government is now trying new means to draw foreign workers into the country. The authorities of Sao Paulo particularly are doing all they can to promote state subsidized immigration. They have for instance concluded an agreement with the Japanese government for the supply of a certain number of workers per year. The first of these contingents, destined for the coffee plantations, arrived at the end of September. The Japanese government officer in charge stated that "the men have been carefully selected, and are free from all taint of socialism." Ten more contingents are expected during the remaining months of 1925. But before very long—as experience has shown—the inhuman working conditions on the plantations will undoubtedly result in these Japanese immigrants turning to try their luck in the industrial centers. And there, by accepting lower wages, they will force down the standard of living of the resident workers.

Workers—especially Japanese workers—who are thinking of emigrating to Brazil, are hereby earnestly warned not to.

What the papers say cannot be relied upon, as is clear from the fact that many of the Brazilian papers—especially those published for immigrants, are in the service of the government. In O Combate (issue of Sept. 16), e. g., we find a statement to the effect that the national finance department decided at its last meeting to grant 250 milreis to the German paper of Sao Paulo, and 500 milreis to the Hungarian newspaaper as payment for the "information" published by them in July. It is a well-known fact that these papers suppress all reports showing up cases of swindling and frauds in land purchases, immigration, etc., for fear of the forfeiture of these government grants. Workers are therefore warned against the Brazilian papers.

Japanese Finance Mission Fails to Get English Loan

LONDON, Nov. 24.—The Japanese delegation which was sent here by the Nippon government to negotiate a loan for the finance department, was unable to get a loan here except at rates of interest and at such terms that the delegation could not accept them without raising a great protest in Japan.

The finance department has recently made large appropriations for naval construction purposes and for military use against the opposition of the agrarian bloc which demanded money for rice growing, that it feels that a loan at a high rate of interest will seriously embarrass it in Japan if it attempts to float such in England.

Hail Czech and Greek Victories

Communists of the whole world have every reason for rejoicing in the magnificant showing, recently made in the elections in Greece and Czecho-Slovakia. Against the incredible savagery of the governments of these two countries and in spite of the fact that Communist leaders are being persecuted wholesale, the gains have astonished the ruling class of Europe.

In Czecho-Slovakia the Communists have increased their number in the national assembly from 27 to 42, a salutary victory in face of the vicious opposition. In Greece in the recent municipal elections Communists carried every municipality in Thrace, Macedonia and Thessaly. This in spite of imprisonment and exile of most of the known Communist leaders.

Premier Pangalos, of Greece, backed by British imperialism, is urging desperate measures to prevent the Communists taking the places to which they have been duly elected. Since he failed, thru terrorizing Communist voters and driving them away from the polls, to prevent a landslide against his minions running for office, he has now decided to call a conference to try to devise means of forcibly crushing the Communists. Tho professing to uphold the republic he visualizes himself riding, after the fashion of the braggart fascist of Italy, over the prostrate working class, flaunting his contempt for the democracy he is supposed to uphold.

As Communists we expect this. It vindicates our charges that capitalist democracy is a delusion; that it is only maintained by the capitalist class so long as it can be used against the working class. As that grizzled old warrior in the class struggle, Frederick Engels, said, democracy is merly the barometer that registers the development of the class struggle and nothing more. He added that when it reached boiling point, we as well as the ruling class would know what to do. And the Greek and Czech workers will know what they must do.

Let the fascist governments declare the elections void. The victory that is taken from the Communists on the electoral field will be achieved by the lightning strokes of the infuriated proletariat as they meet force with force in the streets.

THE DAILY WORKER hails the victories of the Communists in these two countries. The increase in the vote against all odds proves that the time is here, or at least not far distant, when the majority of the working class will rally to the standard of the revolution.

United States Patriotic Society

Under the banal title "United States Patriotic Society," a creature bearing the symbolical name of Mr. Jacob Cash, is hurling stupid inanities at the heads of the Bolsheviks. Leon Trotsky's preface to his masterful book, Whither England?, has provoked this society, of which Mr. Cash is the founder, to publish a nice little red, white and blue pamphlet, bearing the title, Whither America?

This Cash person, whom no Bolshevik ever heard of, displays a most grotesque faith in his ability to solve the weightiest problems of the capitalist class within the confines of one gaudy pamphlet. He assures them he has discovered the cause of Bolshevism. The argument is original. No one ever thought of it before. Here it is: Our inhabitants are drawn from all corners of the earth, do not speak the same language and do not readily comprehend the blessings bestowed upon them by our sublime nation. The remedy is to combat Communistic teachings by exposing the source from which they originate.

Methods of combatting Communism are also unique. They propose hiring speakers to combat those who revile our glorious republic. Who ever before thought of speakers for this purpose? Numerous other proposals that might have been innovations before the invention of the phonetic alphabet are recommended.

We always enjoy seeing these freak outfits spring up. It confirms our conviction that the capitalist masters of the nation are of an exceedingly low type in the scale of mental development otherwise such people as the founder of the new patriotic order would have to work for his cash instead of scaring it out of the timid bankers and industrial magnates of the country.

The booklet is not objectionable to us for the reason that the introduction to Trotsky's book is reproduced. Workers who obtain it will be impressed with the excerpt from the book and refrain from reading the other part from sheer ennui because of its dullness. If Mr. Cash can get the capitalists to back him while he circulates our propaganda we cannot strongly object to the incorporation of his own twaddle in a futile effort to offset it.

As far as his speakers whom he threatens to send out against us are concerned, when they come in this direction we will select members of the junior group of the Young Workers League to dispose of them in public debate. It will be fair practice for the youngsters.

The Advance of Russia

Statistics for the past year regarding the increased productivity of Russia are unusually interesting. They show that in spite of the civil war, the blockade, the famine and the sabotage that the Soviet Union has been forced to overcome, the production of fuel and power has actually exceeded the best years in the history of the old regime. The pre-war years never realized the level of production now enjoyed by the Soviet government.

What particularly interests students of economics is that the increase is to be noted in the heavy industries, which means that the industrialization of Russia is rapidly proceeding.

In other branches of industry—light industry—production is somewhat lower than pre-war days.

But within two more years—the tenth year of the dictatorship—it is certain the wounds of the war and revolution will be completely healed and productivity will far exceed anything ever dreamed of under the old regime.

The economic facts of this development are being prepared for the magazine section of Saturday's DAILY WORKER. Every reader should keep this magazine section for reference on the question of the economic revival of the Soviet Union.

Order a special bundle of Saturday's issue. It will contain an excellent article on the economic recovery of Soviet Russia.

The Elections in Czecho-Slovakia

The following article was written prior to the elections in Czecho-Slovakia in which the Communists were able to poll, according to a partial count, approximately a million votes. The Communist delegation in parliament has been increased from 27 to 42, according to latest official advices. News story on Czecho-Slovakian elections on first page.

By A. NEURATH (Prague).

THE coalition government is bankrupt: it has decided upon fresh elections to the national assembly and the senate, which are to take place on the 15th of November. The new election of these two representative bodies is taking place before the expiration of the legal term. The coalition parties are simply unable to carry on any longer. Since the last parliamentary election they have accomplished a great deal—against the interests of all sections of workers in Czecho-Slovakia. The so-called social achievements of the revolutionary period have all been abolished by the coalition government, with the exception of the eight-hour day, which in the most important branches of industry only remains on paper. The social-democrats have been the foremost in this work of abolition.

Following the notorious example of the German social patriots, the workers' councils, for example, were "embodied" in the legislation, that is to say, they were completely deprived of their political content. With the help of the "elastic" tactics of the reformist trade union leaders and of those social-democrats who belong to the coalition government, the Czecho-Slovakian exploiters were able greatly to reduce wages in all branches of industry and to worsen working conditions. For a considerable time the prices of all food stuffs and articles of mass consumption have been increasing.

The coalition government has flung thousands of civil servants on the street, and as the bourgeoisie was able to worsen the working conditions of all categories of wage workers, it was also possible to carry out enormous reductions of the staffs of private capitalist undertakings. No wonder therefore that a great portion of the petty bourgeoisie has lost all confidence in the coalition government.

Tool of French Imperialism.

Czecho-Slovakian foreign policy has been carried on entirely in the interests of French imperialism, that is against the economic interests of the entire population of Czecho-Slovakia. In the judging and handling of national problems the incompetence of the coalition government has been revealed, so to speak, in its totality. Under such circumstances, it would appear to have been best for the coalition parties to postpone the elections as long as possible. But as a matter of fact the present situation, altho it cannot be regarded as very optimistic from the standpoint of all the coalition parties, is still relatively the most favorable for the following reasons: the coalition parties, and in the first place the social-democratic leaders, anticipate that during the next few months still greater burdens will be placed upon the Cecho-Slovakian proletariat and the petty bourgeoisie and peasantry than has been the case hitherto.

To Worsen Condition.

At the Marseilles congress of the Second International the Czech social-democrat, Habrmann, who occupied the position of minister for education and also minister for labor in the coalition government openly pointed out that the eight-hour day could not be retained in Czecho-Slovakia unless it was re-introduced in Germany. That means, the Czech national socialists, as well as the two sections of the Second International in Czecho-Slovakia, consider that the Czecho-Slovakian bourgeoisie, in view of the present European situation, is about to deliver fresh economic blows against the whole working population of Czecho-Slovakia.

The bourgeoisie argues that if Czecho-Slovakian industry is not to be driven from the field by German industry, then the conditions of work and wages of the Czecho-Slovakian working class must be still further worsened. Things are developing in this direction as a result of the stupid foreign policy of Czecho-Slovakia which, in the interests of French policy, renders impossible any serious and comprehensive economic connection with Soviet Russia.

In addition to the reactionary tariff policy adopted by the old parliament, the Czecho-Slovakian bourgeoisie wishes to overcome its economic difficulties by means of fresh wage reductions. The social-democrats fully realize that, as hitherto, they have not only to act as a screen behind which the bourgeoisie can realize these sinister plans, but that they have to fight directly on the broadest front as guard-troops of the Czecho-Slovakian counter-revolution against the economic interests of the entire proletariat of this state. The Czecho-Slovakian bourgeoisie does not wish to lose any time. The whole economic and political situation thruout Europe demands prompt action.

If the approaching rigorous measures against the working class are carried out with the help of the social-democratic leaders before the new elections, then the social-democrats will lose their last supporters among the working class. And for this reason, in spite of the almost hopeless situation, they are in favor of the new elections being carried out as soon as possible.

Fight Communists.

One can understand that the social-democrats, along with their coalition accomplices, in such a depressing time are resorting to everything that they consider can in any way shake the position of that party which they fear: that is, the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia. In the summer, the government and social-democrat newspapers were jubilant; they considered their success and the defeat of the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia as certain. And in fact before the meeting of the Enlarged Executive of the Communist International they had no little cause for looking to the future with hope. But now they are confronted with the collapse of their policy as regards their intention to shatter the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia. All other measures of the coalition heroes have been wrecked, they finally only served the propaganda purposes of the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia.

The situation of the Czecho-Slovakian bourgeoisie can be judged by the following data: The national assembly consists of 19 parties comprising in all 294 members. The five coalition government parties have altogether 167 mandates, that is, barely three-fifths of all the votes. It is only with the help of the Czech traders' party that they obtained the three-fifths majority.

Communists Will Gain.

The Czech social-democrats will lose a number of seats, which will go to the Communist Party and partly to the Czech bourgeoisie. The remaining Czech parties will just about maintain their present strength, while the clericals and national socialists will gain a few seats. In addition to the Czech social-democrats the national democrats will also sustain losses. The German social-democrats will suffer considerable losses, of which the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia on the one hand and the German nationalists on the other will derive the benefit.

The German bourgeois parties will set up a so-called Sudetes united election list. The German social-democrats bargained for weeks with the parties of the German manufacturers for the purpose of setting up their all-inclusive national united front. Finally, nothing came of the negotiations with their German kinsmen.

It is possible that the coalition parties as a whole will emerge from the election campaign as strong as they are at present. But should they not even maintain their present strength, then they will not hesitate for a moment to include representatives of the German bourgeoisie in their coalition, whereby they will be able to throw over the German social-democrats altogether. The latter will be forced to beg in order to be included in the coalition. In this respect we shall witness a very entertaining spectacle.

Communist Party Prepared.

The Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia is ready for the contest. All preparations have been made for the election campaign. On Saturday the 17th of October the national assembly and the senate were dissolved, and on the following day our newspapers printed the election manifesto of the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia and published the list of our candidates in all the constituencies of the republic. In all the other parties a furious quarrel is going on over the candidatures. The German social-democrats have convened a party conference, from which the public is to be excluded, in order to decide on the candidates. In four weeks, that is on the 15th of November, the revolutionary working class of Czecho-Slovakia will show the real strength of the so-called collapsed Communist Party.

KAROLYI LAWYERS USE CAL'S OMAHA TALK ON KELLOGG

Tolerance Necessary He Said; They Agree

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.— "Nervous Nellie" Kellogg, secretary of state, who made himself the object of world-wide ridicule when he barred the Parsee Communist member of the British house of commons from coming to this country to attend the meeting of the interparliamentary union, has incurred even more serious resentment by his refusal to permit the Countess Karolyi to come here to lecture.

It is altogether likely that the Karolyi incident will become a subject of debate in the senate in the next few weeks, and that demands that President Coolidge dismiss Kellogg will be widely endorsed. The powerful Scripps press is already conducting a systematic expose of the royalist and boot-licking character of the Kellogg policy, with the idea in mind of causing his removal.

Lawyers After "Nervous Nellie."

In a long letter addressed to President Coolidge, in appeal from the refusal of Kellogg on Nov. 7, to explain his legal authority for refusing to permit the wife of the former president of Hungary—a mild democrat but never a radical—to enter the United States, her lawyers indict Kellogg as a violator of the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech and of thought in the American commonwealth.

"He has arrogated to himself," they say to Coolidge, "authority not only to make arbitrary decisions against citizens of friendly countries, but also to decline to permit them to present evidence that the unknown accusations against them are false."

Call Hypocrite.

With delightful humor the lawyers then quote Cal's Omaha speech, on the necessity of tolerance in order that progress may be served by "the ferment of ideas, the clash of disagreeing judgments, the privilege of the individual to develop his own thoughts."

With mock solemnity—for they know that Coolidge never meant it—they appeal to him "to take such action as will place your administration in harmony with these high ideals so nobly expressed."

To Train Battery of Effective Speakers

Friday evening at 8:30 the first session of the public speaking class will be held at 19 South Lincoln Street. This class is for those who think they can develop into effective speakers. To attend this class it is not necessary to have had previous experience in public speaking, but many of those who are experienced could well efford to attend this class and learn how properly to prepare speeches that will be effective. The text books to be used will be on hand at the book store at 19 South Lincoln St.

Comrade H. M. Wicks is the instructor for the public speaking class. The object of the class is to train a battery of effective speakers that can propagandize and defend the principles of Communism at any and all times. The first course embraces eight lessons and those who expect to attend these classes must attend all of them in order to get the desired result.

Los Angeles Holds Successful Drive for Reorganization

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 24.—The entire membership is determinedly behind the reorganization campaign. Successful functionaries' meetings and special branch meetings for registration have already been held thruout the city, and the percentage of attendance and registration is very high, approximately 80 per cent.

On Nov. 23 and 25, four section meetings in all will be called, where all the members will be assigned to the nuclei to which they belong. The foreign-language comrades are determined to facilitate in every way the building up of the party and its activities upon the new form of organization.

Hard Times Party Held on Thursday

Thursday night, the Chicago Workers' School is holding a hard times party in celebration of Coolidge's supposed "prosperity."

The novel affair, sure to attract hundreds of workers to Imperial Hall at Fullerton and Halsted St., will begin at eight o'clock and proceed to the tune of the lively Finnish orchestra.

Prizes will be awarded to costumes of the most raggedy individuals as well as to the best school boy and school girl costumes.

The Finnish comrades will be in charge of the dining room where home cooked food will be displayed to tempt the crowd.

Admission will be fifty cents, due also to the great "prosperity."

LOS ANGELES MEMBERSHIP MEETING ENDORSES COMINTERN DECISION

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 24.—At a well-attended general membership meeting here on Monday, Nov. 16, Robert Minor, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, spoke on "Bolshevization." He gave an able address on the present party situation and the tasks before the Communist movement during the period of so-called "stabilization" of capitalism.

For Communist International.

After speaking for two hours, Comrade Minor answered in detail, numbers of questions from the floor. The last order of business was the introduction of a resolution by the representative of the Central Executive Committee declaring for unity of the party behind the decisions of the Communist International and a struggle against all right wing tendencies or attempts to lead away from the authority of the Comintern.

The resolution carried overwhelmingly, with 101 votes for the resolution, none against, and 9 abstaining.

Attention! Worker Correspondents!

Every Thursday night 8 o'clock sharp, beginning Thursday Dec. 3rd, The DAILY WORKER Correspondents' school meets at The DAILY WORKER Editorial office, 1113 West Washington Blvd. Because of Thanksgiving day the class has been postponed this week.

Enrollments are accepted there with no charge attached. All live wire are welcome. The first students enrolled have already submitted their stories which are printed elsewhere in this issue.

GERMANS ADMIT ANTI-SOVIET PLOT

ANTHRACITE STRIKERS REALIZE AT LAST THAT OPERATORS ARE OUT TO CRUSH MINERS' UNION

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

Article X.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 25.—President Lewis' intimation contained in his letter to Coolidge, that a general strike in the coal industry may be called as a result of continued violations of the Jacksonville agreement, and the increasingly "hardboiled" attitude of the anthracite operators, have put an end, temporarily at least, to hopes of an early settlement of the strike here.

One of the local papers, The Telegram, whose policy is somewhat sympathetic to the United Mine Workers of America, says:

> Hopes for the settlement of the hard coal strike, running so high in some quarters just a week ago, have gone glimmering. The past week saw a definite end to the expectation of a "back-to-work-by-Christmas" move. In fact, at this time the deadlock in the hard coal industry gives every evidence of a fight to a finish. This is sorry news indeed for a community that has been fed up in the last two weeks on promises of early compromise, but as it is the truth, as unpalatable as it is, it should be faced and the reality that confronts the community realized.

The operators are standing pat on their demand for an agreement containing a "no-strike" clause. Acceptance of this means suicide for the United Mine Workers.

A new plan for the settlement of the strike has been brought into this region the last week, by one Barker, who is said to he an emissary of Governor Pinchot.

Pinchot's Open Shop Plan.

His proposal is that the new contract, containing the provisions wanted by the operators, be submitted to the rank and file of the union and that a board of five persons, none of them members of the union, be chosen to supervise the vote.

A committee of Schuylkill county businessmen recently made a similar proposal.

One member of this board is to be named by Pinchot, one by the United States chamber of commerce, one by New York and Philadelphia newspapers, one by Cardinal Dougherty and one by Thomas Mitten, head of the Philadelphia traction system.

The outrageous nature of this proposal is obvious and is a good indication of the kind of aid the miners can expect from Pinchot, but it has

'I GOT YOUR LETTER,' SAYS CAL TO LEWIS

Pleads Need of Study for Full Reply

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 25.—"I got your letter," such is the meaning and comparative brevity of President Coolidge's reply to the hesitating suggestion that if the government did not make the soft coal operators live up to the Jacksonville agreement, the United Mine Workers might strike in all bituminous fields. Cal adds that he would make a fully reply "after study."

Coolidge understanding that the suggestion of a soft coal strike thruout the country is not made to uphold the Jacksonville agreement, but is a last recourse of Lewis, to get a compromise settlement in the anthracite strike, shrewdly delays indefinitely any real answer to Lewis' "threat" and let the continued hunger of the anthracite strikers' families do the work of the operators. How many months Coolidge is going to "study" he did not say.

Fakers More Worried Than Coolidge.

That William Green, president, and Frank Morrison, secretary, of the American Federation of Labor are more worried over the possibility of a strike in the bituminous mines than is Coolidge himself, is seen in their obvious anxiety that there should be no such strike.

They take the view that if a general mine strike were to take place, congress would enact some legislation outlawing strikes entirely—and of course, they would have to take the position of all class collabora-

Dairy Concern Takes Steps to Create Milk Trust in United States

NEW YORK, Nov. 25—The National Dairy Products company has contracted to buy 84 per cent of the common stock of the Sheffield Farms Co., Inc., and 89 per cent of the common stock interest of the Sheffield Farms By-Products company, Inc., and 84 per cent of the common stock of the Sheffield Condensed Milk company.

Since its incorporation in 1923 the National Dairy Products company has acquired more than seventeen ice cream and milk companies in the east and middle west.

In order to finance its purchase of the common stock of these companies in order to perfect its grip on the dairy products industry, the company is trying to raise $15,000,000 by the sale of bonds thru New York brokers.

PITTSBURGH WILL HOLD MASS MEETING AGAINST FRED MERRICK'S TRIAL

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 25.—On November 29, the night before the trial of Fred Merrick starts, a mass meeting will be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., to explain the arrest and indictment of Merrick and the nine others who were arrested and indicted at the same time. The meeting will be held at the International Socialist Labor Lyceum, 805 James street, N. S., at 8 o'clock.

The speakers announced are Dr. William Van Essen, Ella Reeve Bloor, organizer for the International Labor Defense, and a prominent speaker who is associated with the Civil Liberties Union.

There is a real united front of workers of all shades of opinion behind the defense of Merrick and his fellow workers.

$2,500 must be collected for the Merrick defense before the trial starts on Nov. 30. The Pittsburgh workers are doing their level best to accomplish this task. A big ball will be held on Wednesday evening, Nov. 25, under the auspices of Labor Defense, at 35 Miller street.

SWISS COMMUNIST PARTY WINS THREE PLACES IN THE NATIONAL COUNCIL AT RECENT ELECTIONS

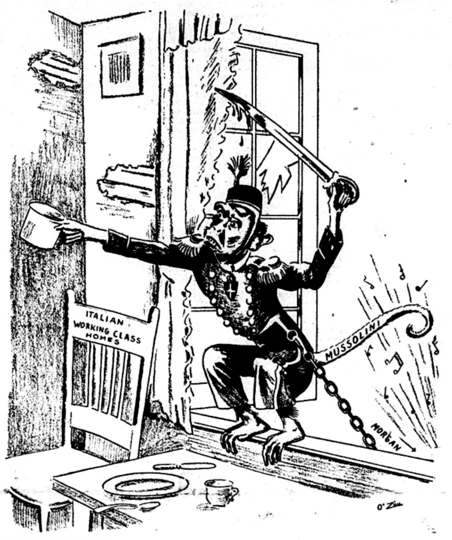
GENEVA, Switzerland, Nov. 25.—In the recent elections to the Swiss national council, the Communists captured three seats. In a number of the cantons in Switzerland, elections were not held. The leaders of the social-democrats, the clericals, nationalists, etc. met and decided at their conference, who would get the delegates to the national assembly.

Tho the social-democratic party here claims that the Amsterdam Trade Union International and the Second (Socialist) International are not Marxian enough for it, it outdoes these internationals in their policies of collaborating with the employers to exploit the workers.

The incoming national assembly will consist of 3 Communists, 60 "radicals," 49 socialists, 42 catholic conservatives, 30 from the farmers, industrialists and citizen's party, 8 liberal democrats, 3 social politicals, and 3 independents.

The social-democrats are considering an alliance with a group of the petty-bourgeois radicals in the Gruetlianer group.

THE TRUE STATUS OF BENITO



PAT TOOHEY AND DUNNE SPEAK ON THE ANTHRACITE

Tell Chicago Workers of Coal Strike

Chicago workers heard the story of the anthracite strike from Pat Toohey, youthful leader of the progressive miners in that region, and William F. Dunne, who had just returned from the anthracite where he wrote special articles for The DAILY WORKER.

Dunne gave a history of the anthracite coal miners' union in this country tracing the different nationalities that it is composed of. First, he said, came the Scotch and the English and Welsh to this country and now they will be found mostly among the superintendents and mine officers. Then came the Irish and they can be found in positions of local officials and union officials. Underneath or at the bottom of this line-up are the Bohemians, Spaniards, Italians and Slavs who compose the rank and file. The American elements compose the maintenance men who are holding on to their jobs instead of being in the strike where as union men they belong.

He compared the conditions existing in the bituminous coal fields to those of the anthracite miners. The anthracite miners' jobs are more stable than the bituminous. Here the population is not migratory, they buy homes on the instalment plan. They are linked up with the established groups of the bourgeoisie such as the small business men and churches. It is quite easy for union officials to convince workers that there is an identity of interests between them and the bourgeoisie. But that is being shattered now and one of the chief factors shattering this falsification has been the progressive miners. Lewis launched an onslaught on the left wing in 1922. From that time until the beginning of the strike the task of the progressives has been to re-establish itself. The second onslaught came thru the state's attorney who works hand in hand with the officials and which resulted in the ar-

CRIMINAL SYNDICALIST LAW TO BE EXPOSED AT MEETING FRIDAY, DEC. 4

The International Labor Defense of Chicago and its affiliated organizations, such as Machinists No. 84, Painters No. 275, etc. have sent demands for the release of Anita Whitney and Benj. Gitlow to the governors of California and New York. A campaign against the "criminal syndicalism" laws of those states, and all such states laws, is on.

The local committee announces that among the speakers at the Protest Mass Meeting on Dec. 4th, at the West Side Auditorium (Racine and Taylor), will be Pete Jensen of the Federated Shop Crafts (Machinists), Fred Mann, a member of the I. W. W., Wm. H. Holly of the Liberal Club and Robert Minor, organizer for the International Labor Defense.

COUNT VOLPI PROVED TO BE A PLAIN LIAR

Italian Debt Head Exposes Himself

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 25—Count Giuseppe Volpi, finance minister for the blood-streaked Mussolini terror of Italy, talked here the other night at a banquet given by the Italian chamber of commerce at the Plaza hotel and while paying lavish tribute to the braggert whose flunkey he is, proved himself a bare-faced liar.

He said that "Italy is the first nation which has been able to rehabilitate itself from the war. It is the only nation which has balanced its budget and reconstructed itself without aid from the outside."

How About Washington?

This declaration in direct conflict with the tearful plea Volpi is alleged to have made at Washington before the debt settlement was reached. The seventy-five per cent cancellation was supposed to be imperative in order to save Italy from total ruin. The cancellation was based upon statistics presented by Volpi purporting to show that of all European nations Italy was the most sorely beset by the calamitous results of the war and would surely perish without assistance from Wall Street.

The question arises: Did this scoundrel and defender of a government by assassination lie at Washington or lie at the Plaza hotel banquet or at both places?

Zankov Entertains League of Nations Greco-Bulgar Body

LOCARNO CONSPIRACY AGAINST RUSSIA BARED AT RATIFICATION OF THE PACT IN THE REICHSTAG

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN, Germany, Nov. 25.—Not only Communists, but even the nationalists, in the reichstag ripped the mask from the faces of the hirelings of Great Britain who voted to endorse the Locarno pact here today.

The socialists were exposed by the Communists as the venal treacherous tools of the most reactionary elements of British imperialism. This betrayal of the German nation into the hands of the British conspirators against the Soviet Union is but the logical culmination of the treachery that flared forth in 1914, when the socialists voted for the kaiser's war credits; was repeated on a more vile scale in 1919, when they murdered the leaders of the working class, Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemberg, amplified in the crushing of the March action in 1921, and again their infamous role in the October upheavals of 1923.

The working class of Germany is accustomed to foul treachery from the social-democrats that no infamy they can now commit can exceed the crimes they have already perpetrated against the working class.

Nationalists Join Attack.

Herriot is head of the bourgeois party calling itself radical socialist and is the man directly responsible for the butcher, General Serrail, being appointed Syrian high commissioner.

DANISH WORKERS TAKE PART IN CELEBRATION OF RUSSIAN REVOLUTION

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R.—(By Mail)—The Danish workers' delegation which is now in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics recently visited Moscow where they participated in the celebration of the eighth anniversary of the Russian revolution.

During their stay in Moscow the Danish delegation visited the trade union headquarters and have also visited many shops to study the condition of the workers in Soviet Russia. They expressed great surprise when they learned the extent of power which the unions have in determining the conditions of the workers in the shops.

PERSHING TO KEEP TROOPS IN ARICA ROW

U. S. Stirs Up Trouble to Excuse Occupation

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25. — The United States government took a new step in the furtherance of its imperialist designs to accustom South America to the rule of Yankee authority by dispatching the cruiser Denver to sail at midnight from Balboa, in the Canal Zone, to Arica "under secret orders."

The order was issued to the Denver by wireless from the flagship of the U. S. naval squadron already at Arica in the disputed region over which Chile and Peru have long stood as rival claimants.

Means to Stay.

Dispatches indicate that Pershing is carrying out a policy of extended occupation by U. S. armed forces in the region, under the guise of laborious arbitration in the arranging the plebiscite. The plebiscite commission was supposed to meet yesterday, but was postponed indefinitely at the behest of Pershing.

Also, Pershing has not yet replied to the note of Senor Augustin Edwards the Chilean delegate in the commission, who withdrew from the commission and charged in his note that Pershing was unfavorably partial to Chile in forcing the passage of a resolution at the last session of the commission calling for the "control of residents" in the Tacna-Arica area.

Stirs up Trouble to Keep Job.

Edwards asserts that the resolution infringed upon Chile's constitution and was not based upon fact. The resolution was condemnatory of alleged deportations from the zone in dispute, of persons hostile to Chile.

Chile's former president, Alessandri in a speech yesterday at the funeral of a Chilean soldier who died in an attack on an outpost, accused the United States of "stirring up conflict, discord and hatred" between Chile and Peru instead of trying to solve the Tacna-Arica dispute. The longer the conflict is perpetuated, the longer the uniforms of United States armed forces will be an accustomed sight to South Americans.

Another Rail Merger.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Examiners of the interstate commerce commission recommended that the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley railroad and the Illinois Central be granted authority to acquire control of the Alabama & Vicksburg, and the Vicksburg Shreveport and Pacific roads.

SPECIAL REPORTS ARE COMING!

The trial of the Zeigler miners in southern Illinois beginning Monday will be reported in The DAILY WORKER thru special dispatches from the court room sent out thru the I. L. D. press service.

Max Shachtman, special representative of the International Labor Defense, is already in southern Illinois. First hand reports will appear daily showing up the vicious frame-up of the militant miners, one of whom was murdered by a ku klux klansman at a local union meeting some time ago.

POLISH SOCIALISTS ENTER INTO GOVERNMENT WITH MURDERERS OF CRACOW RAILROAD WORKERS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WARSAW, Poland, Nov. 25.—The Polish socialist party, noted for the terrorist tactics of its "groups of action" against the Polish Communists, has entered into a coalition with the murderers of the railroad workers of Cracow, to form a coalition cabinet in Poland. Skryznski, who was minister of foreign affairs in the Grabski cabinet, after a number of unsuccessful attempts has been able to form a cabinet in which the socialists, the big landowners, the clericals and the nationalists have entered into a coalition.

Fear Workers' Protest.

The representatives of the Polish socialist party in the cabinet is one of the obscure members, who was formerly an Austrian officer, by the name of Ziemierski. The Polish socialist party did not dare put any of the well-known socialist leaders in the ministry of labor, as they have been so thoroly discredited for their actions that they feared that widespread demonstrations of the workers would take place against the new government. Ziemierski, who is now the minister of labor, represents the policy of the socialist party which has entered into an alliance with the Witos party to prepare war against the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

Murder Cracow Workers.

In the new cabinet, Kiernik, who was a member of the Witos cabinet, which was in power before the Grabski cabinet, has been given the post of minister of agriculture. Kiernik was the minister of internal affairs in the Witos cabinet, which is directly responsible for the murder of the railroad workers of Cracow in 1923. The Cracow railroad workers went on a political strike against the government. The government immediately sent troops to shoot down these striking railroad workers. In their combat with the strikers the first detachment of soldiers were defeated. More soldiers were dispatched and when the workers strike against the government was broken, the Witos cabinet instituted a reign of terror in Cracow. Many of the strikers were killed and many were thrown into prison for long terms at hard labor. At this time, the Polish socialist party protested the actions of the Witos cabinet. Its protest and demand for an impeachment of Kiernik was looked upon and treated as nothing more than a gesture to curry favor in the eyes of the workers.

Today the socialists are in the same government with this butcher of Polish workers.

Skryznski, who formed the cabinet will be minister of foreign affairs, minister of finance and prime minister. He is looked upon with great favor by the group following Gen. Pilsudski. Skryznski attempts to pose as a liberal.

Grabski Remain in Cabinet.

Wladislaw Grabski, who was the head of the cabinet which fell, is now minister of education and religion. Grabski represents the big landowners of Poland and during the world war was a spy in the Russian ochrana. His record as a spy has been found in the archives of the ochrana.

Osiecki has been appointed as minister of commerce and industry.

Gen. Majewski, who is opposed by the nationalists, holds the post of minister of war.

Soviet Russian Policy.

It is hard to tell as yet what the attitude of the new cabinet will be towards Soviet Russia. The big landowners and industrialists of Poland see in an alliance with Russia, a market for their products and a means by which Poland may keep her head above water. The socialists and the Witos party are opposed to any alliance with the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and demand preparations for an immediate war against Russia in which they claim they will have the support of the reactionary powers of Europe.

Skryznski, who poses as a liberal and favored commercial relations with Russia in the last cabinet holds the balance of power in the new cabinet. It is not known what agreement he has entered into when the new cabinet was formed.

One of the first matters to come before the new cabinet will be the matter of commercial relations with Russia and then it will be seen what concessions were made by the big landowners behind Grabski and the group behind Skryznski, in this regard, to the socialists and the Witos party.

WORLD CONDITIONS FORESHADOW TRADE RIVALRY FOR U. S. BOSSES AND LOWER WAGES FOR WORKERS

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

A new argument for high wages is sprung by Director Klein of the federal bureau of foreign and domestic commerce in an address on international trade rivalries. We've heard that domestic demand is necessary to keep America's huge productive machinery profitably employed. But Klein adds that this tremendous domestic demand by supporting mass production enables American industry to meet foreign competition.

Commerce figures of the four leading commercial nations show that we are entering a period of more intense trade rivalry. The foreign commerce of the United States in 1924-25 was 30 per cent above 1913, that of France 5 per cent above, Great Britain within 1 per cent of the prewar level and Germany still 27 per cent below.

German Exports Gaining Fast.

In four years these nations have increased their foreign commerce as follows: United States 24 per cent, France 22 per cent and Great Britain 32 per cent. The postwar inflation muddle in Germany makes it impossible to state the increase in exact figures but Klein says "it represents a more rapid advance than was made by either of its two leading competitors."

The share of U. S. exporters in the import trade of all other countries was 20 per cent in 1923, the latest year for which statistics are available, compared with 15 per cent in 1913. America took 16 per cent of the exports of all these countries compared with 9 per cent in 1913. To keep industry employed it must hold this increased share.

Labor Efficiency Aids Imperialists.

Choosing electrical goods, automobiles and steel as examples, Klein attributes the ability of the United States to compete to "the tremendous domestic demand" and "tremendous mass production due to employment of far greater efficiency both in management and in labor."

But in a previous address Klein pointed out that in Europe the "antiquated equipment of prewar days is gradually replaced by more modern tools of production, and Europe is trying the experiment of applying American methods." He asserts that this almost certainly portends stronger competition for American exporters.

He refers to the installation of up-to-date machinery in France, Italy, Spain, Holland and Scandinavia since the war as giving these countries the edge on England and the United States, especially in textiles. It would be interesting to know what proportion of this represents American capital building up foreign competition for American labor.

How Long Will It Last?

Whether the United States can hold the market which it requires in the face of foreign competition will thus depend less and less on its technical and more on a greater home market sustaining more intense mass production with lowering of production costs. If the Locarno treaty is followed by an economic United States of Europe, such as the French industrialist Loucheur hopes for, then European industry may also have its assured domestic market. Two capitalist giants will then face a fight to the finish unless the revolt of the rest of the world against the exploitation of foreign capital has eliminated the market for which they are fighting.

The question of immediate interest to labor is whether the domestic demand under existing wage rates can support this mass production. Experts suggest that much of this demand is temporary, based on installment purchase plans. If so, a slump will come, with rising costs and inability to compete in foreign markets. Then, unless labor is strong enuf to force the other view, employers will resort to their time-honored method of meeting competition—wage cuts.

Germans Admit the Locarno Pact Is Blow Against Soviet Rule

acter of all capitalist parties and capitalist governments, the nationalists have their own interests to serve.

Count Westarp, nationalist spokesman, demanded the removal of hostile troops from German soil and object to becoming a pawn of Britain in the world struggle of imperialist ambitions. The landowners realize that their own interests will be sacrificed to the interests of the agents of Britain. Westarp said, in his speech:

"If England is working with special energy for Locarno, it is only to force Germany into the circle of nations of the west in the common struggle against Bolshevism. Our political and economic interests point eastward. We must have full liberty of action in the east."

Voting Strength.

The socialists are the largest single group in the German reichstag and their 131 votes will be in favor of Locarno when the pacts are up for final voting. With them will vote the people's party with 51; catholics, 69; democrats, 32; and Bavarian people's party, 19; making a total of 302. Against the pacts are the Communists with 45 votes; the nationalists with 111; the fascists with 14, making a total of 170.

Communist Strategy.

Tho in their opposition to the Luther government the Communists find themselves counted with the nationalists and fascists in the voting, their motives are entirely different. The nationalists and fascists want to dominate Germany in the interests of the old junker class and restore a monarchy or a bourgeois dictatorship in the interests of extreme nationalism. On the other hand the Communists vote against the government for the same reason they vote against all bourgeois governments. Without a vote against the treachery of the social-democrats the Communists could not logically go before the working class and denounce the conspiracy that Britain, with the assistance of the German socialists, tried to launch against the Soviet Union. Just as the French Communists did not vote with the nationalists, but against the government of Painleve so the German Communists voted against the Luther government.

At the same time, in case of an effort of either fascists or nationalists to establish a government of their own the Communists would fight them to the bitter end as they have done in the past.

N. Y. WORKERS PROTEST JAILING OF BEN GITLOW

New York Labor Fills Webster Hall

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—The protest meeting arranged by the International Labor Defense against the jailing of Benjamin Gitlow, member of the Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party and Communist candidate for mayor in the New York elections, and calling for his release, jammed the Webster Hall. Many workers were not able to get into the hall.

Bertram Wolfe, Sam Lipzin, Robert Dunn and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn were the speakers, who demanded the immediate repeal of the New York state criminal syndicalist act, the release of Benjamin Gitlow and the building of the International Labor Defense into a powerful shield with which it will be possible to protect members of the working class against the onslaughts of the bosses. Cosgrove was chairman of the meeting.

Every appeal for the release of Gitlow, the repeal of the criminal syndicalism act and the strengthening of the International Labor Defense met with an enthusiastic approval from the assembled workers. The collection to aid the International Labor Defense to continue its task, netted $220.

Jailed For Bootleg.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 25.— The two Jones brothers, Winfield and Neufield, sons of the former head of the anti-saloon league in Georgia, left here today for Atlanta to serve a two-years' sentence following conviction of diverting alcohol to bootleg channels thru a drug company they managed.

PAT TOOHEY AND DUNNE SPEAK ON THE ANTHRACITE

rest of Pat Toohey and Alex Reid. With the result that the miners are turning more to the Progressive Miners' Committee. Progressive groups are forming everywhere with two things in mind, first, to prepare efficiently for the waging of the strike and second, if the strike is declared off by officials by the means of the five-year agreement with a no-strike clause, at the coming convention, the progressive miners will bring a sufficient number of militants to prevent the betrayal of the men on strike.

All over the anthracite region there is propaganda for the five-year contract. The miners are asked to consider the welfare of business men and bankers. And nothing is being done by the officials to counter-act this propaganda. For that reason the responsibility for saving the union falls upon the progressives.

Toohey Speaks.

Pat Toohey spoke after Dunne and his speech gained for him the reputation of the most interesting and promising of youthful workers, for his speech showed an understanding of the workers' struggle, the class-collaborating union officials and the sources that make up the advocates and upholders of the capitalist government of America.

Toohey said the strike of the anthracite miners is a puzzle to the miner. "Is it a strike or not?" they ask. In the soft coal regions in a strike all the trimmings are put on. There are mass demonstrations with jailings and every sort of persecution. This does not exist in the anthracite.

The leaders of the miners' union set forth the proposition that this strike will not be settled unless the miners win the check-off, basing the entire struggle on the check-off—an issue that does not take in wages, hours of labor, bettering of conditions. And the operators say we will not concede the check-off until we are good and ready.

"What is this check-off?" you may ask. What is this mighty issue? Just a little proposition whereby the operators become the collectors of union dues for Lewis so that he or the other officials do not need to do so themselves. Soon you will hear that the miners have won. The fact will be that Mr. Lewis will get the check-off and the operators will have gotten rid of their surplus coal.

Going back to the strike, Toohey told how, under the Lewis machine system of conducting this strike, which they call a vacation, 10,000 union men are now scabbing in the bituminous anthracite regions. These 10,000 maintenance men are really doing everything which comes under the class of scabbing "and still Lewis thinks the miners are going to win the strike as long as he permits these union men to scab on their fellow workers."

He then related the deplorable conditions under which the anthracite miners work in a way that only one who has gone into the mines daily with them and been all his life one of them could relate. He said they slave like beasts in gas, water, mud and slime and get home without a decent day's wage. One-third of the anthracite miners, he said, is made up of children between the ages of 12 and 17. These children are supposedly working eight hours a day but every miner knows that in reality they work 12 hours for the operator loses none of the time on the numerous preparatory moves which take time and which is not counted into the eight hours.

He told of the demands of the progressive miners, the chief among them being world trade unity which Lewis calls a pipe dream. "But steamers that are today coming from Wales and Scotland with 25,000 tons of coal mined by union miners to this country while the miners here are on strike could never happen if this 'pipe dream' were made a reality by the miners' union."

Very vividly and with much wit and humor he told how he and other progressive miners were arrested.

Halt Meeting.

Gangsters descended upon a mass meeting of the progressive miners' committee which was packed to the roof. August Valentine was in the chair. Several 200-pound sluggers walked up to him, dragged him out of the hall and to jail and kept him there four days under the most vile conditions. The next day a miner who worked beside Valentine in the mines, read of the arrest in the paper. He had a warm spot in his heart for Valentine and decided to give bail for him. He walked into jail and he was retained as a dangerous red.

For five weeks they lay in jail under the most miserable conditions while the Lewis and Cappellini, fake leaders, continued to betray the interests of the miners and to advocate the expulsion from the union. But the local men told Mr. Cappellini and Mr. Lewis: "We know the policies of the progressive miners and we'll not expel them and you can go plumb to hell."

Soviet Union Exposes League of Nations As Foe of Small Nations

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, Maxim Litvinoff, acting commissar of foreign affairs in the Union of Soviet Republics, while George Chicherin is travelling in western Europe, gives an explanation of the league of nations that should be memorized by every worker interested in the triumph of his class over its exploiters. Here it is:

> "The league is a mere screen for the further oppression of small and weak nations. It is chiefly a diplomatic stock exchange where the stronger nations arrange their affairs behind the backs and at the expense of the smaller and weaker nations."

• • • •

Capitalist diplomats have been frantically urging that the Soviet Union join the league of nations and thus put the stamp of its aprpoval on the league's bloody imperialist policies. The profit press has been spreading far and wide over the world the belief that the Soviet Union would join. This resulted in Litvinoff again stating the position of the Soviet Union, and he does not mince words in denouncing the league bandits.

• • • •

At the moment that Litvinoff was issuing his statement in Moscow, the socialist reichstag member, Otto Wels, at Berlin, was reiterating the hope, along with the whole flock of German labor oppressors, of all shades of affiliation, that, "The only way out of the dangers of isolation is for Russia to abandon its voluntary isolation, and take up the road to the league." Communists do not go to the social-democratic parliamentarians for advice. Moscow will have a good laugh at Wels' very comical antics in the role of bait for the league of imperialist robbers. Now that Germany has been permitted to enter the league, Wels can play the part in the reich that J. Ramsay MacDonald assumes in England.

• • • •

One of the first demands that the German capitalist statesmen made, after they had been admitted to the league, was that they be given mandates over the colonies that were lost as a result of the war. It was urged that the colonies could be exploited to help meet the demands of the Dawes plan. The German socialists, supporters of the league, the Dawes plan and the Locarno "security pact," must favor such a scheme of intensive colonial oppression, that led MacDonald, while labor premier, into championing the worst imperialist policies against India, Egypt and China; that has led French "socialists" into giving their aid to the butchers' wars against the Riffians, in Africa, and the Druses in Syria, and similarly, Spanish "socialist" support of the government that wars, altho very unsuccessfully, against the native peoples of Morocco. That these "socialists" should even hint the desire to have Soviet rule join such imperialist hangmen's company, shows how little they understand the Bolshevist revolution that rose to power in Russia on November, 1917.

• • • •

The Soviet Union is not isloated. It has mighty friends in the growing class conscious masses in all capitalist countries. Oppressed colonies and subject nations everywhere are turning more and more to it for guidance and inspiration. The Communist theory that forms the bedrock upon which Soviet rule has been built proclaims the identity of interest between exploited industrial workers in the homeland and the enslaved colonial peoples. Wels, in Germany; MacDonald, in England, Leon Blum in France, and their "socialist" counterparts in all lands reject this fundamental, as they give their allegiance to their various national capitalisms.

• • • •

There is only one international league that the Soviet Union is interested in and that is the World Federation of Soviet Republics that alone, in the words of Litvinoff, furnishes the basis for "independence and self-determination of all nations."

Doumer Fails and Herriot Is Called to Form Cabinet

organize a cabinet because the Herriot group refused to support them, insisting that the left bloc have the premiership otherwise they would boycott any government that might be formed.

Up to now Herriot has steadfastly refused to attempt to organize a government, but in view of the decision of the left bloc of bourgeois parties to participate in a government providing the socialists are given adequate representation, he may accept.

His acceptance will mean a capital levy, which will affect all holders of property and capital and will play directly into the hands of the big bankers who will thereby be able to crush the small fry by advancing money for taxes and taking mortgage security, thus enormously extending the power of bank capital.

Communists Active.

The Communists are arousing the workers of the country against all bourgeois parties on the issue of the colonial wars as well as the question of French finances and preparing for the time when elections to the chamber of deputies will have to be held. Regardless of whether the radical socialists under Herriot or any other single group form a temporary cabinet the economic and political situation is such that no government can last long and the Communists will fight all governments in order to force new elections.

REPORT CHANG SLAIN BY HIS OWN SOLDIERS

Great Mutiny Breaks in Reactionary Army

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 25.— Startling reports from China today include an unconfirmed Central News dispatch from Tientsin reporting that Gen. Chang Tso-lin has been slain in a mutiny of his own troops at Mukden.

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Peking cabled that Chang is being held prisoner by his mutinous troops. This is also lacking in direct confirmation.

The armistice agreement between Chang and Gen. Feng-yu-hsiang was believed today to be definitely at an end, the reason given being the continued military activity of their respective lieutenants, both of whom are aiming at Peking.

Another report stated that Feng had joined forces with Gen. Wu Pei Fu, and were operating against Chang with a view to setting up a Soviet government at Peking.

Chang Tso Lin's troops to Chinwantao, who mutinied, are reported to have fought reactionary troops for several hours, with heavy casualties. The Mukden mutiny is said to have been influenced by Kuo Sung Ling, one of Chang's field generals, who had Chang placed under restraint. Chang's agents in Shanghai are hastily recruiting a counter-revolutionary force of White Guard Russian monarchist refugees. The first boat load left this morning for Mukden.

Dismiss Case Against Morse for War Frauds

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—The last of the war fraud indictments obtained by the department of justice was wiped from the records of the District of Columbia supreme court.

It was the indictment of E. M. Davis of New York and Ernest C. Morse of Cincinnati, former director of sales of war material for the war department, for conspiracy in connection with the sale of the Old Hickory power plant at Jacksonville, Tenn. Alexander Phillips, also indicted in this case, died in August, 1922.

The indictment was nolle prossed by Peyton Gordon, United States district attorney.

MESSINGER LUNCH ROOM WORKERS SLAVE 12 HRS. DAILY, 7 DAYS PER WEEK; DAY OFF ONLY BY SPECIAL REQUEST

By RUFUS P. HEATH, Worker Correspondent.

Messinger Lunch Rooms in the city of Chicago make up a corporation which forms a link in the food trust.

The employment office is located at 17 Quincy street. Anyone looking for a job, must be there at 7 a. m. If you don't get a job then, you must leave and return at 9 a. m. If you don't get a job then, you must leave and return at 7 p. m. You have to wait out on the sidewalk in the cold, rain or snow, while the inspector takes the phone and calls up the houses, to see whether they need any help. He takes his time about calling, while you wait and shiver.

Wages, Hours and Conditions.

The day crew works a 10-hour shift and the night crew works a 12-hour shift, for the same weekly wage scale, which is as follows: Cooks, (they call them pantrymen), $22.00; waiters, $19.00; porters and dishwashers, $14.00. The day crew is divided in half, where possible, so that half begin at seven a. m. and quit at five p. m., while the other half begin at nine a. m. and quit at seven p. m. The day crew works a half-day Sunday, making six and a half days a week.

The night crew begins at seven p. m. and quit at seven a. m., twelve hours a day, seven days a week. Neither crew has a day off, except the waiters or countermen, and they can only take a day off by special arrangement with the manager, which is very hard to do.

Manager's Job to Drive.

The manager is the slave driver. They're short on nearly all the dishes, silverware and glasses. When a rush is on, the porters are kept on the run getting the dirty dishes out to the dishwasher. The waiters must rush to get their tables and counter clear in time for the next customer. The cook and waiters are constantly hollering, "glasses," "silverware," "pie plates," or "platters up," while the manager is right there with the dishwasher yelling, "Come on, get these dishes out there, quick."

Of course, the manager would rather work the help to death, than tell the boss to get more dishes. In fact, he is afraid he will lose the job if he asks for more dishes and to get more dishes would mean less profit for the boss.

The Spy System.

The workers realize the need of a union and most of them talk in favor of unions. But the boss has one or more spies (stool pigeons) in each house to report anyone who tries to talk a union or organize one in the Messinger houses. Therefore, they are afraid to talk union, for fear that they will get fired and blacklisted. Just like in any other industry, you will find the scissor-bill there that don't care anything about the conditions that he has to work and live under, just so long as he has a place to sleep and coffee and rolls to eat. When you speak to him about a union, he says, "Oh, what do I care? I won't be here long. I'll be a salesman or a bricklayer next week. I'm just here to make a stake, so for the length of time I'm here I don't need to waste my money on a union." You see the same sap a year later, still on the same old job.

The Union Needed.

The union is the answer to the twelve-hour day. It is only thru a strong, well-organized industrial union that the twelve-hour day can be smashed. If the workers in the food industry, will only organize, they can get the eight-hour day and make the food trust sit up and take notice. If not, they will die working twelve hours a day.

IN BOWERY MISSIONS IF YOU FALL ASLEEP YOU GET THROWN OUT

By A Worker Correspondent

NEW YORK, N. Y.—It is very cold. The weather changed all of a sudden. I got my overcoat out of hock today. I am glad I have an overcoat. On the Bowery this cold night I can see thousands of men suffering from cold, hunger and poverty. When you are homeless and broke, you naturally drift to the Bowery.

The missions are open: The Salvation Army hotel and the Seamen's church Institute, if you have the price. It is so cold that I decided to sleep in the mission, where there are also hundreds of others. But there are no beds to sleep on. One sits and sleeps in a chair all night long.

At midnight, they wake everyone up to listen to the religious services and to join in signing! If, after they wake you up, you should fall asleep again—out you go into the cold street.

A Miner Is Never Too Old to Have His Wage Docked

By A Worker Correspondent

WEST FRANKFORT, Ill.—"Fritz," an old coal digger who has worked for the Peabody Coal company for the last 14 years and whi should be on a pension, is still not too old to learn new tricks that the bosses can put over.

Not long ago, he "struck a role in his room," as miners say. Any coal miner with horse sense knows that in such cases the roof becomes bad and is very dangerous to work under. So Fritz notified the face boss and demanded a timberman to timber the place.

"Nothing doing," says the face boss. "If you want it timbered, do it yourself!"

Old Fritz went home, the only thing he could do. The next day it was the same story and again he went home. When he came back the following day, he wa stold, "You are discharged!"

When Fritz took the matter up with the pit committee, the committee, as usual, referred it to the superintendent, and there was a disagreement and the case went to a union board member. The board member told Fritz, "Don't you worry! You go home until the roof is fixed and I'll make them pay compensation for every day you lose."

Three weeks went by before the board member told Fritz that he could go back to work. But when Fritz asked him about compensation, he said, what Fritz had heard so often before, "Nothing doing."

If you want to thoroughly undestand Communism—study it.

Another "Charity" Hold-Up!

By J. G. SOLTIS, Worker Correspondent.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 25.—Eighteen hundred workers at the Ford plant here were forced to contribute one day's full wages to the community charity fund in their annual drive. Altho most of the workers are absolutely opposed to the principle of capitalistic charity, they had to donate or to lose their jobs.

The only choice they had was as to whether they should pay the $5.00 all at once or at the rate of 50 cents a week.

BURNS' FINKS IN PLOT TO MURDER JOILET STRIKER

Three Arrested for 'a Conspiracy to Kill

By A Worker Correspondent

Three private detectives, alleged to be operatives of the notorious strike-breaking Burns agency, were arrested yesterday on warrants charging them with conspiracy to murder Attilo de la Pilazza, a striking member of Machinists' Union Local 124, of Joliet, Ill. Their names are Daniel Bottee, A. R. Lopez and H. L. Kendricks.

The case arose over a strike by garage workers in Joliet, and a swarm of finks immediately descended on the little city with a well planned scheme of the agent provocateur type so customary to the Burns agency.

"Protection."

Windows were broken in some garages and the Winston Motor company was bombed. When apprehended by the Joliet police Bottee admitted that the National Automotive Protective association of St. Louis was paying the bill. The association now knows what sort of "protection" the Burns agency deals in.

Machinists' Union members, striking against the five scab firms, the Buick, Hudson, Essex, Studebaker and Dodge companies, and supported by the important Carmen's Local 882, had already won agreements with seventeen local garages.

On a Mission.

The Burns men came to town to break up the strike and crush the union. Some of them inveigled themselves into an acquaintance with De la Piazza, a striker. Bottee was the chief "friend" in this case. Bottee fixed it up so that on a certain night, he and De Lapiazza would sit up till midnight playing cards.

At midnight, Bottee persuaded De la Piazza to accompany him to a nearby restaurant for lunch. In the meantime the fink Kendricks and his equally finky companion, A. R. Lopez, went to Joliet police headquarters and told the cops that they had "information" that a bomb was to be placed in the passageway between the Studebaker and Buick garages.

Ready to Kill.

The police sent three men, Captain McCraney and Detectives Lehner and Talkie. The two "informed" finks, Kendricks and Lopez, were joined by two more of the Burns skunks, J. A. Wise and J. J. Garvey. All seven waited in ambush across the street from the garage passageway.

The chief fink, Bottee, took care when he and De la Piazza went out for lunch, to take the sidewalk along the front of the two garages and by the passageway. Bottee had a "bomb" made of rags. When the two neared the passageway, Bottee lit a match and set the "bomb" afire, tossing it into the passageway.

Shot Down Striker.

At once the three police and four Burns finks rushed across the street to capture the "bomb" throwers. De la Piazza, thinking a holdup gang was attacking him and his companion, ran north on Scott street with both the police and the Burns finks shooting at him. He finally collapsed after being shot thru both legs and the police "captured" him. He is still recovering in the St. Joseph's hospital.

But the police became a little indignant when the "bomb" was found to be a fake, and questioning the finks elicited the information of the conspiracy which nearly caused the death of the innocent striker they had plotted to have shot as a means of discrediting the strike. The present arrest of three of the Burns operatives is the result. Joliet labor unions and particularly the machinists, are watching the case with interest and mean to see that the finks do not get away with their usual dismissal, by secret influence on the prosecuting officials.

"Sixty Hours and Step on It!" Says Mail-Order House

By SIDNEY KELLER.
(Worker Correspondent)

"Sixty hours and step on it!"

This threatening warning to the girls employed at Sears-Roebuck mail order house is printed on blackboards in large letters as the bosses' means of speeding-up the help. For "sixty hours and step on it," the girls are paid the miserable sum of $18 per week, with big chances of getitng laid off after the Christmas rush if they haven't "stepped on it" enuf. Over 2,000 workers are laid off each year after the holidays.

Fears of being laid off keep the workers in a frenzied rush to obey the bosses' orders. Employment offices are packed daily with work seekers, standing around for hours anxious to fill a vacancy if some worker fails to keep up the pace.

Despite the frequent changes of help, however, the bosses are bitterly hated, for it doesn't take a worker long to catch on to their methods of exploitation. Some day, the workers will learn enuf to become organized.

OPEN SHOP HEAVEN HAS HIGH RATE OF TUBERCULAR WORKERS

By A Worker Correspondent

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 25.—Louisianna, the lair of the open shopper, convict labor system, tenement houses (and farms of the same variety, where women, children and old men are forced to labor for less than an existence), according to a bulletin issued by the state board of health, has 19,260 tubercular patients in the various institutions and homes, under treatment.

This does not include many more who are daily employed in sweatshops and factories scattering the germs of the white plague to their fellow workers and sending it broadcast in goods manufactured here for shipment to the north and east.

The death rate from tuberculosis in Louisiana is 13 per 1,000.

SCHOOL ADOPTS FINKS' SLOGAN, 'DEPORT REDS'

By A Worker Correspondent

HARTFORD, Conn.—After seven detectives of the Hartford police squad had attended the mass meeting arranged by the Young Workers' League at the Labor Educational Alliance here this week, the teachers in the public schools came out in an open attack. League members are "reds," and should be deported, teachers warned their pupils.

Wide attention had been attracted by the meeting, which was a protest against American "education week." Altho the police did not interfere, they questioned several people and the seven dicks stayed thruout under the leadership of Sergeant Moriarity.

MINERS FORCED ON LOWER PAY BY UNION HEAD

Farrington's Man Friday on the Job

By WILLIAM SCHROEDER.
(Worker Correspondent)

WEST FRANKFORT, Ill.—Reduction of wages from 35 to 50 per cent is being forced on miners at the Orient No. 2 Mine, by men loading from 15 and more tons of coal a day for shift work pay behind the loading machine.

The men complained and their case was taken up by a union board member after the pit committee had disagreed. The board member handed the case over to his assistant, an appointee of Frank Farrington, president of District 12, U. M. W. of A. The union assistant spoke in "his master's voice" and declared that the company had a right to pay shift-work wages because the loading machines were in an "experimental" stage yet, this, despite the fact that the machines have been in use for three years!

The miners' agreement with the company states that, when any machine is in use more than three months, it becomes practical and can not be considered any more as in the experimental stage. Miners know this even if board members don't. But ,what most of the miners don't know is that board members are there to take care of the interests of the coal operators. And coal diggers are there to pay their dues and keep their mouths shut—and to work at from 35 to 50 per cent reduction if the board members order!

UNION OFFICIALS AID BOSSES TO BRING OPEN SHOP TO SANTA BARBARA

(By a Worker Correspondent.)

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. Nov. 22—Santa Barbara is being rebuilt with scab labor after the earthquake of last spring. The California Development Association and the Los Angeles Times offered to give Santa Barbara 4½ per cent toward rebuilding the city if this was done on an open shop basis.

Workers Play With Fire.

The business men foreseeing trouble refused. Officials of organized labor advised the workers to collaborate with the chamber of commerce in the interest of peace and as a result organized labor pledged itself not to raise wages. The Citizens' Committee made a pretense at helping the union men to keep their jobs but the wolf soon showed its teeth.

A notorious open shop manufacturer of the Santa Barbara school board brot in scab carpenters to rebuild the high school, saying he could not afford to employ union men. Organized labor was once more advised by its officials to work with the scabs and they even pledged donations to the rebuilding fund. One local union of about 275 members donated $1,000 toward rebuilding the schools.

And Burn Their Fingers.

The workers were given another lesson in class collaboration when they started on the Central Building. The foreman began driving the men working outside on scaffolds. Three men had to quit their jobs or endanger their lives. Then the foreman began picking on the union men. He brot a charge of stealing a brush against one man and laid-off that man tho he could not prove the accusation. The union delegate was called in. He told the men "that the job is fair"—but the men refused to stand for that and quit, with the exception of a few.

An advertisement which appeared in the Los Angeles Times recently is a signal to close the town of Santa Barbara to organized labor, a signal to scabs to flock to Santa Barbara. In line with this policy the Los Angeles Times carried a vicious story against organized labor in Santa Barbara.

Attack Progressives Not Bosses

(Worker Correspondent.)

BENTLEYVILLE, Pa., (By Mail.)——A mass open-air meeting called by the mine workers' organization was held at Marianna, Pa. on November 15. The meeting was called for the purpose of protesting against Bethlehem Steel corporation for trying to open their mines under the 1917 scale or so-called open shop policy on the Ellsworth branch.

There are a large number of progressives in this section. So the progressives got busy and distributed leaflets to the miners who came to the mass meeting calling on them to fight for their union, to close their ranks against the 1917 scale and to force their officials to take drastic steps in this fight and stop expelling tue progressive members in the United Mine Workers of America.

Some of the miners were distributing leaflets, "Hands Off China," and "Stand by Soviet Russia" and "Don't Mobilize for Morgan."

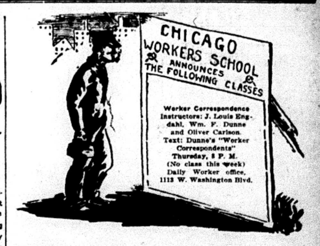
Officials in Frenzy Over Leaflets.

When the district officials and their agents got hold of the leaflets which criticized them for their inactivity and wrong policies or lack of policy, they went blind mad over it and tried to stop the distribution. In their fury they got hold of a miner who was distributing the leaflets "Stand by Soviet Russia" and accused him of nothing less than of being paid by the steel company to break the union. The district president, Mr. Fagan himself, with several of his gang attacked this miner and by force took away the leaflets that he had with him.

The meeting was soon called to order and to the surprise of everyone, the meeting was opened by a priest with the prayer: "God Help and Bless Us in This Fight." The priest was followed by international organizers who spoke in Italian and Croation. In their speeches they attacked Kaiser Bill of Germany for breaking the contract and marching thru Belgium. The Belgians took to arms and fought to the last ditch against the kaiser. They further pointed out that Kaiser Schwab is doing exactly the same thing as Kaiser Wilhelm did. But we are advised to fight against Kaiser Schwab by quite different methods—to sit home and keep quiet while the officials "with their brains and intelligence" (and by praying to god!) will bring Charlie Schwab to stand by the agreement which he, himself, signed. One would wonder what would have happened with the Belgian people had they followed the advice of our union officials. Kaiser Wilhelm would have marched thru Belgium without losing a single hair!

The next speaker was Mr. Fagan, district president of this district of the United Mine Workers of America. He followed the same line about Kaiser Bill and Kaiser Schwab. He opened his speech with a plea for unity, but soon forgot his opening remarks and started a vigorous attack upon the progressive miners, and the Workers Party. He pointed out that Tom Ray, Myerscough, Ruthenberg and Foster are just as dangerous to the union as Charlie Schwab is and stated that they must be destroyed by all means. This attack upon the left wing was the cause of a great disturbance among the large mass of miners who began to protest callling Mr. Fagan a liar and pointing out that this group, Foster-Ruthenberg, are trying to make the union a fighting organization. Fagan then made a statement that the progressive miners at their last convention held in Pittsburgh on March 15th were led by a man by the name of Mike Halapy, who is now organizing company unions. He was then again called a liar and challenged to prove his statements. He soon finished his speech and was followed by Vice President Murray.

God helped him, as it was prayed before, with a big rain storm so he had to cut it short without showing the miners the way to fight the Charlie Schwabs who are laughing at the agreements while our union officials are busy fighting the "reds."



WORKER-WRITERS MOBILIZING IN CORRESPONDENCE CLASSES

This week, a new page is turned in the history of The DAILY WORKER for it marks the beginning of classes in WORKER CORRESPONDENCE, both in New York and in Chicago. With these classes as centralization points, groups of worker correspondents are to be recruited in all possible industrial units in the United States.

Wherever a worker's ear catches a word of workers' news, his pencil is to be ready to write it down and send it to The DAILY WORKER: this is the task for which the classes are to stimulate workers.

In order to send in news to The DAILY WORKER, however, it is by no means necessary to attend these classes. They are only one means of encouraging and directing the work. Articles dealing with their courses will be published regularly in the paper so that those not attending will be kept in touch and be able to profit, tho not participating.

The text to be used is Wm. F. Dunne's pamphlet on WORKER CORRESPONDENTS, which is No. 4 of the Little Red Library series, and can be ordered from The Daily Worker Publishing Co.

In Chicago, the classes are directed by J. Louis Engdahl and William F. Dunne, editors of The DAILY WORKER, and Oliver Carlson, secretary of the Workers' School, while in New York, the work will be in charge of Joseph Freeman, proletarian journalist and poet. Chicago classes are on every Thursday night,—New York classes, every Monday night. All interested workers can attend.

NOMINATE RANK AND FILERS AND MAINTAIN GOOD RECORD, SAY UNION WINDOW CLEANERS

By A Worker Correspondent

Maintain the present policy of electing officials from the rank and file! This is the slogan which members of Window Workers' Local 134, B. S. E. I. U., will rally around tonight at their regular meeting at 180 West Washington, when officials for 1926 will be nominated.

Under the capable guidance of Steve Zaharachuk, business agent, this union has developed from a bankrupt organization run by Tim Murphy and his henchmen to a militant union with a good financial standing and a three-fold increase of membership.

Chicago "World," Chief Scab.

Formerly laughed at by window cleaning companies, this union today is almost 100 per cent recognized, with wage scales of $1.00 an hour and the piece-work system abolished. The scabby "Chicago" World is the only firm of any importance that has no agreement with the Window Workers' Union.

The membership consists of old-timers, who first formed the union and fought to bring it to its present status, and of new-comers, not yet drawn into the militant spirit of the union. The latter group must be drawn into the union's activities. These new members must be made to feel that the union is theirs and that its future is in their hands.

No More Outsiders!

The present policy of electing officials from the rank and file must be maintained. No more outside Tim Murphys can be tolerated! In the campaign for organizing the non-union buildings firms, the entire membership must take part. The union has good rank and file material, it has a fighting business agent on the job all the time, it has the co-operation of the building trades.

SPEED-UP SYSTEM UNBEARABLE AS STEEL PRODUCTION INCREASES

By HENRY VICTOR, Worker Correspondent.

No relief in the conditions of the steel workers is foreseen as steel production heavily increases in the Calumet district. This encircles the Inland Steel Company of Indiana Harbor, the Youngstown steel works and the steel mills of East Chicago and Hammond, and also the steel mills of Gary, Ind.

With the advance in steel production, there will be no increase in employment. The increases in steel production in steel mills in this district will be gained mostly thru a stricter enforcement of the speed-up system, which is unbearable even in regular weeks of average production.

Dominate Press.

An illustration of the united front of the manufacturers and the press is shown by the consent of the entire press of this district to the demands of the officials of the Inland Steel company of Indiana Harbor which also maintains a plant in Chicago Heights, that no news of accidents and injuries to workers in the mills be published; only such news pertaining to the conditions of the workers as given out to the press by the steel officials themselves may be published.

WORKERS' SCHOOL WILL HAVE MANY CLASSES FRIDAY

Courses in Philosophy and Speaking Offered

NEW YORK, Nov. 25—A course by Moissaye J. Olgin in the "Living Revolution," one by Kvitko in the "Materialistic Philosophy of Life," Public Speaking under the able direction of Carl Brodsky, and a second shop nucleus training course (Fundamentals of Leninism), instructor, Jack Stachel, will make Friday night one of the most popular nights of the week at the New York Workers' School. All of these courses are to begin Friday night with the possible exception of Olgin's which may be delayed a short time on account of his illness.

The course in Public Speaking is primarily for beginners. How to prepare a talk, overcome nervousness; gestures and delivery; how to act as chairman, how to make an open-air talk; how to deliver your message in 15 minutes—these are some of the problems taken up. The students criticize each other, are taught how to arrange their subject matter and also given instructions on what to use for material and practice.

A Materialistic Philosophy of Life is a "ground-breaker" course for our party since the American workers have concerned themselves very little with the problems of philosophy and since some of the problems taken up are of a controversial nature. Beginning with the fundamental problems of the nature of the universe and the problems of knowledge, Kvitko's course will take up the materialistic interpretation of history, the problem of human conduct (ethics), bourgeoisie and proletarian philosophies of art, the problem of the state and the nature of Communism.

The Living Revolution is also a pioneer or ground-breaking course in which M. J. Olgin will contribute the results of original studies in the field of sociology, criticism of literature on the one hand and in the field of the Russian revolution on the other. The course will take the form of popular lectures in which the revolution will be studied as a living thing reacting upon and finding expression in the minds of the artists that went thru and came after it. "How did the revolution actually take place? What did the men and women participating in the struggle look and feel like? What was the effect of its vast events upon bystanders, eye witnesses and participants? How did the revolution find its way into Russian literary rat?" hese are some are questions that the course will try to answer.

The above courses are each of them once-a-week, three-months courses with a fee of $2.50. Registrations should be made at once as the number that will be admitted is limited.

BIGGEST FINNISH DISTRICT CONVENTION IS UNANIMOUS FOR THE C. E. C. AND REORGANIZATION

The Ohio-Pittsburgh district convention of the Finnish language fractions of the Workers (Communist) Party of America, in which are found all the Finnish Party units in Buffalo, Rochester, Detroit, the entire Ohio and Pennsylvania districts, has just concluded the most successful convention in its history.

There were present twenty-two delegates. In the opinion of the representative of the Central Executive Committee to the convention, Comrade Lovestone, this conference engaged in the most thoro and instructive discussion on party reorganization that has yet occured in our ranks.

Adopt Unity Resolution.

The Central Executive Committee unity resolution was endorsed unanimously. The Central Executive reorganization plan was likewise unanimously endorsed. Every delegate voted for an energetic campaign of bolshevization. The delegates expressed themselves heartily in favor of the party's waging an even more vigorous reorganization plan than it has to date.

The convention discussed at length the industrial work, educational work, work among women; Negro work, defense work, labor party activities, etc. The district committee activities were endorsed.

The convention voted to instruct its delegates to the Finnish national conference that the conference should appropriate $500 to establish a fund for the organization of a Lenin College in Chicago.

Aid DAILY WORKER.

A collection was made for The DAILY WORKER in which $50 was gathered. The Finnish district committee also answered the appeal of the Central Executive Committee by giving an additional $100 to The DAILY WORKER.

Two hundred dollars was voted to help establish a special Young Workers League school in the Warren district. The convention also unanimously endorsed the ownership of the property now in the hands of the party, to be continued in the hands of the membership remaining and functioning in the party fractions.

The letter sent to the Finnish section of the Workers (Communist) Party by the Communist Party of Finland was unanimously endorsed.

Lovestone Speaks.

Comrade Lovestone, the representative of the Central Executive Committee, spoke at length about party reorganization, trade union work, and the unification of the Communist forces. Comrade Lovestone stressed the necessity of the Finnish fractions becoming a more organic part of the party and participating more actively in all its campaigns.

The resolution which was adopted read, in part, as follows:

"The Ohio-Pittsburgh district convention of the Finnish language fractions of the Workers (Communist) Party urges all Finnish comrades to forget their past factional differences, to drop all factional strife and to rally as one for the new constructive activities, for the Communist campaigns, under the leadership of the Central Executive Committee. We declare, that in order to carry out the most important tasks confronting our party, it is absolutely necessary that full support and assistance be given by all the party members to the Central Executive Committee in this difficult work. The Ohio-Pittsburgh district convention of the Finnish language fractions of the Workers (Communist) Party calls upon all the members represented in its convention by various delegates to aid without reservation and to prove by deeds their moral and material support of the Central Executive Committee in carrying out the decisions of the Communist International."

Elect Delegates.

The following were elected delegates to the national conference: Comrades Karhu, Latvala, Tuomeneen.

A motion was unanimously adopted declaring that any comrade of the delegation who in the least deviates from the instructions of policy adopted at this conference, is to relinquish his convention mandate immediately. His place is to be taken by one of the fraternal delegates who is being sent to the convention.

The fraternal delegates are Comrades Wick, from the Detroit branch which has made quite some progress in party reorganization, and Comrade Jansen, from Buffalo.

All in all, this was one of the most successful party conferences held in a long time.

Form Communist Dramatic Circle

WANTED: Communists and sympathizers who are interested in organizing a dramatic group in Chicago to give Communist and other revolutionary working class plays to help build up our movement. In answering, please give name, address, telephone number and specify what time you have free for rehearsals. Also state what, if any, experience you have had in such work. No applications will be accepted from party and Y. W. L. members without the consent of the responsible party authorities. Young men and women are especially desired. If a member of the party or Young Workers' League, specify street or shop nucleus and section. The dramatic work will be in English. Address all replies to James H. Dolsen, 2734 Park Place, Evanston, Ill., or District Office, Workers (Communist) Party, 19 So. Lincoln street, Chicago, Ill.

WORKERS ALL OVER THE WORLD MOURNED FOR MIKHAIL FRUNZE

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The John Reed branch of the Y. W. L. Local, Washington, D. C. mourns the death of Comrade Mikhail Freunze, Soviet commissar of war. It promises to help carry on the fight and struggle which he and his fellow comrades have so well begun.

YOUNG WORKERS TO JOIN UNIONS

EVERY effort is being put forth by the industrial comittee of the Young Workers (Communist) League, District Eight to bring every member of the league into a union. The necessity for this has long been realized and now the time has come when discussion must give way to action.

The month of December has been set aside thruout the world for Young Communist organizations to increase their economic-trade union activity and work to particularly accomplish two main tasks.

1. To bring every member into a trade union.
2. To form a youth fraction in every union.

There is also the necessity for estblishing close contact with young workers in the union. In order to do this the league will set up concrete demands for each union and each industry.

In order to accomplish this the league has called meetings of comrades in various industries, where the specific problems of the trade will be dealt with and specific demands set up. The meetings will be held as follows:

METAL TRADES: This includes comrades in the machine shops, electrical shops, and auto workers, etc.

The meeting will be held on Tuesday, Dec. 1 at 8 p. m. at 3118 Roosevelt Road.

NEEDLE TRADES: This includes comrades who work in the men's and women's clothing industry, the Millinery Workers, Fur Workers, etc. This meeting will be held on Thursday, Dec. 3, at 8 p. m. at 3118 Roosevelt Road.

PRINTING TRADES: This includes all comrades who work in composing, press and bindery rooms, or other department. The meeting will be held on Saturday, Dec. 5 at 5 p. m., at 19 S. Lincoln St.

BUILDING TRADES: This includes all comrades working in the building industry, such as carpenters, painters, bricklayers, etc. The meeting will be held at 19 S. Lincoln St., Saturday, Dec. 5, at 5 p. m.

OFFICE WORKERS: These comrades will meet at 19 S. Lincoln St., Sunday, Dec. 6 at 2:30 p. m.

MISCELLANEOUS TRADES: This includes all comrades working in trade not otherwise listed, such as shoe workers, leather workers, auto drivers, textile workers, musicians, food workers, etc. The meeting will be held at 19 S. Lincoln St., Sunday, Dec. 6, at 2:30 p. m.

CLERKS: This includes all department store workers, mail order workers, and clerks in small stores. This meeting will be held on Sunday, Dec. 13, at 2:30 p. m. at 19 S. Lincoln St. Here the specific problems of the students will be discussed and fractions formed in the various schools.

CLEVELAND TO OPEN CLASSES FOR WORKERS

Offers Three Courses to Members

CLEVELAND, Nov. 25—The Workers' (Communist) Party here has arranged the following classes for which students are to be enrolled at once.

Two Classes in English.

An elementary class (for beginners) and an advanced class are planned. These classes are to begin Sunday, Nov. 29. For the many foreign-born comrades these classes will be of extreme value, and we hope that a great number will attend.

Class in Public Speaking.

Many of our comrades are members of unions, but are unable to speak on the union floor. Still others who will soon be in the unions are in the same position; they are not equipped for putting forward the party position. Every party member who wishes to speak so that he may better serve the cause should not fail to join the speakers' class. This class will begin on Tuesday, Dec. 1.

The English class will be held twice a week—Sunday mornings at 10:00 and Wednesday evenings at 8:00.

The class for public speaking will be held once a week on Tuesday nights, at 8:00.

The fee for each course, which will last 6 months, will be $2.50 for the entire course, and must be paid in advance. These classes will be open to both party and non-party members, and will be held at the district office. The instructors are: Sadie Amter and Philip Shatz. Quick action in enrollment is asked.

Class in Trade Unionism.

There will also be conducted a class in trade unionism. For this purpose each branch should select a number of active trade unionists, who will be required to attend this class. Quotas shall be assigned to the branches on the basis of 40 to attend the class. This course will last 3 months, and members who do not directly participate as students may attend as auditors. This course consists of round-table discussions on the tactics of Communists in the trade unions, and all the problems that confront the Communists on the trade union field.

Intensified activity on the part of the Communists in the trade unions requires a good knowledge of policies and tactics. Various unions and the different locals require different tactics. The purpose of the discussion will be to make the comrades familiar with our policies and tactics so that the blunders of the past may be avoided and healthy constructive work carried on.

The comrades selected by the branches for this course are compelled to attend. The fee for the course will be $2, the course lasting thru 12 sessions. The fee is to be paid either by the comrade himself or by the branch. The course will begin on Sunday, Dec. 6.

The class will meet every Sunday at 10 a. m. at the district office. This course is confined to party and Young Workers' League members, both as auditors and students.

Enrollment for all these classes should take place immediately, either thru the branches or at the district office.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.— Great Britain, pound sterling, demand, 4.84 1-1-16; cable, 4.84 7-16; France, franc, demand, 3.74½; cable, 3.75; Belgium, franc, demand, 4.53; cable, 4.53½; Italy, lira, no quotation; Sweden, krone, demand, 26.74; cable, 26.77; Norway, krone, demand, 20.33; cable, 20.35; Denmark, krone, demand, 24.82; cable, 24.84; Germany, mark, not quoted; Shanghai, tael, demand, 78.00.

MEMBERSHIP MEETINGS FOR PARTY UNIFICATION AND TRADE UNION WORK

A series of meetings has been arranged thruout the party, to be addressed by two representatives of the Central Executive Committee, on the subjects of the unification of all Communist elements in the party behind the Central Executive Committee and for the intensification of the party's trade union work.

Dates have been assigned to each district, and on these dates there will be held with the C. E. C. representatives two meetings. A meeting of the District Executive Committee, and a general membership meeting.

The dates assigned are as follows:

Chicago, six section membership meetings during the dates of December 4 to 11.
Detroit, December 4 and 5.
Buffalo, December 6.
Boston, December 7 and 8.
New York, December 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.
Philadelphia, December 14 and 15.
Pittsburgh, December 16 and 17.
Cleveland, December 18 and 19.
New Haven, to be addressed by New York comrades.

These meetings are the most important ones that the party has held for a long time and thoro discussion on the two most vital questions before the party will be had.

Ball of Red Youth in Bronx, N. Y., Saturday

NEW YORK, Nov. 25—The famous play, "October," will be performed at the "Ball of the Red Youth," Saturday evening, Nov. 28; at 1347 Boston Road, Bronx, which is given by the the Russian branch of the Y. W. L.

Other interesting numbers on the program, also music and dancing.

Brownsville Open Forum Starts Sunday Evening

NEW YORK, Nov. 25—The first of a series of open forum discussions will be held in the Brownsville Workers Party headquarters on Sunday, Nov. 29 at 8 p. m. Comrade Max Gartner will be the lecturer. He will speak in Jewish and the subject of the first discussion will be "Zionism." All workers are invited. Admission 15 cents.

Los Angeles Times Hysterically Attacks Workers Party School

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Nov. 25. — A hysterical front-page article has appeared in Los Angeles' leading newspaper this week, the Times, "exposing" the "Bolshevization" of America, thru the Communist school which is being held every Sunday at our party headquarters, and marvelling at the fact that it is done so "brazenly open." The threat is plainly made of another raid such "as was made here in 1923." The police raided the headquarters at that time thinking it was an, I. W. W. meeting and arrested members of the Trade Union Educational League as "anarchists, etc."

Neither the Times nor any other capitalist agency can frighten us into giving up our activities in behalf of the workers. They also "expose" the Juniors and Young Workers' League activities against "Education Week," and have informed the superintendent of schools to take steps to punish the Juniors for passing out "seditious" literature in direct violation of a state law which prohibits reading matter for students which is not approved by the school board.

International Br. 9 Launches Campaign to Save and Build Daily

(By Worker Correspondent.)

With enthusiasm and vigor, International Branch No. 9, at its first meeting launched a campaign to save and build The DAILY WORKER.

In addition to a systematic DAILY WORKER stamp and subscription drive, the members assessed themselves 50c. a month for The DAILY WORKER fund.

Practically all the members present had assisted The DAILY WORKER as much as their limited proletarian means would permit, nevertheless we were able to set our first donation from this new international branch, amounting to $3.00.

Ways and means for covering the union with our literature and to building and bolshevizing our party also were discussed.

Undoubtedly this newly organized international branch, which is truly international in its composition, will hold many good things in store for our party.

RESCUE FUND PASSES $26,000, NEW YORK STRIKING HARDEST!

TODAY is The DAILY WORKER'S red letter day, with over $1,600 added to the fund that is to keep America's Communist press in print. The bulk of this came from New York, where comrades under L. E. Katterfeld's direction have been conducting rescue parties, leaving no means untried in their efforts not to lose this fight. Convention Call of the Young Pioneers

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—Prior to the reorganization of the Junior section of the Young Workers' League into the Young Pioneers and on the basis of school nuclei, the New York Juniors will hold their district convention. The convention has been called for Nov. 28 and 29, at 108 East 14th street. The following call has been sent by them to all the Young Pioneers' groups in District No. 2, to the D. E. C. of the Y. W. L. and W. P. of District No. 2 and to the W. P. of District No. 15.

Dear Comrades:—It is over two years since our organization was formed due to the efforts of the Y. W. L. with co-operation of the W. P. During that period of time we have carried on our work among the working class children as the Junior section of the Y. W. L. and now we are ready to begin functioning as an independent organization of Communist children—The Young Pioneers.

Our activities in the past were numerous. We succeeded in organizing several hundred members into 16 groups. We conducted several campaigns in the schools against religion, religious training, etc., by propagating among the children, distributing leaflets in the schools, etc. We participated in the work of the W. P., Y. W. L., Labor Defense, etc. Our members were especially active in raising funds for the defense and The DAILY WORKER. Within the groups we had many discussions to make the membership understand our aims and object. We supported and sold the Young Comrade. Our Leninist Youth Camp accommodated some 150 children, members and non-members. Our comrades were trained there to be better and more active young Communists. These were our general activities in the past.

At the present we are going thru an educational period before we will start to reorganise on the basis of school nuclei. This with the formation of a Young Pioneers' League will mean that members will have to become more active, they will have to understand how and why to be active so that we can become a powerful organization of working class children.

According to the decision of the D. E. C. of the Y. W. L. the present Pioneer D. E. C. is to issue a call for the district convention at which a permanent D. E. C. will be elected and plans for future work to be laid out. The committee decided that the convention be held on November 28 and 29. The agenda for the convention is to be as follows:

1. Election of temporary officers.
2. Election of credentials committee.
3. Report of W. P. delegate.
4. Report of Y. W. L. delegate.
5. Report of Pioneer D. E. C.
6. Report of District Pioneer Bureau.
7. Bolshevization and reorganization.
8. School struggle and school work.
9. Child labor and our struggle against it.
10. Work among Negro children.
11. Opponent organizations (Boy Scouts, etc.)
12. The Young Comrade and other literature.
13. Election of new D. E. C.

This agenda is to be discussed at every group following which they are to elect delegates to the convention. Every group is entitled to one delegate for every fifteen members. The number should be figured on the basis of the average attendance at the last four group meeting. Your C. C. C. delegate or group leader will give you further instructions on the matter. The Y. W. L. D. E. C. is entitled to three delegates and the W. P. of District No. 2 is entitled to two delegates and the W. P. D. E. C., District 15, one delegate. The apportionment of finances of the convention is $1.00 for every delegate from the group, that is if your group sends three delegates you must pay $3.00. The Y. W. L. is to pay $5.00 per delegate and the Workers Party $10.00 per delegate.

It is important that the groups elect their best members as delegates as they will have to decide on every important matters that every Pioneer will have to carry out.

For a strong Pioneer movement,
D. E. C. of the Young Pioneers,
District No. 2.

We're simply swamped! Many little jobs in the office are waiting to be done—and we haven't a big enough office force to do them. Perhaps you want to help The DAILY WORKER and can spare a day—or a few hours—or maybe only an hour? If you can—come over. You'll be as welcome as a long lost friend.

WOMEN PATRIOTS TO FIGHT REDS AND UNIONISM

Have Blessing and Aid of U. S. Army

Open shop anti-labor forces are cheered by the organization in Chicago at a meeting in the snobbish Blackstone hotel, of a female contingent of silk-stocking fascisti, called the "Government Club." Its program according to the "founder and honorary president," Mrs. George E. Owens of New York, is to combat pacifism and Bolshevism.

Mrs. Owens says there are 700 members of the New York branch, and the Blackstone hotel gathering intends to enlist a battalion of Amazonian patriots in Chicago.

"Non-Political."

The "founding mother" of this embryo fascist organization announces that the club is, of course, "non-political," "non-partisan" and "purely civic in its aims."

How these innocent claims are contradicted by facts may be seen by the fact that Major General Harboard sent a message of encouragement to the meeting, while the speakers included Col. Albert E. Barnes, president of the military intelligence association of the sixth corps area; Brig-Gen. Michael Lenihan, commandant at Fort Sheridan, and Lieut. Col. William B. Graham.

The Paralyzing Preamble.

Another speaker was Harry A. Atwood, president of the constitution anniversary association, who boasted that he had challenged countless critics of the constitution to "alter one word of the preamble" and that one and all the helpless critics had failed.

Officers of the Chicago local were elected, Mrs. Sydney Leighton Smith as president and Mrs. R. L. Jordan, Mrs. A. R. Clas and Mrs. Benjamin F. Affleck as vice-presidents

Two Former French Presidents Defend Textile Employers

SAINT ETIENNE, Nov. 25.—Two former presidents of France, Raymond Poincare and Alexandre Millerand will face each in a litigation suit between two textile manufacturers over the exclusive rights to a certain pattern which they both claim belong to their looms.

Poincare will defend one manufacturer and Millerand the other. The date of the trial is kept secret.

National Income Slumps.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—Twelve and a half cents out of every dollar of the combined income of the American people during the past year went into taxes, according to a study in taxation made by the national industrial conference board. The total burden of taxes has nearly doubled since 1913 rising from 6.9 per cent in 1913 to 12.5 per cent in 1924. The national income in 1924 is estimated at $63,000,000,000 as against $65,000,000,000 in 1923.

MANY AMERICANS RECEIVE LEGION OF HONOR DECORATIONS FOR AID RENDERED FRENCH IMPERIALISM

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 25.—Recently, a list containing 2,328 names of prominent American bankers, newspapermen, journalists and government officials that have received the legion of honor decorations for services rendered French imperialism, was made public in Paris and has caused much consternation in a number of U. S. senators, who are demanding the why and wherefore of the wholesale distribution of honors.

Among the names of the 2,328 Americans on the rolls is the name of John Pierpont Morgan, and other leading lights in the financial world.

Government Heads on Lists.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover heads the list of American officials, then comes Senator Reed of Pennsylvania, Representative John Philip Gill of Maryland, A. Piatt Andrews of Massachusetts, Robert E. Olds, assistant secretary of state; William J. Donovan, assistant attorney general, and Lincoln C. Andrews, assistant secretary of the treasury.

The names of the following newspapermen are also found on the list of legiannaires:

Times Heads Honored.

Adolph S. Ochs, publisher and principal owner of the New York Times; Rollo Ogden, editor; John H. Finley, editor; Louis Wiley, business manager, and the Paris correspondent of the Times.

Associated Press.

Officials of the Associated Press on the list include Frank B. Noyes, president, principal owner of the Washington Star; Melville E. Stone, former general manager; Frederick Roy Martin, former general manager; Elmer Roberts, Paris correspondent.

New York World Heads.

Ralph Pulitzer, president of the New York World, and the late Frank I. Cobb, editor of the World; Ogden Reid, owner of the New York Herald-Tribune; Lawrence Hills, editor of the Paris edition of the Herald, and the Paris correspondent, Wilbur Foddest, are all on the list. Likewise is Frank A. Munsey, owner of the New York Sun.

Even Chicago Tribune.

Robert R. McCormick, president of the Chicago Tribune, and Floyd Gibsons, special European correspodnent of the Tribune, are both on the list. So is George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post; also Paul Scott Mowrer, Paris correspondent of the Chicago Daily News.

For Services Rendered.

These men have received these honors because of their activities on behalf of the French government and the French are repaying their aids with these honors for their services in the cause of French imperialism.

ROUMANIAN BOYAR LACKEYS MURDER PEASANTS IN GETTING "CONFESSION"

KISHENEV, Bessarabia—(By Mail.)—Thru dexterous cross-examination of the Sergeant-Mayor Socolescu, it was ascertained that the Bessarabian peasant M. Scerbaticov was murdered in a most brutal fashion at the orders of the Roumanian military leader Vindor.

Vindor ordered that the peasant Scerbaticov be stripped naked and placed into a bag with a wildcat. The Roumanian boyar lackeys then tied the bag and began beating on the bag with clubs. After a number of hours of this torture, the bag was opened. The wildcat had been killed; but the peasant was still living. They then took the peasant and placed him in a tank of hot water for several hours. The hot water opened the wounds which the claws and teeth of the wildcat and the clubs of the sigurantsi had made.

Rub Salt in Wounds.

When the hot water had opened the wounds, they then took salt and rubbed them into the wounds. The peasant was then beaten again and the process repeated until he signed a "confession" which is now being used in the trial of the 500 peasants for their part in the Tatarbounar uprising. The peasant died within a day after these tortures had been inflicted upon him.

To Be Made an Example.

Jonel Bratianu, the prime minister and dictator in Roumania during his visit to Kishinev declared that the process against the peasants must be made an example to the peasants all over the nation what can be expected if they do not follow out the wishes of those that are in power. Among other things Bratianu said: "The main accused are members of the peasant party, therefore, severe sentences must be passed in order to show to all the world that the peasants' party is a party of anarchy."

The peasants that are on trial do not expect to escape the death sentence that is to be imposed upon them unless the workers and peasants all over the world take an interest in this case and force the Bratianu government to retreat from its purpose of murdering these peasants, who rose against the terrible conditions which the Roumanian boyars placed upon them.

Bourgeois Press Fears Revolts.

The fear of the Roumanian bourgeois press that the present trial of the Bessarabian peasants may militate against the domination of Roumanian boyars over Southern Bessarabia has caused them to issue a call upon the government to halt the present military trial and to institute a civil trial to be attended by newspaper correspondents from all over the world. This is strongly advocated by the Frankfurter Zeitung in an article which contained the following declaration: "It will depend upon the fate of 500 arrested peasants of Tatarbounar whether South Bessarabia will remain the hearth of future European troubles. It is to the Prime Minister Bratianu to decide. In the interest of justice and of European peace it is urgently desirable that the proceedings against the 500 that are still in the last hour be transformed into ordinary legal proceedings at which Roumanian and foreign press correspondents may be present."

Czech Communists and Socialists Protest Against Rakosi Trial

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW—(I. R. A.)—(By Mail.)—News has arrived from Prague that the club of the Communist members of parliament has addressed to all socialist parliamentary clubs a letter in which they appeal for a protest against the bloody intentions of the Horthy hangmen. A telegram was sent by the club to Minister Benesh in Locarno asking him to join the protest.

Furthermore, the Communist club presented a resolution to the presidium of the parliament asking that the session be interrupted for five minutes as a sign of protest. Under the pressure of the Czecho-Slovakian workers, the socialist parliamentary clubs, who participate in the coalition and two oppositional socialist clubs, complied with the requests of the Communist club.

The bourgeois parties united against the passing of this proposal Tho it was defeated, the Czecho-Slovakian workers realized the import of the protest of the parliament against the Horthy hangmen.

Policeman Censured for Arresting McNider, War Department Head

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 25.—Hanford McNider, secretary of war, who was recently arrested for speeding here, was released by the judge. In dismissing the case the judge reprimanded the policeman for arresting this "honorable" citizen and told him he should not make any arrests while "off duty."

I. L. D. DEMANDS FREE SPEECH IN BELLAIRE, OHIO

Calls on Workers to Resist Klan

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BELLAIRE, Nov. 25.—The protest meeting arranged by the International Labor Defense and the American Civil Liberties Union in Bellaire was prohibited by the mayor of the city.

Refuse Permit.

Kompart, who was defeated in the last election by the candidate supported by the ku klux klan, refused to grant a permit for the meeting to the representative of the Civil Liberties Union. "There will be no meeting in this town," he said, despite the fact that the Miners' Temple had been rented and the meeting arranged.

The chamber of commerce is behind this move. On Nov. 5, the day prior to the date on which the Workers (Communist) Party of Bellaire intended to celebrate the eighth anniversary of Soviet Russia, the chamber of commerce met and decided that the Workers (Communist) Party would not be allowed to hold the meeting. The hall was closed and the meeting prohibited. The International Labor Defense and the Civil Liberties Union decided to fight the issue of free speech. They procured the Miners' Hall, and conforming to all regulations, asked for a permit which was summarily refused.

Try Frame-Up.

The mayor tried furthermore to frame-up a representative of the Civil Liberties Union. This representative had ordered some throwaways and took them from the printer. Before a single leaflet announcing the meeting was distributed, the mayor declared that one had been put under his door. This indicates quite clearly that the printer supplied the mayor's office with a copy, in order to get the representative of the Civil Liberties Union on another charge.

The weather was cold the night scheduled for the meeting and only a small number of workers appeared at the meeting hall. As the doors were closed—the officials of the hall refusing to open the hall—the workers gathered in the park opposite the hall. They decided, however, that they would not hold the meeting and dispersed.

K. K. K. Arrives Too Late.

In the meantime, the chief of police and one of his aides were at the street corner. When he spied the workers in the pak, the aide telephoned the station. One minute after the small crowd dispersed, the police patrol and two motor cars filled with ku kluxers appeared and scoured the place for the workers. At each corner in the vicinity there were stationed more ku kluxers, evidently determined to use strong-arm methods to prevent the workers from exercising their so-called "constitutional" rights of free speech and free assemblage.

Attack on Workers.

This campaign against the Workers (Communist) Party in the mining region is part of the campaign against the United Mine Workers. In West Virginia, just across the river, the miners cannot meet. Federal Judge McClintic having declared the United Mine Workers "an outlaw organization."

In Scranton, Pa., miners' meetings have been broken up by the authorities. The coal operators, assisted by the local state and federal authorities, are carrying on a vicious struggle against the miners' organization, intent on breaking it up.

The attack on the Workers (Communist) Party, the International Labor Defense and the Civil Liberties Union must be regarded by the miners as the first assault on the position of the United Mine Workers. If the miners do not rally and fight back, the authorities with their self-appointed aides, the ku kluxers, will over-run the country, and "free speech" and "free assemblage" will go aglimmering.

To Hold Protest Meeting.

The International Labor Defense intends to hold a meeting in the near future. Every miner and worker in Bellaire and the vicinity must be present at this meeting and demonstrate to the authorities and the ku klux klan that they have backbone—and that they will fight for their rights. This is a question for every miner to stand by the International Labor Defense means to fight for the right of the miners to organize and to meet.

University President Suppresses Satire on God, Joseph and Mary

BERKELEY, Cal., Nov. 25.—The Occident, the principal literary magazine of the University of California, has had its current copy suppressed because of an article entitled "Immanuel," a satirical conversation between God, Joseph and Mary, about the coming birth of Jesus. The article was considered blasphemous and the magazine suppressed by Acting President Woods, President Campbell being in the east. The editors have appealed the case to a committee of English instructors.

WAGE CUTS FOLLOW SALE OF U. S. BOATS TO SHIPPING TRUST; CUT AVERAGES 15 PCT.; REDUCE CREWS

By ART SHIELDS.

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—"This is a fine ship your company is getting from the government," said a newspaperman to the young quartermaster who was taking a party over a 21,000 ton liner on the South American run just turned over to the Muson Line by the U. S. shipping board.

"Yes," the sailor answered, "but not so fine for us any more. My wages drop $10 a month and every other member of the crew is cut at the same time."

Heavy Wage Cut.

Thousands of sailors on the high seas and the lakes are having their wages deflated an average of 15 percent by the transfer to private registry of the shipping board boats. And working conditions fall with the wages. Deck and engine rooms forces are reduced, making the pace stiffer for those who remain. The LaFollette seamen's act is enforced even worse than before. The open shop continues. Both private and government boats are non-union.

The ship we visited was unloading goat skins and coffee sacks from So. America and is one of a set of four 21,000 tonners—the Southern Cross, the American Legion, the Western World and the Pan-America—turned over to the Munson Line for $4,104,000, or considerably less than the government paid under the cost plus plan of construction.

Dollar Gets the Difference.

Robert Dollar, the other biggest shipping magnate, and noted in sailor circles for his bum chuck and low wages, is also faring generously from Uncle Sam. The government asks no questions as to the buyer's labor policy. Earlier in the year Dollar got several of the president class ships, named after former U. S. chief executives, and several smaller ships too, and today he is negotiating for five more president boats of 12,000 tons each, now chartered from the shipping board to the American-Oriental Line.

Dollar offers the government $1,000 a month rent for each of these boats, or about 8 cents a ton a month, with eventual right of purchase for $600,000 apiece. The boats run to Yokohama, Kobe and other ports, in the oriental trade which Americans mean to capture with the South American trade. If Dollar gets these boats it is expected that he will give preference wherever possible to oriental labor, for such has been his policy elsewhere.

U. S. RICH ARE GETTING RICHER

Large Incomes for Year 1924 Show Big Increase

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 25.—Wealth in the U. S. as brot out by the internal revenue bureau report on income tax returns show a picture of an ever-increasing concentration of wealth. The 1924 returns show that while incomes of $500,000 and over nearly doubled itself in comparison with 1923, the total income tax returns decreased almost six per cent.

Seventy-four incomes are over the million dollar mark. Three incomes are in excess of $5,000,000, they are assumed to belong to John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Henry Ford and Edsel Ford.

The total net income increased $183,00,000 over 1923. The incomes between $500,000 and $1,000,000 show an increase from 141 in 1923 to 242 in 1924.

While the total returns show a decrease of 5.48 per cent in the number of returns the actual income shows an increase of 3.70 per cent. The net income was over $25,000,000,000 for the year 1924.

LABOR DEFENDER, I. L. D. ORGAN, TO APPEAR SHORTLY

I. L. D. News Service.

The first issue of the Labor Defender will be off the press by the end of November. This new magazine is the official organ of the International Labor Defense and will contain illustrated articles of labor trials in the United States and thruout the world.

To Have Pictures.

The Labor Defender will use pictures liberally to tell the story of the sufferings of the most active members of the working class movement in their struggle to lead labor along the road to freedom. Those men and women are the targets for capitalist persecution.

The honest and progressive leaders of labor have always been the first to fall before the fury of the master class. It is just as true today as it was 100 years ago and it will be so until the workers finally free themselves from the tyranny of a small group of exploiters who control the machinery of government including the courts.

It is to defend the workers in their efforts to progress towards the goal of freedom for their class that the Labor Defender is issued. It will speak for those who are inside the bars and encourage them while on the other hand the workers on the outside are being organized to bring about their release.

Excellent Articles.

The first issue of the Labor Defender will carry articles and pictures of such world famous cases as the railroading of Ford and Suhr and the new persecution of Ford, recently released on parole; the story of Sacco and Vanzetti told by the revolutionary poet Ralph Chaplin; the story of the world-wide campaign to save Mathias Rakosi, people's commissar in the short-lived Soviet government of Hungary, and of the trials of Fred Merrick in Pittsburgh, the Zeigler miners, the return of Gitlow to Sing Sing and the probability that Anita Whitney may spend the Christmas holidays in San Quentin prison.

The services of the noted labor cartoonist, Fred Ellis help to make the first issue of the Labor Defender a valuable contribution to the literature of labor defense.

The Labor Defender will sell for ten cents per copy. Subscription price, $1 per year. Office of publication is at 23 South Lincoln street, Chicago, Illinois.

The Capitalist Press and Our Party

The enemies of the Communist movement are ready to seize upon every discussion within the ranks of the Communists to exaggerate them into splits and disruptions of our movement. Every discussion within the Russian Communist Party was hailed by the capitalist enemies of the Soviet Union as the beginning of the end of the workers' and peasants' republic. During the discussion of Trotskyism, the capitalist press crowned Comrade Trotsky with the imperial helmet of Napoleon and pictured him as ready to use the whiff of grape-shot thru which Bonapart came into power. Recently some imaginative correspondent has found a new factional struggle going on in Russia and has drawn inferences of the same character.

The last few days have developed something similar in the capitalist press in relation to our party. Some half-witted correspondents of the New York World heard some rumors in regard to the inner party life and dressed them up in his own fashion and palmed them off on his paper as a realistic account of what is supposed to be happening in our party. According to this story, the party is now run by a "dictator," Comrade Foster is in Moscow and Comrade Ruthenberg "is hastening there close upon his heels."

All this is, of course, nonsense.

The capitalist newspapers and their correspondents are unable to understand the inner life of a Communist Party. They judge it by the methods and practices of capitalist organizations. To them it is inconceivable that there may be sharp divisions of opinion as to tactical problems within a Communist Party, but that after a thorogoing discussion of these problems a decision is reached and that all the members of the party, irrespective of their previous viewpoints, unite to carry out the policy decided upon.

There is a bond which unites in an unbreakable unity the members of a Communist Party. That bond is common loyalty of the members of a Communist Party to the principle that the workers must organize as a class and carry on a revolutionary struggle to establish the workers' dictatorship and to overthrow the capitalist system. The bond that unites the members of a Communist Party is stronger than any division over questions of tactics and methods of achieving the end for which the party is striving.

The wish is father to the thought in the case of the capitalist prophecies of a split and disintegration of a Communist Party. That the New York World correspondent imagines Comrade Foster's leaving the Communist Party is an expression of a natural desire on the part of those who are opposed and fighting the Communist Party to have members leave the party. The New York World correspondent could write such stuff, just as other correspondents could imagine Trotsky with the imperial crown of Napoleon on his head, because they cannot conceive from their capitalist viewpoint of a group of men and women submitting to an iron discipline and subordinating their personal views, in order that they may unite to carry on the struggle against the capitalist state and the capitalist system.

The Communist International is also a mystery to the servants of capitalism. The world Communist Party is beyond their conception. That the national sections of the Communist International bear the same relation to the executive committee of the Communist International that the sections of the Communist Party of America bear to the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party is something that cannot be understood in capitalist circles. That is a Communist viewpoint. For Communists it is just as natural to have the Communist International decide a controversial question within the Workers (Communist) Party as it is for the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party to decide a controversial question in one of the districts of the party in this country. The representatives of the Workers (Communist) Party, serving in commissions of the Communist International, help to decide questions of policy for the German, French and Italian parties just as the representatives of these parties help to decide questions of policy for the Workers (Communist) Party. The capitalist reporters can only view such an action in terms of individuals, of "dictators" and others who are being "ousted," not in the terms of organization and policy.

The New York World story, which has been widely copied thruout the country, may be swallowed by the credulous readers of the capitalist press as so many red stories are swallowed, and considered as facts. But to the Communists it will merely serve as an illustration of the ignorance and mendacity of the capitalist press.

Peace Prize for Dawes

A United News dispatch from Stockholm, Sweden, states that the Norwegian parliament plans to award the Nobel peace prize to Vice-President Charles G. Dawes. Presumably because of the Morganized plan whereby the United States and Britain combined to establish "industrial stability" in Germany.

Swedish statesmen must be shortsighted indeed if they imagine the Dawes plan guarantees peace, even between the two great imperialist powers involved. Britain entered into the scheme because she hoped to stifle German industry by compelling it to bear the burden of debt payments, while the United States bankers wanted a place to invest money. Their interests are opposed in Germany, altho they co-operated in imposing the plan upon that nation. Wall Street has one motive, Britain another.

Aside from the merits or demerits of the plan, the very personality of Dawes makes ridiculous the awarding of the peace prize to him. Dawes is the personification of arrogant militarism and fascism. Like all capitalist class militarists he is exceedingly ignorant and swears a great deal. It is a known fact that those who indulge in unrestricted cursing do so because their vocabulary is so limited they cannot find other words with which to express themselves.

Still, we cannot claim it is inconsistent to award the prize to the clownish vice-president, when we recall the fact that Mr. Nobel, the founder of the prize, was a manufacturer of dynamite.

No wonder Greece was backward about going to war with Bulgaria. The workers who were voting Communist might have seized the opportunity to take all power.

The Central Executive Committee of the Russian Communist Party Meets

THE session which has just concluded of the plenum (full session) of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Russia tok place on the eve of the new economic year. For this reason the work of the plenum acquires special importance.

It is true the prospects of the new economic year now commencing are not yet sufficiently clear. The basic facts however, the good harvest which will bring with it a special advance in all our national economy, are no longer in doubt. In spite of the delay in the purchase of corn, in spite of the unusual movement in the price of cereals this year, in spite of the shortage of industrial goods and the falling off of the revenue from taxes at the beginning of the economic year, we have no reason for rejecting those calculations for the commencing economic year which are contained in the so-called control figures of the Institute of Planned Economics. The basis for our calculations will probably be quite clear by the end of December, at the time of the holding of the party congress of the R. C. P.

Developing Industry Most Important.

As regards the next tasks, all speakers were agreed that a large-scale regulation of the purchase of corn, the prevention of competition between the various buying organs is necessary. It was emphasized that one of the most important tasks of the approaching period is the necessity of developing industry. Only by increasing the industrial output will we be able to cope with the shortage of goods and to induce the peasantry to sell their grain. Special emphasis was likewise laid upon the responsible role which the co-operatives are called upon to play. The co-operatives must, in view of the prevailing shortage of goods, become the chief sources for supplying the villages with industrial products. This must be done by means of reasonable prices and without that speculative raising of prices which private capital practices under the present relations of supply and demand.

Developing Foreign Trade.

BASED upon our economic revival, foreign trade is gaining greater importance every year. Upon the development of foreign trade depends the further extension of agriculture, as well as the development of industry, as a portion of the surplus of agricultural production can only be placed upon the foreign markets, and industry requires the import of plant and machinery, raw materials, etc. In the course of the current economic year the turnover of our foreign trade will show a considerable increase as a result of the good harvest. After the acceptance of the report of the central control commission on the organizing of foreign trade, the plenum recorded the fact that the monopoly of foreign trade had produced magnificent results and must remain in the future one of the inflexible principles of the Soviet state. At the same time there was emphasized the necessity of a greater elasticity and a greater specializing of the apparatus of foreign trade, a closer connection between this apparatus and the inland economic organizations.

Trade Unions Grow Stronger.

With the growth of our industry and the increase of the number of workers the importance of the trade unions will become continually greater. The central committee of the plenum records an indisputable strengthening of the trade unions, which finds expression in the increase of the number of members and in the development of numerous branches of work among the masses (clubs, relief funds, physical culture, etc.), but also in the improvement of the trade union apparatus. The plenum declares, however, that now, as a result of the higher economic and cultural level of the masses, the bureaucratism which has not yet been entirely overcome in the trade unions, and their "administrative" and "economic" shortcomings, as well as the insufficiently deep and all-around connection of the trade unions with the masses, are making themselves felt more acutely than ever. Meanwhile, the trade unions must especially now, when the activity of the masses not only in the towns but also in the villages is growing, when we are setting ourselves the task of developing Soviet democracy, carry out their chief slogan: "into the masses" and become real organs of workers' democracy.

A RUTTLESS fight must be conducted against the methods of excessive administration, of direct interference by the party organizations in the current work of the trade unions (questions of conditions of work, of wages, and of collective agreements). The exercise of the leading role of the party in trade union work must be much more elastic. The trade unions must devote far greater attention to the fulfillment of their chief task, the protection of the economic interests and the raising of the level of culture of the working masses. The trade unions must do still more for the development of the activity of the masses. They must do everything in order that every non-party worker shall regard the trade union as his organization, an organization whose duty it is to furnish him with reports and which he can control. Only under these conditions can the trade unions fulfill their function as "schools of Communism."

Raising Wages Next Task.

One of the most important questions for our party is the question of raising the standard of living of the working class. The plenum declares that the revival of industrial and agricultural production offers the possibility of taking a further step in raising wages, of course, only so far as our economic possibilities permit and in accordance with the increase of the productivity of labor. The party must devote special attention to improving the position of the transport workers and of the workers in heavy industry, as well as in other branches of production in which wages are on a relatively low level.

There is hardly a single meeting of our party at which the question of the relations of the party to the peasantry is not raised in one form or another. The XIV party conference which took place a few months ago adopted a number of decisions which assure the development of peasant economy and the strengthening of the alliance of the proletariat with the middle peasants, and adopted various measures for supporting and organizing the village poor. The improvement of the relations between the proletariat and the peasantry, the growing confidence of the peasantry in the Soviet power and in our party, the fact that the best elements of the village poor and of the village peasants are rallying to our party—all this proves the correctness of the line laid down by the XIV party conference, all this proves that the party is following the correct path and that it must continue to follow this path.

THIS year's good harvest, the increase in the means at the disposal of the proletarian state, and at the same time the increasing differentation in the village which is partly promoted by the good harvest, has induced the central committee to undertake a number of further practical steps to support the village poor. Without losing sight of the central task of strengthening the alliance of the proletariat with the middle peasantry, the party is at present adopting various practical measures in order, upon the basis of the decisions of the XIV conference, to render it possible for the village poor to participate practically in the co-operatives and to support their undertakings, on the basis of the decisions of the XIII party conference, by granting cheap credits. On the other hand the increase in the activity of all sections of the peasantry and the development of Soviet democracy in the village has caused the party to devote greater attention to consolidating the organised influence of the village poor in the co-operatives, at the elections of village Soviets, in the relief committees etc. The increasing activity of the big peasants, their attempt to create a united front with the middle peasants, must be opposed by our party organizations by establishing organizations of the village poor and creating a bloc between the village poor and the middle peasants.

Soviet Democracy.

BOTH the trade union question and the question of the organizing of the village poor are links in the chain of development of Soviet democracy. One of the fundamental conditions for realizing Soviet democracy, however, is the strengthening of inner party democracy. One cannot combat bureaucratism in the Soviets and in the trade unions, if the bureaucratic degenerations in the party organizations which conduct the work of the trade unions and of the Soviets are not overcome. The plenum of the central committee has therefore decided to issue an appeal to all party organizations, and to call upon them to build their entire work upon the basis of the principles of inner party democracy laid down by the party. The XV party conference which meets in December, must be prepared in the spirit of these principles of party democracy and of the Leninist unity of the party. The party conference must be preceeded by a careful discussion in the various party organizations of all the questions placed on the agenda, and the elections must be carried out in such a manner that the congress constitutes the most exact and complete reflection of the views and the mood of the entire party.

Reality of Strike Dawns on Coal Miners

had a splendid effect in that it has embittered the strikers and shaken the confidence which some elements among them had of the good intentions of many of their self-appointed friends.

One of the local papers states:

> . . . . . . the lines have hardened and the deadlock remains unchanged. Headlines carrying promise of early peace in the industry have not been borne out. Their promises have not and cannot be fulfilled. The truth must be faced. The region confronts a most serious situation.

The above sentiments are in striking contrast to the optimism which has characterized the local anthracite press till now.

No Picnic, After All.

Among the miners there is also a feeling that they are in for a desperate struggle. At district headquarters the statement has been made that relief machinery is being set up and that it will begin to function during the week. This is a complete reversal of the official policy which has been to poohpooh the necessity for any action savoring of acknowledgement of a real strike situation.

As in Scranton, the need for preparation for a fight of the union is seen in the increasing attendance at local union meetings, now held regularly.

Local 289 is an example of this. With a membership of 1,500 the usual attendance has been about 50 or 60. At the last meeting more than 300 were present. A resolution calling for a broadening of the strike was introduced. It was discussed, no one spoke against it, but it was neither defeated or passed, the excuse being that if sent to the officials they would pay no attention to it anyway. Since the meeting, however, the resolution has been discussed among many of the members and their opinion is now that it should be passed and sent to the press and other local unions.

In Delicate Position.

The sentiment against Cappelini is quite strong here. It is so strong in fact that the progressive elements among the strikers are in a delicate position. So flagrant have been some of Cappelini's actions that they have resulted in weakenng the morale of some of the strkers. Local 532, for instance, paid out its whole treasury for relief and Cappelini, according to miners, sent the local officers a letter threatening them with prosecution for embezzlement. Following this some sentiment for a return to work developed among the more backward elements of the local.

In a situation of this kind the progressive elements have to conduct their agitation for a militant strike with great care in order not to make Cappellini the main issue and strengthen the less conscious workers in their desire to end the strike.

Complications.

The situation is complicated for the left wing by the fact that as one miner stated openly, "All the washeries in the valley are working." Some of the miners reason that if others get permission to work there is no reason why they should work as well. Washery Number 14, owned by Judge Maxey, before whom the case of Brennan versus Cappellini arising out of the last district election, will come, is especially odious because it is, according to the strikers, a clear instance of Cappellini catering to the economic interests of Maxey in order to get the ear of the court.

ANOTHER RUMOR THAT NEGOTIATIONS ARE TO BEGIN IN ANTHRACITE

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 25.—Significant developments today in the anthracite coal miners' strike situation indicate that negotiations probably will be resumed between the operators and miners, according to several coal men here.

Major W. W. Inglis, chairman of the anthracite operators' scale committee, has been summoned to Harrisburg to confer with Governor Gifford Pinchot on the strike problem late this afternoon.

A mine near Keystone is also working—that is, coal is being run thru the breaker and eight big trucks are busy hauling coal all day long. The pretext for this violation of the strike rules in favor of a mine owned by a mine inspector, is that the coal is needed for a school. But the strikers, who check up on every detail of these transactions with a scrutiny of the most painstaking kind imaginable, have noted that the coal selling agency with which the mine inspector is connected, has lately had no difficulty in supplying its customers.

Incidents of this kind could be enumerated almost endlessly.

Officials Petty Graft.

They are apparently sources of cheap graft to some of the officials, they are destructive of strike morale, causing interminable bickering, dission and distrust, but actually have little effect on the strike situation as a whole. As a rule only small companies and independent operators are involved in these deals.

The big concerns are idle except for the maintenance men, but the amount of new work being done and the repairs made are of an extensive character. At the Paines mine the superintendent claimed that only 40 men were on the payroll but an investigation by the strike committee disclosed 97. At the Loomis, Woodward and Truesdale mines, scab ironworkers are putting up huge structures without a word of protest from the district officials.

Protests come from the local unions the men may be pulled off for a short time but in a day or so the washery or breaker or new construction work is again going. A member of the general assembly of the union in this section is the authority for the above statements.

Reorganize Left Wing.

The most hopeful development of the strike is the reorganization of the left wing forces. Perhaps reorganization is too strong a word for what is actually taking place since the onslaught of the union officials co-operating with the local authorities and the department of justice upon left wing miners' meetings which culminated in the arrest of Reid and Toohey and their being railroaded on a "vagrancy" charge.

The progressive groups are recovering from their defeat and recent developments, notably the proposal for a five-year contract with a no-strike clause, the unyielding attitude of the anthracite operators, the disruption of the union and the violation of the Jacksonville agreement in the soft coal fields, which Lewis has now admitted, are giving them a solid basis for their work in building up strike morale, waging a militant struggle for the preservation of the union and preparing the ground for a general strike in the industry as an answer to the combination of operators, Wall Street banks and the government, with which the union is faced.

The most advanced section of the progressive miners understand that the history of the strike struggle is so setting the stage that upon the activity of the militants depends the life of the union in the anthracite and probably in the soft coal fields as well.

At present the miners are wondering what is going on behind the scenes but of one thing they are certain, and of which many of them were not certain heretofore:

That the main line of the strategy of the operators is to smash the union.

Slipped a Cog.

Most of them (that is the miners with whom I talked and whom I judged as representatives of the most active strikers) are of the opinion that a cog has slipped somewhere in the relations between Lewis and Coolidge. Most of them are inclined to the belief that Lewis, because of his support of Coolidge, had been promised some aid which would serve to boost his prestige in labor circles without hurting the operators; that Coolidge had agreed to not interfere in the strike and to persuade the coal barons to grant some minor concessions. The opinion now is that Coolidge has handed Lewis the doublecross, that the operators are detrmined to starve the miners out and that nothing but pulling out the maintenance men will alter this attitude.

Pulling out the maintenance men will bring either a settlement or war. The left wing is getting ready to forestall a bad settlement and to wage a winning war by rallying the mass strength of the whole union if the operators decide on open warfare.

"I Got Your Letter," Says "Cal" to Lewis

tionists that labor must obey all capitalist laws, or, if not, labor would have to be Bolsheviks who strike regardless of capitalist laws.

Green and Morrison were both summoned to conference with Coolidge before the laconic "reply" to Lewis was written, and when they emerged from the conference they both refused to discuss what was said, but Green would not deny that the Lewis hint of a general coal strike had been discussed.

Don't Take John Seriously.

Government officials close to Coolidge say he does not take Lewis' "threat" very seriously, since he is confident that the coal operators' association have, in conjunction with the Lewis machine in the union and often with its assistance, allowed union territory to be lost to non-union conditions and non-union fields to remain unorganized.

This has gone on to such an extent that Coolidge administration officials openly boast that Lewis does not scare anyone, because over 65 per cent of the soft coal output is mined by non-union miners, producing 8,000,000 tons a week, and that if the union calls a strike and does not get the non-union miners out also, the non-union mines would be able to handle the rock-bottom demand of industry and home consumption of soft coal.

So the government attitude is that if Lewis has complaints of violations of contract, let him go into the capitalist courts for redress, where the complaints will gather dust and mold for a dozen years while the miners' union is being smashed.

Automobile Merger.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.— Clarence Dillon, of the banking firm of Dillon, Read & Co., bankers for the Dodge Brothers Motor company, confirmed today the reported purchase of Graham Brothers Truck Manufacturing company by the Dodge concern, for cash.

Roy A. Graham, secretary of Graham Brothers, becomes general manager of Dodge Brothers. Joe E. Graham, and Robert C. Graham, of Graham Brothers will become directors of the Dodge concern.

"Close" Booze Dens.

Federal Judge Adam C. Cliffe of Chicago granted seventeen permanent and sixteen temporary liquor injunctions in the drive to "close" booze dens.

The injunctions included a "permanent" one against Edward Zine, owner of the Silver Leaf Inn at Lyons, who was killed outside his home last week after attending the funeral of one of the Genna gang.

"Ma" Ferguson Fears Impeachment Moves

(Special to The Daily Worker)

AUSTIN, Texas, Nov. 25.— Thirty-two names have been affixed to two petitions by legislators of Texas who demand that a special session be called by the governor or the speaker of the house.

Petition in Special Session.

In one petition addressed to Gov. "Ma" Ferguson, the legislators demand a special session to amend the highway act. In the other petition addressed to the speaker of the house, Lee Satterwhite, it calls upon him to convene a special session for the purpose of impeaching the state highway commission for the "misuse" of public funds.

Hand Out Juicy Plums.

Tho "Ma" Ferguson was elected governor, her husband is the real governor. During her administration millions of dollars worth of contracts have been let to contractors, who instead of submitting the lowest bid, submitted the highest bids and favors in the forms of well-padded contracts have been handed out to those who are line with the Ferguson gang.

Fear Impeachment.

The legislators insist upon a special session being called. If "Ma" Ferguson does not call a special session, fearing impeachment charges, the speaker will call a session and impeachment charges will be made.

Blames Klan Not Graft.

AUSTIN, Texas, Nov. 25.—Breaking her silence for the first time since she announced the resignation Monday of two of her appointees on the state highway commission, Gov. "Ma" Ferguson stated the demand for a special session of the Texas legislature to investigate rumors of graft in highway matters was a "move by the ku klux klan to discredit her administration."

Bandits Raid Town.

CASSOPOLIS, Mich., Nov. 25—Five bandits, who invaded Cassopolis in the early morning hours, held possession of the town three hours, firing scores of shots and terrorizing citizens while they attempted to blow the vault of the First National Bank.

To Amend Constitution.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—An attempt is to be made by United States Senator Wadsworth and other "wet" republicans to amend the constitution and the Volstead act to allo wevery state the right to decide whether alcoholic beverages are to be sold within its boundaries.

Badly Hurt In Accident.

DANVILLE, Ill., Nov. 25.—With 37 wounds, all on the left side of her face and neck, which required 72 surgical stitches, Rosalie Woodrom aged four of Georgetown holds a new record at local hospitals. The wounds were sustained in an automobile accident.

Virgin Islands Editor Appeals Court Verdict

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—The appeal of Rothschild Francis of the Virgin Islands from his conviction for criminal libel and contempt of court will be heard before the United States court of appeals at Philadelphia early in January. Francis was convicted by a local judge who was his political enemy and who tried the case without a jury. The appeal will be argued by A. A. Berle, Jr., of New York. David Wallerstein of Philadelphia, appears on the brief with Mr. Berle and will assist in the case.

It is expected that the decision in the case will largely determine the rights of natives in relation to the United States naval administration of the islands, against which a constant agitation has been conducted by native leaders. Francis is a member of the colonial council, editor of the Emancipator and president of the American Federation of Labor Union at St. Thomas.

"Goodbye God"

DANVILLE, Ill., Nov. 25.—The Rev. William A. Shelley, cowboy, rodeo winner in Chico, Cal., Boise, Ida., and Miles City, Mont., has resigned from the pulpit of the first church of Christ here.

He explained that he might say "Goodbye to god and go to Florida," he is said to be contemplating entering the real estate business.

UNMASK LEADER OF ANTHRACITE BARONS

COMMUNISTS LAUNCH OPPOSITION ATTACK AS GERMAN REICHSTAG RATIFIES THE LOCARNO PACTS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN, Germany, Nov. 27.—Chancellor Luther and Foreign Minister Stresemann, who recently became the mercenaries of British imperialism, succeeded in securing the approval of the Locarno pacts by the reichstag.

The section of the bill covering the pacts was passed by a vote of 271 to 159 at the second reading yesterday and today was passed after the third and final reading. An enabling bill was also passed providing for the German signature to the Locarno pacts. The pacts will be signed in London December 1.

The ratification of the Locarno treaties closes one chapter of one of the bittterest political struggles since the creation of the German republic. The open and brazen submerging of the independent interests of the German nation to the imperialist aims of England drew fire from the nationalists who still hold to the old traditions of Germany before the war from the small business classes and professionals around the fascists fho see themselves crushed and tehir interetsts submerged in the general servility to Britain, and from the revolutionists, the Communists.

Unquestionably the signing of the pacts will increase tremendously the power of the Communists as the horrors of the world war are still fresh in the memories of the masses and they resent being made cannon fodder in the imperialist struggles of Britain.

Having steadily gained in strength the past few months and tremendously increased their prestige by the successes in the last municipal elections, the Communists have become the most important political factor in the republic, even tho they are a minority. The facts of history have brot them to the fore and the nation is confronted with the alternative of bowing to the yoke of Britain or initiating the proletarian revolution.

Clara Zetkin Acclaimed.

With her hair snow white, the signs of age showing plainly in her face, and limping to the speaker's desk upon crutches, Clara Zetkin, the famous German Communist made a dramatic appearance in the reichstag today and launched a bitter protest against the Locarno treaties.

"Soviet Russia is sufficiently strong in power and does not need an old woman to represent her," said Clara Zetkin denying that she represents the Soviets in the reichstag.

"I have come from Russia to give my waning strength to the cause of the laboring classes, who are suffering under the yoke of the Dawes plan.

"The Locarno pacts are the bargain of the western powers in which Germany is merely a pawn."

From the reichstag, at the close of the session, Clara Zetkin proceeded to the Lustgarten where a gigantic mass meeting of Communists is now in session. The announcements of the meeting were distributed thruout all Berlin and environs and the arrival of Clara Zetkin from Moscow is viewed here as the first gun in a campaign that will bring the Communist program before the whole nation in this critical period. The other political groups are frankly terror-stricken at the sudden turn toward the revolu-

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE Belgian government is considering taking steps leading towards recognition of Soviet Russia. It's almost time but it is never too late to mend. Perhaps the Belgian politicians did not think it advisable to recognize the workers' republic until they had settled the debt question with the Wall Street government on favorable terms. The Belgian oil interests however, have warned the government that before full diplomatic relations are entered into with Russia, the oil men's interests must be considered. Belgium will recognize Soviet Russia before long. Nothing succeeds like success.

IN England a poor man was charged with murder and sentenced to death after a trial lasting four minutes. This news tickled the risibles of Arthur Brisbane, chief writer for William Randolph Hearst and one of the most highly paid penmen in the world. Arthur claims that speedy hangings reduce crime. Arthur has at various times opposed capital punishment, just now he happens to favor it. Like the fiction regarding free speech in England there is a general belief here in the United States that there is less capital crime in England than in the United States. Perhaps, but if one is to judge by the English papers, it seems that outside of horse racing, the other key industry in England is murder.

OUR smug and complacent scribblers who howl for the blood of the bandits who shoot to kill in order to get money quickly are quite unmoved by the slaughter that takes place in the nation's industries every year. And those killings are avoidable. But safety devices cost money and the daughters of our plutocrats must have dollars to spend at the watering places of Europe while they amuse themselves playing with the broken down kings and dukes of the old world. Before society can even begin to eliminate murder it must hang the capitalist system, the main cause of crime.

ZEIGLER MINERS TRIAL OPENS AT BENTON MONDAY

Farrington Machine Frames Militants

BY MAX SHACHTMAN

(By I. L. D. Press Service.)

ZEIGLER, Ill., Nov. 27.—Twenty union miners in Zeigler face from one to fourteen years in the state penitentiary for the crime of having militantly fought against the combined forces of the Farrington machine, the coal operators, and the ku klux klan.

Their trial, which opens Monday at the county seat in Benton, is based on one of the flimsiest and most brazen frame-ups known in the history of the labor movement.

The defendants, headed by Henry and Frank Corbishly, and Matt Crnoevich, are well known thruout the entire United Mine Workers' district as militant fighters for the needs and interests of the coal diggers. For years they have carried on a courageous struggle against the powerful Bell and Zoller mine company on the one hand and against the Farrington-Lewis machine and their treasonable policies on the other, with a consistent fight against ku klux klanism in between.

Farrington Frame-up.

The struggle has centered around the right of the 1300 members of the Zeigler local of the union, 992, to elect its own officers and to elect them legally. For the past six years every local election has been stolen or destroyed by the Farrington machine and its tools. Special organizers, among them the notorious William Hogan and "Lige" Walker, have been here doing nothing but drawing their pay and disrupting the union. In April of this year, Henry Corbishly was elected president at a special election held under the supervision of four international board members. In the regular annual election which followed in June, Corbishly and all of his associates were returned by an average vote of five to one, with the klan candidates completely routed.

Always on the lookout for the miners' interests, the local's executive committee was instrumental in putting an assistant check weighman into the mine to see to it that the miners were not cheated by the company mine manager who saw to it that the cars were moved over the weighing scales so rapidly that it was very difficult for one checkweighman to keep track of them. Frustrated in its attempt to

They adopted a resolution declaring their solidarity with the workers of Japan and China in the struggle against "international imperialism."

Among those extending greetings from other countries was William Z. Foster, who spoke on behalf of the United States.

BRITISH LABOR MAKES FASCIST CHIEF BACK UP

Mussolini Will Not Visit England

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 27.—Mussolini, fascist dictator of Italy, has changed his mind about visiting England to sign the Locarno treaties in the British foreign office next Monday:

Benito has changed his mind because he was given to understand that British unionists were planning to refuse to run trains on which he would have to ride, to serve him with food and to surround him on all sides with mass demonstrations of angry workers.

Instead of Mussolini, the treaties will be signed by a nobody in particular, named Sciaoloja, acting as Musso's agent. Foreign Ministers Stresemann and Vandervelde will sign for Germany and Belgium, and Briand will sign for France—providing France has not removed him as foreign minister by Monday.

The British government notified Mussolini in a polite way that while the government would guard him well, and see that he was not physically mobbed, the British government could not guarantee that British labor would not "insult" the Italian dictator, as British labor is greatly indignant at Mussolini's suppression of the trade union movement of Italy.

CHANG'S ARMY CRUMBLES AS MUTINY GROWS

Feng's Troops Arrive at China's Capital

SHANGHAI, China, Nov. 27.—News of continuous defeats of Chang Tso-Lin's "loyal" troops by mutineers overshadows all else in the news from the scene of battles in the north. Even the report that the old provisional president, Tuan Chi jui has resigned, packed his baggage and ordered a special train to take him to Tientsin, is less important than the mutiny in Chang's armies.

Kuo-Hung-lin, formerly a commander of one of Chang's armies, is leading the widespread mfutiny, marching north to Mukden and sweeping all before him. General Chi Chin-chun, another of Chang's divisional commanders, has surrendered with his whole division, resulting in the taking of the city of Chin Wangtao by mutineers under Kuo.

Chang in Desperate Fix.

Chang Tso-lin at Mukden has only 10,000 troops at that point, his headquarters and base of operation. Chang has called for picked troops, mostly cadets, and ordered them to hold the city "to the death."

White guard Russian monarchis refugees, enlisted by Chang, are being rushed to Mukden to aid this imperialist hireling who seems to be in grave danger of complete overthrowal, altho his death, reported Wednesday, seems unconfirmed.

Feng's Troops in Peking.

Feng Yu-hsiang's troops are already arriving in Peking, and this fact indicates that Feng himself will follow. Chang's elimination as a power at Peking is clearly certain. Two cabinet ministers favorable to him have resigned, but their resignations were not accepted. Honan troops are advancing from the southwest.

Li Ching-lin, governor of the province of Chilhi, has declared that province is "neutral." He was previously an active partisan of Chang Tso-lin.

JOHN HAYS HAMMOND, HEAD OF U.S. COAL COMMISSION, SHOWN UP AS BOSS OF LABOR SPIES

By ART SHIELDS.

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Governor Pinchot's key position in the anthracite strike is brought out in the demands of the enemies of the miners' union that he call a special session of the Pennsylvania legislature for the purpose of repealing the miners' certificate law.

This statute disqualifies any one from doing the skilled work of a regular anthracite miner who has not served two years as a helper in the same field.

The law was passed as a safety measure but it serves the secondary purpose of saving the hard coal men from outside scabs, as long as it is enforced. Hence the drive against the law. The propaganda for repeal was begun by John Hays Hammond, chairman of the U. S. coal commission at a civic federation meeting in New York earlier in the strike and has been carried on by the Wall Street Journal, most outspoken organ for big money. Repeal the law to break the strike, is the demand.

Wants Scabs and Says So.

Hammond's speech at the civic federation minced no strikebreaking words. "The effect of this law (the state certification law)," said he, "together with the complete unionization of the mines, gives the United Mine Workers virtually a monopoly of the miners' labor. The law makes it impossible for other miners to be employed, notwithstanding the fact that they have had many years experience in bituminous mines and are fully competant to do the work of the anthracite miner.

"There are many competant miners in the bituminous fields, who, owing to the irregularity of operations, would gladly seek employment in the anthracite mines. . . The first step, therefore, to insure resumption of mining operations is action by the commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

Mining engineers have repeatedly shown that the technical problems in the anthracite fields are different from those in the soft coal pits and that a bituminous miner may be a source of danger to himself and others if he tries to direct operations at a hard coal face without special training, but Hammond ignores this in this eagerness to break the strike.

Boasts of Using Gunmen and Dicks

Hammond has been breaking strikes for more than a generation. And using Pinkertons to send workers to the penitentiary. He tells of such exploits in the February 1925 issue of Scribners' Magazine in an article entitled Strong Men of the Wild West. The "strong man" he lauds most is Charles A. Siringo, a Pingerton detective and gunmen he employed against the Western Federation of Miners in the Coeur d'Alene strike of 1892 when Hammond was president of the huge Bunker Hill & Sullivan mine, still the largest silverlead producer in the world.

He tells how his Pinkerton went to work at Gem, Idaho, became recording secretary of the union, mailing regular reports against his fellows to the mine owners' association. How the union suspected Siringo and the dick barely escaped with his life.

Siringo continued his stooling under difficulties, on one occasion using a note book under a sidewalk while a miners' posse was looking for him. Later he took part in the armed war between the company's rifle men—armed strikebreakers Hammond had imported—and the unionists, and at the trial of several union leaders his testimony sent them to the penitentiary.

Not Above It—Maybe Below It.

All this suggests that Hammond, as chairman on the U. S. coal commission of the Coolidge administration and old Wall Street man himself, would not be above using private detectives and provocateurs in the union today. But he is not talking of that. He asks the repeal of the certification law so that the anthracite union strike may be scabbed out.

SENTENCE 12 COMMUNISTS TO PRISON

Refuse to Leave Party as Price of Freedom

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Nov. 27—Five of the twelve leading members of the British Communist Party, were sentenced Wednesday by Justice Swift to one year's imprisonment "in the second division"—which means imprisonment but not at labor as a convict—while the other seven were sentenced to six months of such imprisonment.

The judge in sentencing the men elicited one of the finest examples of Communist unity and spirit when he declared that he would lay the one year sentence only against the five who have been previously convicted of "offenses" against the capitalist system.

"I Will Not."

To the other seven he said he was "anxious to avoid sending them to prison" and that he would release on their own word any who would promise to have nothing to do with the Communist Party. He then asked each one of the seven if they would so promise.

In each case the reply was: "I will not!"

The five getting the year's sentence are as follows:

Albert Samuel, Inkpin, age 41, secretary of the Communist Party of Great Britain.

Walter Hannington, age 30, machinist.

Harry Pollitt, age 34, boilermaker.

William Gallagher, a brass finisher.

William Charles Rust, age 22, secretary of the Young Communist League of Great Britain.

The seven who were sentenced to six months' imprisonment are as follows:

John Thomas Murphy, age 36, machinist.

Robert Page Arnott, age 36, journalist and director of the labor research department.

Arthur McManus, age 35, machinist.

Thomas Henry Wintringham, age 27, assistant editor of the Workers' Weekly, official organ of the Communist Party.

John Ross Campbell, age 30, editor of the Workers' Weekly.

Ernest Walter Cant, age 33, clerk.

LATIN-AMERICA RESENTS WALL STREET RULE

Anti-ImperialistLeague Ranks Increase

That opposition to Wall Street is crystallizing on an unprecedented scale thruout the American continent, is plainly indicated in the organization, reported today, of two new sections of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League—one in Colombia and one in Ecuador, Juan de Dios Romero, well-known leader of the Colombian workers and editor of the weekly, El Socialista, is secretary of the Colombian section. According to reliable information from Bogota, Romero has the support of practically all the labor organizations of the capital city, as well as the Columbian students' guild.

Regarding the establishment of the Colombian section, Manuel Gomez, secretary of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, declares that the movement in Colombia against American imperialist domination dates from 1903, when President Roosevelt carried out his brazen sequestration of Panama, formerly a province of Colombia. More recently, the maneuvers of American oil magnates in Colombia, notably the Standard Oil Co., have aroused all sections of the population against the steadily increasing menace of American imperialism.

Cuban Section Active.

The recently organized Cuban section of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, is carrying on a systematic campaign for the repeal of the malodorous "Platt amendment." The Cuban section is now supported by the Havana Labor Federation, the Federation of University Students (with the fortnightly organ, Juventud), the trade unions of Egla and Guanabacoa, and the resident group of the Chinese Kuomintang party. There are regular sub-sections in Havana and Camaguey.

American imperialism has been showing its teeth in Cuba with particular savagery. Largely thru the influence of Gen. Enoch R. Crowder, American ambassador in Cuba, considerable numbers of "anti-American" workers—some of them native Cubans—have been deported from the country, while many more have been put behind prison bars.

Hold Demonstration.

Such persecution only helps to give impulse to the liberating work of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League in Cuba. At the big mass meeting of the league in Mars Field, more than 10,000 people were present.

Reports from Mexico and Porto Rico indicate that there too the work of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League is taking on impetus. In the United States, the league is redoubling its activity. It is establishing local sub-sections, arranging meetings and conferences, publishing a regular news service, etc. Activity is now concentrated in the campaign for Philippine independence, in which full co-operation is being established with the powerful national independence movement in the Philippine Islands.

Form American Section.

Officials of the league declare that the big problem in this country is to convince the American working class that its interests demand unconditional support of all the national liberation movements against Wall Street, and at the same time to draw the Latin-Americans and Filipinos into closer association with the American workers. The American section of the league has received the full support of the Workers (Communist) Party.

Take Wine Cellar.

BATH, N. Y., Nov. 27.—Following the seizure from his cellars of $90,000 worth of champagne, wine and brandy, Charles Wheeler, proprietor of a government bonded winery at Gibson's Landing, said he would file a protest with the federal authorities at Washington. The raiding party seized the vintages and immediately dumped them into Keuka Lake. The customary practice of holding the beverages for "anlysis" was ignored.

ian mind, which is several degrees below that of the much-abused moron. The editorial starts by praising the gods for thanksgiving day, with its "anticipated delight of sniffing roasted turkey and steaming pumpkin pie, chewing cracked nuts and gulping home brew." Get that from our law and order fiend!

LATER on the imbecile boasts of the Americans "who at all times were ready to fight under freedom's flag, and culminating in our entering the world war to perpetuate and spread freedom thruout the world." If this person's mind were capable of receiving impressions, other than from a bottle, I would suggest that he see "What Price Glory?" Not satisfied with making the world so much more unbearable by the chunks of offal quoted above, he continues: "American: It means heaven thruout the world. A bulwark of freedom, a heaven of rest and safety to the oppressed of the earth, a land of sunshine and opportunity for all creeds and conditions of men, a history of accomplishment and glory and unselfishness."

TO attempt refutation of this twaddle would be to offer insult to the readers of The DAILY WORKER. The quotations are given, frankly for the purpose of exciting those who happen to read this, to a fury against a system that breads such sychophants as the author of the ill-smelling editorial. Go ahead babbits and gulp your home brew even tho you violate the eighteenth amendment! You are the kind that pay your dollars to join the Loyal Order of the Moose; the K. K. K., who enjoy baiting radicals because you are told they are not loyal to the government!

THE French government suffered wreckage when Andrew Mellon failed to give Wall Street the high sign for a new French loan. Or perhaps Wall Street did the signalling! Washington and Wall Street are one and the same and never more so than now. There is considerable speculation whether the parliamentary form of government can exist in France much longer. The big industrialists are talking of a fascist dictatorship, because they fear a workers' dictatorship. If it happens that France's present troubles weaken the governing powers sufficiently to produce panic and chaos a dictatorship is inevitable and another example of blessed capitalist democracy will have gone by the board.

Irish Free State and Ulster Preparing for Boundary Dispute War

DUBLIN, Nov. 27.—The Irish Free state is tense today, following the failure of President Cosgrave to come to any agreement with Premier Baldwin of Great Britain, relative to the dispute over the Ulster border.

Numerous reports are being circulated, one of them being to the effect that armed men are being mobilized in Ulster to take over the territory awarded to Ulster under the terms of the boundary commission.

There are also unconfirmed reports that the free state is prepared to send forces to the border.

BRITISH CROWN LAYS PLANS FOR TREASON TRIAL

To Follow Conviction at "Old Bailey"

acy to utter seditious libel; conspiracy to incite mutiny, and conspiracy to seduce soldiers and sailors from their "duty."

The attorney general in his closing argument for the crown, said that it did not matter where the prisoners got money from, whether from Soviet Russia or from other sources. What mattered was what they did. He declared that the Young Communist League "reeked with sedition" and stood for "disruption and breaking up of the armed forces of the state by the creation of revolutionary organizations in the army and navy."

Low Motives of Capitalism Don't Matter.

Judge Swift in stating the position of the court toward the open charge that the case was one of one political party trying to exterminate another, said that this had no bearing on the case, for if the defendants were guilty the motives of the prosecutor did not matter, even if they were low motives.

With Justice Swift in control, the Communist prisoners got also a taste of "swift justice" from the jury, who clearly gave no time for deliberation. Altho three counts were charged against twelve prisoners, making thirty-six cases in all to consider separately, the jury was out only twenty minutes.

Hold Out Evidence.

LONDON, (By Mail)—All the evidence which Scotland Yard was able to gather thru its raids on the headquarters of the British Communist Party and the Young Communist League, and thru pilfering the mail of the arrested defendants will not be used in the trial of the twelve Communists who are now on trial under the incitement to mutiny act of 1797.

In the presentation of the charges to the court, after the prosecutor and the court and a number of Scotland Yard detectives had gone over it, they put the Communists on trial not for "seditious conspiracy" but have charged them with "conspiring to publist seditious libels." This action of the court restricts the testimony to having the defendants prove that they did not conspire to write certain articles and statements.

Plan Second Trial.

These lawyers, that represent the crown, intend thru this method to get a conviction of the Communists on this act and then to prosecute them under the defense of the realm act and have them convicted of treason. The prosecution is attempting to make it appear that the Communist Party is an illegal organization and the crown attorney is presenting evidence to show that the British Communist Party is a section of the Communist International and that the British Communists thru their connections with the Communist International want to overthrow the British government and establish a Soviet republic and then to become a part of the Soviet Russia.

The crown defender also is introducing evidence claiming that at the "secret" conference of the Communist Party in Caxton Hall, Manchester, that the following program was adopted by the defendants which the crown objects to as being highly seditious:

Communist Program.

"Nationalization of land, mines, railways, communication, transport, engineering, shipping, cotton and woolen industries and the banks without compensation; disarming of the bourgeois, the arming of the proletariat, and the creation of a proletarian army, navy and civil guard; abolition of capitalist law courts and the establishment of workers' tribunals; state monopoly of foreign trade and of the press; annulment of state debts, with an allowance to small investors; confiscation of all fortunes over £5,000 ;nationalization of all property except that owned by small tenants, and rents to be paid to the state; abolliton of the monarchy and all hereditary titles; liberation of the colonies held in military and political subjection; repudiation of the Versailles treaty and the canceling of war debts and reparations; universal simultaneous disarmament."

Pollitt Pays Charges.

Harry Pollitt, who is a member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, declared in an answer to the crown attorney's charge that the Communists had conspired in an illegal organization to overthrow the British crown before the jury at the Old Bailey:

"Our views may be repulsive, they may be distasteful, totally wrong, but they are our views and we have the same right to repeat them as the people opposed to us. . . The Communist Party is a perfectly legal political party which has been pursuing more or less the even tenor of its way since 1920."

He showed that no secret channels, or secret methods were used and that the party was a legal organization having a membership of over 5,000 members of which but ten had ever been in Russia.

Scotland Yard Takes Evidence.

Much of the evidence which Scotland Yard was to have introduced before the trial, was material that Scotland Yard had framed up on the Communists. Scotland Yard had a number of Pravda's that it was going to use, until it became the public property of the English workers, that this issue of the Pravada had been faked by Scotland Yard.

Prosecution Becomes Dramatic.

A number of humorous incidents have occurred since the trial had opened with the crown attorneys making themselves ridiculous telling of the "conspiracies" and the "secret gatherings" and the "foreign emissaries" bringing "Moscow gold" to the London Communists, which they had "discovered." The Communist Party of England has always had its meetings open to visitors and has announced its meetings openly in the Workers Weekly, the organ of the party, which has been sent thru the mails and it was not necessary to have secret and conspiratory meetings as the Communist Party was a legal organization and participated openly in the British municipal and parliamentary elections as a Communist Party for a number of years, explained a number of defendnts.

TURKEY DEFIES THE LEAGUE AND GREAT BRITAIN

Resent Fixing of Mosul Boundary Line

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 27.—The league of nations was openly defied and rebuked today when the Turkish cabinet, meeting under the chairmanship of Kemal Pasha, refused compulsory arbitration by the league in Mosul boundary dispute.

The Hague tribunal recently decided that the league had a right to make a unanimous decision on the question of the boundary dispute, which has been a bone of contention here since the British greed for oil made it an object of imperialist conquest.

Hague Decision Vicious.

The decision of the Hague court that the league had the right to fix boundaries carried with it a revision of the covenant of the league of nations which says that such decision must be by unanimous vote. The recent decision said that the vote must be unanimous with the exception of the parties to the question in dispute.

The cabinet decision places the matter where it was before—a direct struggle between Britain and Turkey. It cannot be settled permanently by conciliation so will eventually be settled by force.

Coolidge Exposed Self in New York Speech As Cheapest Kind of Liar

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the officials of some trade unions are beginning to recover from the effects of Cal Coolidge's bald declaration to New York profiteers, that prices were going down while wages were going up, hypocritically declaring that "this is real and solid progress." This was nothing if not a rallying cry to the great exploiters to continue their wage cutting campaigns.

Democratic organs, like the New York World, that still have hopes for the democratic party, are opening an attack on Coolidge's figures, which will no doubt be repeated very often between now and the 1926 congressional election, to demonstrate the great prosperity that it is claimed the republican administration has heaped upon the country.

• • • •

IT can hardly be expected that the labor officialdom will wage an open and energetic struggle against this deliberate falsification by the presidential strikebreaker. President William Green and Secretary Frank Morrison of the American Federation of Labor, have been visiting the White House lately to help Coolidge draw up his message that goes to congress next month. They have been so busy talking to Coolidge that they have not had time evidently to expose, even if they desired, the master class propaganda that "Cautions Cal" spewed forth before the chamber of commerce gathering in the metropolis. It is contrary to the etiquette of class whom one fraternizes. Thus Green collaboration to criticize those with and Morrison, quite overcome by their own importance, in being called to the White House, are effectively disarmed in so far as they might render any service to the workers they are supposed to represent.

• • • •

THE democrats on the other hand will lie on their side as much as the republicans perjure themselves to mislead working class voters. The democrats will claim that every good thing came out of the Wilson administration and that "prosperity" will never again burst in full bloom until another democratic president sits in the executive mansion. The democratic attack on Coolidge's utterances is therefore only part of that general denunciation thru which it is hoped to return the donkey party to the national political pie counter.

• • • •

IT remains, therefore, for the militant elements in the labor movement to make the fight to show that actual conditions give the lie to all of Coolidge's pretensions. Every housewife, without consulting the official reports of the United States department of labor, knows that the cost of living has been steadily increasing since Mr. Coolidge went into office. Coolidge doesn't know this. All his household expenses in Washington are paid by the government. He doesn't have to worry where his next meal is coming from.

In his speech he dealt with "wholesale prices," thus displaying his monumental ignorance. He confesses that he doesn't know that workers cannot buy wholesale; that they buy retail at the corner grocers, the butchers or the chain "tea and coffee" stores. Wholesale prices have dropped 30 per cent since 1920, but the most acceptable index of living costs shows that retail prices have dropped only 16 per cent.

• • • •

THE slight fall in prices in the closing days of the Wilson regime and the early part of the Harding dynasty, for which Coolidge is now trying to claim credit, was but a meager readjustment that took place with the ending of the war that was featured by extortionate tolls placed on all the necessities of life. So much for Coolidge's "cost of living."

• • • •

ON the question of wages Coolidge also lied. Even the New York World, defender of the rich, confesses that "The assumed increase of 20 per cent in wages since 1920 is not borne out by the statistical evidence."

Let Coolidge swallow these incontrovertible facts:

"The average per capita wages of factory workers in New York state are below the 1920 level. So are the payroll figures reported by the U. S. department of labor, headed by one of Coolidge's own cabinet members.

"That department also reports the average hourly wage of common labor in this country at 38 cents, compared with 49 cents in 1920. The rate paid by the steel corporation in that year was 46 cents. It is now 40 cents. Farm labor is now receiving an average of $49 per month, compared with $65 in 1920."

• • • •

THE history of the textile industry in Coolidge's own New England states has been one wage cut after another. This cutting came into greater evidence than ever following Coolidge's election last year. The average weekly earnings in the textile industry for 1924 was the starvation wage of $18.87. This is according to the government's own statistics. Figures gathered by the United Textile Workers' Union indicate that this average should be much lower, probably $15 per week. It is declared the average in Fall River, Mass., is $17.50 per week.

• • • •

THUS the Coolidge myth about increasing wages and a lowering cost of living is blown sky high. During the coming session of congress, and the congressional campaign that will follow, many such myths will originate in the White House. They must meet with similar treatment, not only by labor militants, but by increasing masses of workers and poor farmers.

Changes in Classes at Chi. Workers' School

A few changes in the days and location of some of the classes in the Chicago Workers' School have had to be made. They are as follows: The class in English will meet at 2644 LeMoyne St. every Tuesday and Friday at 8 p. m. The Worker Correspondents class which meets in the editorial room of the "Daily Worker" has been changed to Thursday night at 8 p. m. instead of Friday. The History of the International Revolutionary Youth Movement will meet on Sunday morning at 11 a. m.

tion. The proclamation announcing the meeting in the Lustgarten announced: "Clara Zetkin will speak against the war treaties of Locarno, for an alliance of peace with Soviet Russia, against the Dawes plunder pact, for the independent workers of Germany, against the imperialistic league for oppressed nations, against the black front imperialists under the leadership of London and for the red front under the leadership of Moscow." Thus the question of the red international against the black international of imperialist nations is clearly put.

Cabinet Will Resign.

Chancellor Luther and his cabinet are expected to resign immediately after the pacts are signed. The resignation of his government was the price he has to pay in order to obtain sufficient support for the ratification. So determined was the government to play the imperialist game of Britain that they sold their cabinet to the opposition parties in order to obtain their support. This brazen political trading has aroused the masses and efforts will be made by the Communists to prevent the creation of any government, thereby forcing new elections, on the issue of repudiation of the ratification of the Locarno pacts.

G. O. P. LEADERS SEEK NEW HEAD FOR COMMITTEE

Langley Sentenced to Atlanta Prison

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 27.—The leaders of the Grand Old Party, will be up against it when the forthcoming session of congress convenes. The republican leaders are wondering who they will place in the chairmanship of the committee on public buildings and grounds, which is now held by Representative John W. Langley, of Kentucky, who will soon be taking a two year's vacation at the federal resort in Atlanta for forgetting that prohibition enforcement officials must be "seen" in order to be immune for violations of the dry law.

The committee appointment is considered one of the most important as the administration is pledged to a $50,000,000 public buildings program.

Ignored Sentence.

Tho Langley has been under indictment for two years and was tried and convicted, republican leaders ignored this fact as they hoped that some method could be found to free Langley from an enforced vacation at the federal resort. Now that the court, to which he had appealed has upheld his conviction for conspiring to violate the Volstead act, the republican leaders are searching around to find a good tool for the committee.

Parents Protest to School Board.

With promises of adjustment of their grievances, if possible, twenty-five parents of children attending the Murphy school, Central Park Ave. and Grace street, were dismissed by a special committee of the board of education. The parents' complaint is the shifting of the Murphy school to the Henry school, St. Louis and Cullom Aves., which necessitates the children traveling distances and over many dangerous crossings to get to school.

CRIBBEN-SEXTON POLISHERS ARE STILL STRIKING

Stove Workers Demand Union Recognition

The tenth week of the metal polishers' strike against Cribben, Sexton & company, Sacramento boulevard and Chicago avenue, reveals the customary co-operation of the police and prosecutor's office with the corporation against the workers. The company, manufacturers of Universal stoves, ranges and furnaces, started out in a suspicious manner on the eve of the strike by declaring to the union officials:

"We will have no gunmen in the strike."

Attack Pickets with Knives.

Since then union pickets have been attacked with knives, company agents have set fire to a residence to frame up an arson plot against the strikers, bombs have been planted and well-known gunmen and sluggers are busy for the company inside and outside its premises.

The manufacturers of the Universal products first went open shop and then kept their piece work rates so secret that the men did not know what they had coming to them at the end of the week. The organized polishers and buffers threatened to strike and made good on their threat when the company refused to promise fair and stable piece rates and tolerable conditions.

Thugs Beat Strikers.

The pickets were roughed by company thugs almost from the first day and the violence has grown stronger as the company found it impossible to get the work out in its plant. Some of its polishing has been sent to Detriot and some to the Chicago Plating company, 1351 West Superior St., where the union is also picketing with good results.

Police Protest Gunmen.

One of the pickets, who was assaulted with a knife, attempted to get a warrant against the professional gunman with a prison record who had attacked him but the authorities in their customary conspiracy with the employers refused to issue it.

"Danger to life and arrest from overzealous police is only sharpening the fine spirit of fight" declared Business Agent John Werlik of Local 6, Metal Polishers' International Union. "No thot but complete victory is in the mind of the striking polishers and buffers."

UNITY OF ALL SEAMEN'S UNIONS SEEN AS NEED IN STORIES TOLD OF BRUTALITIES UPON SAILORS

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Memories of the press gangs of the British navy are faintly evoked by the stories told by the shipwrecked sailors of the Norwegian Tramp steamer Elven of the way they were conscripted and forced to work by the captain of the American Trader, their rescuer.

It happened a thousand miles from New York: the Elven had ventured her little hulk into a hurricane in answer to an S. O. S. from the Italian freighter Ignazio Florio. She found the Italians being taken aboard the President Harding, a huge liner, safe in the storm. But the little Elven's venture into the hurricane proved fatal. Turning about she bucked head winds for three days till giant seas fouled her steering gear, smashed her life boats, swept away the bridge and left her a helpless hulk. She drifted, sinking slowly, as the crew manned the hand pumps.

Compulsory Labor.

No one had eaten for 48 hours but the storm was over when the American Trader, a Yankee fisher steamer, came abaft and took off the crew. No one was fit to work, still less so, as few were given fresh clothing—they had been able to take nothing away—but the captain of the American Trader, a certain Hubbard C. Fish, ordered them to turn to, all except the officers and wireless men.

Some of the men refused and Hubbard threatened that unless they complied he would do his best to influence the Norwegian authorities to stop payment of the 450 crowns shipwreck benefit due according to Norwegian law.

Union seamen of New York, when the ship came in, said they had never heard of distressed mariners being treated in that fashion—being conscripted and kept at work for a thousand miles till the boat tied up to the pier. The storm was over when the rescue came and no emergency existed.

Held Like Chattel Slaves.

Two other stories tell of the use of padlocked forecastles and chain lockers as jails, in New York harbor, in defiance of the immigration laws. The first relates to the S. S. Cedric, White Star liner. Thirty sailors who had taken part in the recent British strike against the one-pound wage cut were shipped out of England, at the end of the strike, because their services were needed, but penalized by jailing in New York, under guard.

The other case is of three Italian seamen on the S. S. Handicap, a Norwegian boat, in from a Spanish port. These men were imprisoned in the chain locker, under guard, on the theory that they might desert, tho the immigration law supposedly protects seamen in a long period of shore leave and does not compel them to return on the same ship. The captain feared he would have to ship out other men at a higaher rate.

French Steel Kings Plan Increased Sales in American Market

PARIS, Nov. 27.—French manufacturers of steel are preparing to unload vast amounts of steel onto the American market and claim that tho the French steel industry has been more efficiently managed than those of other countries that they have failed to sell more steel because of the lack of proper publicity and sales methods.

The various French companies are pooling together to build a fund, which will take care of the selling and advertising of the French manufactured steel abroad.

Ship Sinks.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—The steamship Fall City is reported to be sinking at the foot of Huron street, Brooklyn. Three men were reported injured.

America Prepares Military Machine

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 27.—Figures released by the war department disclose that 267,904 citizens participated in the summer military training activities held in the various camps during the summer of 1925.

These figures include all arms of the national guard, both commissioned and enlisted, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and Citizens' Military Training Corps, and that part of the regular army assigned to summer training camp activities.

The figures show that 33,838 citizens received military training at the citizens' military training camps. They also disclosed that 84.3% of the membership of the national guard attended summer camps.

Stanislavsky Is Blind.

A cable received by Morris Gest carries the information that Constantin Stanislavsky, director of the Moscow Art Theater, was stricken with blindness while directing a rehersal the Moscow Art Theater.

Morris Gest brot the Moscow Art Theater to this country on two occasions, last year they were in Chicago. Tho they played in the Russian language they drew large audiences who did not understand one word of the language but greatly appreciated the players for their art.

Acquit Murder Suspects.

WAUKEGAN, Ill., Nov. 27.—Mrs. Clara Harcq was acquitted tonight of the charge of killing her mother, Mrs. Lillie Holt. Likewise Mrs. Harcq's husband, Albert, and her stepfather, Arthur Holt, were acquitted by the jury in Judge Claire Edward's court.

"A PLACE WHERE THEY SERVE BIG MEALS AT LESS."

CITY ENGINEERS FIND SYMPATHY BUYS NO BREAD

Believed Chicago Mayor for Several Months

Promises, expressions of sympathy, concessions that they had justice on their side and the accompanying varieties of stringing 'em along will satisfy for a time in place of wage boosts but as a permanent proposition the 600 members of the city of Chicago's engineering staff find them devoid of both nourishment and comfort.

Sympathy, But No Raise.

After waiting since July 1 for the city council to make good on Mayor Dever's promise of a rush wage raise ordinance these white collar workers gathered at the Hotel Sherman (recently taken off organized labor's unfair list) and protested angrily.

They had started a spectacular 3-day strike in the entire municipal engineering system on June 30, but the wily mayor and his cabinet vouchsafed fullest sympathy and the engineers had trooped back to their blueprints after loss of one day's pay.

Riled Up Again.

They soon discovered that as collective bargainers they could learn a good deal from any local of unskilled laborers and for five months the strike feeling has been seething again. The protest meeting this week against further delay by the city is expected to lead to a showdown before Christmas. The engineers demonstrate by tables and charts that they are paid less than the average for large cities. City Engineer John Ericson approves the course of his subordinates.

Steals Hog; Sent Back to Prison to Finish Suspended Sentence

VINTON, Ia., Nov. 27.—Ernest Wheeler started serving a ten-year prison sentence because of a hog. In 1924 he pleaded guilty to a charge of forgery and received a ten-year prison sentence, which was suspended on his promise to behave. But he stole a hog, so he was sent away to serve the old sentence.

Darwin Still Hated By the Anthropoids

ALAMEDA, Cal., Nov. 27.—(FP)—Following protests by the Science League, of America and the High School Alumni Association, the Alameda board of education reconsidered its substitution of the name of Agassiz for Darwin's, to be engraved on its new million dollar building. Acknowledging that Darwin was objected to "because of certain religious prejudices." it compromised by deciding to engrave no names at all.

A. C. W. Left-Wing Committee Open Forum Discusses Union Unity

NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 27.—The third of a series of lectures being held every Tuesday morning by the Amalgamated Action Committee, a group of militants of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, was held at Lorraine Hall, Broadway, near Flushing Ave., Brooklyn, with Sylvan A. Pollack giving a lecture on World Trade Union Unity and Amalgamation.

He traced the negotiations for world trade union unity, strating with the call of the Red International of Labor Unions at its second congress which was held November, 1922, to the formation of the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee last year and also of the latest developments. He pointed out the need of amalgamation of the American unions to go hand in hand with world unity.

Comrade Riger, the chairman, also made a short speech in Jewish.

The Amalgamated Action Committee, of which Sam Liptzen is chairman, holds lectures at its open forum at eleven o'clock every Tuesday morning at Lorraine Hall, Broadway, near Flushing avenue, Brooklyn, also at Manhattan Lyceum, 66 E. 4th street, every Monday and Wednesday at 11 a. m.

EDUCATION SHOWS GREAT PROGRESS IN THE UKRAINE

Economic Revival Aids School System

KHARKOV, Russia—(FP)— Standards of education are advancing rapidly in the Ukrainian Workers' Republic. Five years ago the country was over-run by Yudenich, Denekin, Wrangel and the counter-revolutionists. Then came the famine of 1921-22.

In 1922-23 education in the Ukraine was at its lowest point. Student enrollment in the elementary schools had been 1,800,000 in 1914 and 2,000,000 in 1921. In 1923 it stood at 1,300,000.

That year the tide turned. Civil war ended. The harvests improved. Industry revived. The enrollment for 1924 was 1,500,000; for 1925, 1,750,000. The enrollment this fall (1925-26) will exceed 2,100,000, topping the highest point of 1921 by 5 per cent.

A similar story is told in the growth of educational appropriations. In this year, 1925-1926 fifty per cent of all Ukrainian expenditures are being devoted to education. The total budget for 1925-26 is almost exactly five times the budget for 1922-1923.

Teachers are sharing largely in this improvement. Their hours of work are less; their housing is improved; their food is far better. As for their wages, the Ukrainian village teacher who received 8 rubles a month (ruble, 50 cents) in addition to house, fuel and food in 1922-23, 18 rubles in 1923-4 and 25 in 1924-5, in the 1925-6 budget is receiving 30 rubles a month. This is still a small amount, but it is nearly four times four years ago.

The whole Ukrainian educational system has been reorganized the past four years. The Dalton plan, the project method and a number of other experimental ideas that have been tried out here and there in other countries are being tried also in the Ukrainian republic on a vast scale. The schools are being reconstructed physically and educationally. All children now work in groups. A child incapable of group work is looked upon as abnormal and treated. The normal child is the child who knows how to associate with his fellows.

Economic revival has laid the foundation for a new educational system that marks great advance steps for the whole educational world.

CALL COPS AND DICKS TO STOP FARM STRIKERS

Split Milk Adage No Bar to Scab-Herders

Dairy farmers near the Spring Grove plants of the Weiland Dairy company are getting a taste of what Chicago unionists are up against when they go on strike.

Squads of Chicago detectives, armed with shotguns and revolvers, filled the roads out in the country yesterday to stop a milk strike on the part of farmers who refused to sign an agreement with the Wieland Dairy company. The firm alleges that the farmers object to the clause of the agreement which pledges the farmer to have his cows examined and passed according to the Chicago health commissioners' standard.

A large percentage of the farmers went on strike, barricaded the roads, armed themselves and stopped other farmers who tried to bring their milk to the Wieland plants. When the scabs objected, their milk was spilled.

Altho there was no use crying over spilt milk, the Wieland company notified Chicago authorities, and the Chicago authorities, and the strikebreakers of Chicago went out in force to see that the embattled farmers get the same treatment as Chicago teamsters do when they strike.

'Worn-Out' Wall Street Gambler Will Retire

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Wall Street is losing "Jakey" Field, who ran a fortune up into the millions from a $10 bill risked in a bucketshop.

Worn out by nerve-wracking speculation, Field has arranged to sell his membership in the stock exchange for $152,000. In 1988, he set a record by paying $25,000 for the same seat.

Field has had a spectacular career. In 1909 he made $120,000 in twenty minutes during a wild flurry in Rock Island stock.

Masaryk Government In Czecho-Slovakia Persecutes Workers

PRAGUE, Czecho-Slovakia, (IRA)—(By Mail)—The persecutions of Czecho-Slovakian workers, and especially the Communists, continues unabated in the republic dominated by the philosopher, Masaryk.

A few of the more recent persecutions are made known in the list that follows: Comrade Zapototsky has to serve a sentence of one and a half year of hard labor. District Secretary Filip in Goeding was sentenced to one year hard labor. Comrade Seidler and his wife were both expelled from the republic, the political editor of the Reichenberg Vorwaerts, Comrade Pollack, escaped the threatened delivery to Horthy.

In Slovakia and in Carpato-Russia the following cases are reported: Comrade Eugen Fried, party secretary in Kashau was sentenced to two years and the Comrades Jerrelfalussy and Hermann Loewy to one year each. The former was sentenced on account of statements that he has made at the Fifth Congress of the Communist International in Moscow and the latter on the basis of a frame-up of spies.

In Kashau in the course of the last 6 months, 74 officials of the labor movement have been sentenced to a total of 17 years of hard labor. The nearer the parliamentary elections approach, the more the white terror against the workers is increased. There is hardly a Communist editor against whom there are no proceedings of some kind going on. The government authorities are attempting to eliminate representatives of the Communist Party from participation in the election campaign in order to save the national coalition from a defeat.

Recently Rude Pravo, the organ of the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia reported that the statistics of the persecutions of the labor movement in the republic of Masaryk contains, since December, 1920, 43 dead and over 150 seriously injured workers. In an immense number of trials more than 7,000 years of hard labor were distributed among the accused.

Emergency Call!

To All Members and Friends of International Labor Defense:

Two big cases are scheduled to come to trial on November 30th. The Pittsburgh raid case of 10 workers and the Zeigler frame-up case of 15 union miners. The lawyers in each of these cases will not proceed with the defense unless we have the money.

FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS MUST BE RAISED BEFORE DECEMBER 15TH

We call upon all members of the I. L. D. to rise to the test and raise this sum. Contribute all you can and get your friends and neighbors to contribute.

Much depends on the outcome of these two trials. The entire working class is on trial. Not merely the 25 workers involved.

French Communist Program

The Communist Party of France, which played an important role in the chamber of deputies preceding the fall of the Painleve cabinet is rapidly gaining the confidence and support of the working masses of that country. Its most important agitational work is its consistent struggle against the imperialist adventurers in Syria and Morocco. Following the true Leninist policy of aiding the colonials in their nationalist struggles against imperialism, the French party is delivering sledge hammer blows against the policy of the socialist imperialists of the Herriot camp as well as the avowedly reactionary Poincareists.

On the question of stabilization of the franc and the tax program of the Painleve ministry, the Paris Communist organ, Humanite, charges that the Painleve program followed the 1924 scheme of Poincare: inflation of currency by an increase of 9 billion francs and a general taxation of 6 billion francs. The burden of direct taxes would fall on the masses; the industrial tax of one billion would fall on the consumer; the small holder of government bonds was to be taxed 15% additional, while a head tax of 20 francs was to be placed on every citizen. To these taxes was added a heavy tax on small peasant holdings. Humanite remarks that the whole program is designed to avoid progressive income taxes on the big bourgeoisie and is similar to the German currency scheme of 1923 that in such suffering for the masses of German workers and middle classes.

Against the enslaving of the workers and peasants the Communist Party of France proposed:

1—Nationalization of banks and control of industry.
2—Nationalization of big capitalist monopolies, such as railways, coal mines, insurance companies, etc.
3—Control of foreign trade.
4—Cancellation of foreign debts.
5—Equalization of wealth thru a tax on capital.
6—Workers' and peasant control of production and establishment of co-operatives of workers and poorer peasantry.

This program is linked with the colonial wars and is serving the purpose of exposing in a most glaring manner the collapse of the policies of the government that just fell as well as all the various bourgeois political strata of France. The demands can never be met by the capitalist government, but by popularizing them among the exploited masses the Communists effectively expose the class character of the government and arouse the deepest resentment against it.

The chaotic economic and political conditions in France create the objective conditions for great upheavals, the Bolshevik tactics of the Communist Party can be depended upon to rouse the workers thereby creating the subjective conditions that will produce a series of bitter struggles, intensifying the class conflict preparatory to the final onslaught.

Diplomats Follow Bankers

Publication of a London dispatch containing information that a consortium of international bankers in New York City anticipated the acts of the Peking customs conference dealing with Chinese tariffs, proves the Communist contention that diplomats are merely the agents of capitalist interests.

The meeting of financiers that took up among themselves the question of Chinese customs duties occurred in the offices of J. P. Morgan & company in New York on October 19, 20 and 21. The principals in attendance were Thomas W. Lamont, representing the Wall Street banking combine; R. St. Pierre, representing the French bankers; C. S. Addish, the British, and H. Kashiwagi, the Japanese.

This consortium of bankers had met from time to time and had been keeping a close record of the events transpiring in China.

The fact that the consortium met in the House of Morgan has great historical and economic significance. It indicates the rise to supremacy of Morgan, since first he played a decisive role in Chinese affairs in 1913. At that time six great powers of the world were preparing to float a loan, known to history as the "Six-Power Loan." It never materialized because Morgan did not want to share with five powers the exploitation of the resources of China. He, thru his president, Woodrow Wilson, intervened and the United States withdrew from the group arranging the loan. In place of a consortium of six nations, the "open door" policy was advocated so that Morgan could throw his immense financial powers against the other national financiers.

The war and its aftermath placed the House of Morgan in the position of bankers to the whole world. Now, twelve years after the liquidation of the six-power pact, Morgan unquestionably dominates the situation.

But none should mistake the present consortium as a medium assuring peace in the Pacific. Until the Wall Street collossus holds the destinies of China in his own hands there will be strife in that part of the world. This agreement between bankers is as evanescent as was the original consortium of six nations. Tho now narrowed to four, the United States still strives to increase its naval power in the Pacific. The naval base of the island of Oahu is not to be abandoned. Instead it is to be made as formidable as science, architecture and modern military equipment can make it, preparatory to the time when the consortium will be reduced to two and then to one. And that one is to be Morgan if the military power can be developed to defend the financial power of Wall Street.

Conferences of banking consortiums and customs commissioners alike are preludes to war. Against this conspiracy the workers of Britain, France, Japan, China and the United States must fight with untiring energy. The only force that can defeat the sanguinary schemes of the brigands of imperialism is the proletarian revolution.

ZEIGLER MINERS' TRIAL OPENS AT BENTON MONDAY

hoodwink the miners, the company refused to permit the assistant to enter the mine, with the result that the regular weighman declined to stay on the job because he was unable to weigh the coal correctly.

Miners Walk Out.

Thirteen hundred miners then walked out of the Bell and Zoller mine. That same evening, at a mass meeting in the park, Corbishly induced the resentful miners to return to work next morning and permit the sub-district officials to handle the case in accordance with the contract. The men returned pending this settlement.

Four days later the dispute was settled! Settled by D. B. Cobb, vice-president of the sub-district, in accordance with every detail of the demands of the company! These demands were simply that the local president, Corbishly, the vice-president, Oscar Farthing, the pit committeeman, Steve Meanovich, and the check weighman, Pete Blazin, be removed from office. Mr. Cobb complied.

Immediately, the mines were once more emptied. Not all the urgings of the deposed officials could induce the men to return. The miners demanded that their officials be replaced in office. On the second night of the "wild-cat" strike, Lon Fox, president of the sub-district, came to a special meeting which he had ordered called for the purpose of electing new officers and calling off the strike. Almost 800 miners packed the hall, listened to Fox, Cobb and Babbington, a district board member, and firmly refused to elect new officers or to return to work.

Klansmen Shoot Miners.

The meeting was adjourned. In one section of the hall, as the miners were leaving, a fight started supposedly over a remark made by old Bert Farthing, who had supported the Klan up until two or three months prior to the strike. Two Wilson brothers, both known to be klansmen, struck him to the floor. Young Farthing, who was at the door, hurried to the aid of his father. A general scrap followed during which Cobb pulled a blackjack and attempted to use it. He was knocked down and the weapon taken from him.

After most of the men had left the hall, Alec Hargis an another well-known klansman and a thoroly discredited member of the local, appeared in the doorway with a .38 automatic in his hand. Looking straight at one of the progressive and best liked miners, Mike Sarovich, he fired a shot which went thru Mike's abdomen and lodged in the hip of Hezza Hindman, a sub-district board member who was behind Sarovich.

Whitewash Murderer.

To whitewash Hargis and to frame up the local miners' officials is the purpose of the combined forces of reaction. Hargis who was found by the coroner's jury to have fired the shot that killed Mike Sarovich was completely freed by an obliging grand jury. The charge was instead fastened on Frank Corbishly who was not even in the hall when the shot was fired. The two Wilson's who started the fight and Cobb who tried to use a blackjack are scot free. But 20 miners are being held for trial on the charges, made by Cobb, of assault with intent to murder, and conspiracy to murder.

To Stifle Opposition.

The aim of the Farrington-Fox machine in this frame-up is to kill off all opposition in the miners' union to the traitorous policies pursued by the machine. Thompson, Watt, Tom Parry, Joe Angelo and others are already expelled; more are slated for the same fate. The machine wants no opposition to it in the unions and at the next convention. Farrington uses cunning judgement. An honest and militant miner expelled here, another one somewhere else, and so on, with the hope that soon no one will be left to open his mouth against this infamous scoundrel and his clique.

The Zeigler frame-up is a case of honest working class fighters who are struggling against a solid bloc and under great handicaps. Thruout the county the rank and file miners have organized the Franklin County Defense Committee, with Victor Cernich of Christopher, Ill., as treasurer. They are appealing for immediate aid in the form of donations. The International Labor Defense and every progressive labor organization is cooperating with the defendants.

To "Abolish" Submarines.

BERLIN, Nov. 27.—Abolition of submarines is now advocated by Admiral Von Tirpitz, the master mind of Germany's great war time submarine campaign against the merchant ships of her enemies.

"The inviolability of private property upon the high seas is an old legal principle, and I therefore favor the abolition of submarines," said the admiral.

The endoresement of abolition of submarines by Admiral von Tirpitz was not without qualifications however, for he demands that with the submarine there must also be abolished naval blockades.

The Ladies' Garment Workers' Convention

By EARL R. BROWDER.

WHEN the special convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union meets Monday in Philadelphia it will be faced with problems which reflect and anticipate the problems of today and the immediate future of the entire American labor movement. For this reason it will be studied carefully by everyone with the slightest interest in the labor movement. Its results will give some measure of the maturity of the forces which carried thru the glorious battle against reaction in the New York garment market last summer.

The immediate background of the convention is the mass struggle which rallied 35,000 workers of the International Ladies' Garment Workers into open struggle for over three months against the officials of the union. Never was such a demonstration of mass sentiment seen before in American labor struggles in this movement which began by filling all the available halls in Manhattan, continued in the gigantic Yankee Stadium demonstration, overflowed then into the open-air demonstration in Madison Square, and culminted in the general demonstration stoppage of the shops. It is the power of that mass movement which forced this special convention, and it is the spirit of this movement which must be brought to expression in victory at Philadlphia.

The issues of the mass struggle last summer were clear and definite. They centered around the betrayal of the workers' interests by the officials, especially the refusal to enforce the dressmakers' agreement against the bosses, and the surrender of the cloakmakers' demands to the governor's commission of bankers and lawyers. The mechanism by which the officials carried out the betrayal—the "rotten borough" system of representation, the arbitrary raising of dues and placing of assessments without the consent of the membership; the wholesale expulsion of Communists and left wing officials; the use of hired gangsters against the membership, etc.,—became burning issues of the struggle because they flowed out of the basic surrender to the collaboration of the union officials with, the bosses.

OUT of the struggle a mass left wing was born. It contains all the honest militants in the union. Its leadership and composition is a united front between the Communists, the rank and file socialists, anarchists, etc. Its backbone is the clear-cut left wing organized in the Trade Union Educational League. Its most effective fighting weapon has been the Communist Jewish Daily Freiheit. Its program is as yet incomplete and indefinite. It has yet to come to maturity. But it is one of the most promising developments in the labor movement of this country. It has immense possibilities before it. At Philadelphia it will meet its first acid test.

The task of the organized and conscious left wing of the T. U. E. L. is to use every energy to crystallize the entire broad left and progressive bloc as definitely as possible on the basis of a program. The program of the recent National Needle Trades Conference of the T. U. E. L. provides such planks as a militant struggle against the bosses; opposition to class collaboration; for the shop delegate system; for proportional representation in joint boards and conventions; for amalgamation of the needle trades unions; for a labor party; for world trade union unity; and other fundamental planks of this nature that represent basic demands of the workers, the broad left wing can be consolidated at Philadelphia.

NOT only has this movement an opportunity to consolidate itself, ideologically and organizationally, at Philadelphia. It also has the opportunity and the duty to completely smash and eliminate from the union those black forces represented by Breslau, Sigman and Dubinsky, and to give the I. L. G. W. U. an administration based upon a fighting program for the workers in the industry.

Philadelphia is the battleground on which will be tested the new army of progress in the I. L. G. W. U. With complete solidarity based upon the program hammered out in the struggle of the past year, with uncompromising militancy, with flexible and realistic leadership, the left wing and progressive bloc can make Philadelphia a historic landmark in the progress of the American labor movement.

CLEVELAND W. P. WINS IN FREE SPEECH FIGHT

Judge Dismisses Case Against Benjamin

Cleveland, O. (By Mail).—After several unsuccessful attempts to frame a case that would justify the recent arrests of party members in this city, police were to-day forced to dismiss the case against Herbert Benjamin, district organizational secretary and admit that he was justified in resisting the arbitrary orders to cease distributing leaflets on the street.

Comrade Benjamin was arrested on Oct. 30 when he refused to obey orders of local police to quit distributing the party's program in the local elections. He was offered a release at the time of the arrest providing he would sign a waiver. This he refused to do, insisting that if the party is to be prevented from distributing our literature it would take more than an arbitrary order by police, which can be enforced or not as they see fit. In dismissing the case against Comrade Benjamin, Judge Corlett took occasion to express his anger that it was impossible for him to find a law that would at the same time prevent the dissemination of Communist literature without interfering with those politicians whose views he shares.

Only Party to Offer Program

This is the third time that Comrade Benjamin appeared before the same judge on the charge of distributing leaflets. On the occasion of a previous appearance Comrade Benjamin pointed out that the program which he distributed and for which he was arrested was the only program that had been offered by any party in this election and that the candidates in the local elections had sought votes by means of "red fire campaign and hired clowns, who sang silly songs." Judge Corlett admitted that this was not an intelligent way to appeal to voters. To which Benjamin replied by pointing out that these politicians were not lodged in the jail or dragged into court to be lectured to.

With the discharge of the case against Benjamin and the admission of Police Commissionar Barry that the arrest of Benjamin while speaking on the public square against the murderous Horthy regime, was unjustified, the police has been forced to abandon their effort to intimidate and harrass Workers Party members.

The outcome of these cases will encourage party members everywhere in the district to resist the attempts to curtail the rights which they are supposed to have according to the boasts of the champions of American democracy.

The district executive committee will now more energetically than before prosecute the fight for the right to meet and speak in the cities like Bellaire where our meetings have been interfered with.

Profited Thru Bankruptcy.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The special house committee which has been investigating charges that Federal Judge G. W. English, of the eastern district of Illinois, profited in bankruptcy cases before his court, will resume sessions here next Tuesday, Rep. Boies of Iowa, chairman, announced.

CLEVELAND NOTES

Work Among Women.

Cleveland, Nov. 299.—The last party convention, acting on the instruction of the Communist International, decided to make work among women one of the important departments of the party work.

With this in view the district executive committee of district 6 is calling a meeting of women members of Cleveland for discussion of ways and means for starting work among women in this city. Attendance of women comrades is compulsory. But work among women does not signify work only by women among women. The men members of the party are also invited to attend the meeting. It will be held at the district office, 5927 Euclid ave. on Sunday, Dec. 6 at 2:30 p. m.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES

Open Forum Begins Sunday

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 27.—At last the long awaited Communist Open Forum is here. William F. Dunne, of Chicago, will be here to address the first forum on Sunday 29th at 8 P. M. The subject: "The Swing to the Left in the American Labor Movement", is quite appropriate as it comes immediately after the furriers' convention and on the eve of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union convention which opens on the following day in Philadelphia. The forum will meet regularly every Sunday at Grand Fraternity Hall, 1628 Arch st. at 8 p. m. sharp. Admission free.

Booze-Running Co. Catalogues Grafting Volstead Act Enforcers

Despite all precautions that prohibition enforcement administrator, E. C. Yellowley of the Chicago district was able to take to keep the fact that a black book, containing the names of all prohibition enforcement officials and classified as to whether they could be "seen" or not, was taken in the raids on the establishment of J. B. Scheure & Co., 17 Austin Avenue. has leaked out much to the anger of the director.

In this black book, part of which is in code, are the names of the different enforcement officers and information as to whether they could be "seen" and by whom.

The book also contained the different traffic routes over which it was "cheapest" and best to send their shipments of booze. In this section the names of the different enforcement officials and their "scale of prices" was listed as well as the "trustworthy" drivers and workers on the roads and express lines.

During the raid on the warehouse one of the members of the local bureau was found in the building. A vault, which it is expected will contain pre-Volstead spirits bore a seal of the internal revenue department and "legal difficulties" kept the prohibition squad from opening the safe.

This warehouse, in which thousands of gallons of spirits of all kinds were found, was directly across from the Chicago criminal courts building and has been in business quite some time.

Fire in Laboratory.

Damage of $100,000 was caused by fire, fed by exploding chemicals, today in the $1,000,000 plant of the Abbott Laboratories at North Chicago. The flames were placed under control after apparatus from nearby towns had joined the north Chicago firemen and prevented the fire from spreading after two buildings had been attacked.

A checkup showed all employees safe. The only casualty was Edward Lindgren, a former Waukegan City fireman, who was overcome by chemical gases before gas masks were distributed to the fire fighters. His condition is not serious.

SHOP NUCLEUS TRAINING CLASS THURSDAY NIGHT

Also Four Other Classes at N. Y. Workers' School

New York, Nov. 23.—Perhaps the most important course of the five at the Workers School is the Fundamentals of Leninism (Shop Nucleus Training Course), instructor, Jack Stachel. This course will train one worker of each shop nucleus, preferably the organizer, to lead political discussions in his shop nucleus. The shop nucleus will select the comrade to take the training course, exact attendance from him and pay his fee. The course will combine the "Fundamentals of Leninism" and "Party Organizational Problems", the outline being approximately as follows:

1. Capitalist wage slavery—The system under which we live.
2. Imperialism, present dominant form of capitalism—The last stage of capitalism.
3. The breach in the imperialist front and the epoch of social revolution.
4. The Communist order of society—The abolition of the contradictions of capitalism and the emancipation of the workers.
5. The dictatorship of the proletariat—The unavoidable pre-requisite of the struggle for Communism.
6. Proletarian dictatorship and the allies of the revolution—Colonies and the peasantry.
7. International party of the proletariat—The road to the dictatorship of the proletariat.
8. The party and the masses.
9. Structure and organizational problems of the party—Shop nuclei, street nuclei, shop committees, etc.
10. Special campaigns of the party—Electoral campaigns, Soviet Russia, recruiting campaigns, Communist press.
11. The work of the shop nucleus.
    - a. Work of the different officers.
    - b. The shop paper.
    - c. Legal and illegal methods.
    - d. How the nucleus brings the party into the shops.
    - e. How the nucleus mobilizes the masses for the party campaigns.
12. Problems of Bolshevization.

In addition to meeting the needs of our educational work in line with the party's program of Bolshevization, the "Shop Nucleus Training Course" will also serve to maintain a steady personal cnotact with each of the shop nuclei through its best representative—the one chosen by the nucleus to take the course and be the leader in the nuclei educational work. The nucleus members will therefore have a direct means of bringing any special problems in the shop directly to the attention of the party higher committees for solution. Thus the shop nucleus training course will help in the function of the nuclei.

Marxian Economics, instructor, J. Mindel, will take up the different schools of economics and then consider the fundamental elements of Marxian economics. This course is preparatory to a second course in the Economics of the Era of Financial Capital and Monopoly. It takes up all the classic concepts of Marxian economics. An interesting feature, seldom or never treated in a course in Marxian economics in the United States, is the study of the concentration of capital in agriculture and the general economics of the agrarian problem.

The Fundamentals of Communism, instructor, Geo. Siskind, is a course particularly designed for new entrants into the party and those who may have been in the party for many years but not had the time to get a fundamental training. The second section of the course includes such topics as: the dictatorship of the proletariat, society under Communism, relation to the party, to its leaders and to the masses, relation to socialist and bourgeoisie revolutions, etc.

Class in Russian Language

The Russian Language Course is also announceed. The purpose of the course is to train a selected group to read certain literature in Russian which is not available in other languages.

Finally, there will begin a course entitled: The Social Interpretation of Modern Literature, instructor, Eli B. Jacobson. This course aims to provide critical survey of the most important works in modern literature, analysing their special significance and attempting to estimate them from a Communist viewpoint. The novel, drama, essay and poetry of America and the major European countries in modern times will be considered. Among authors to be taken up are:

a. United States: Sinclair Lewis, Carl Sandburg, Sherwood Anderson, Theo. Dreiser, Floyd Dell, etc.
b. England: Shaw, Galsworthy, D. H. Lawrence, Wilde, etc.
c. Russia: Tolstoy, Dostoyevsky, Turgenov, Andreyev, Gorki, Checkhov, Alexander Blok, Demyan, Redny, Mayakovsky, Lebedinsky.
d. Scandinavian: Ibsen, Bjornson, Strindberg, Hamsun.
e. France: Anatole France, Romain Rolland, Henri Barbusse.
f. Germany: Franz Werfel, Ernst Toller, T. Mann, Wasserman, Schnitzler, Hauptmann.

The Zeigler Frame-up

By Max Shachtman

THIRTY one thousand dollars is the amount turned in to the district executive board of District No. 12, United Mine Workers of America, by the Zeigler Local 992, in one year. This same Zeigler local is having a good part of this money used against it by the Farrington machine which is actively aiding in the frame-up to railroad 20 of the best union men in Southern Illinois to the state penitentiary, and one of them, perhaps, to the gallows.

The astounding frame-up is based on what took place one night at the local union meeting, and what happened there is told in the following story which was related to me by one of the defendants, a lean, leather-necked miner who was born and raised in the Arkansas coal mine region.

Miner Tells Story.

This Bell and Zoller Mine No. 1 has a pretty big output of coal, being one of the biggest mines in these parts, and they have a very complicated system of weighing. And they run the cars over the scales so swift that one man can hardly keep much track of the weight. It's been so bad that we've had eight checkweighmen in two years.

Well, this time we gave the check weighman an assistant and for considerable more than a month he worked pretty good and the boys were satisfied with his work. Then one day the company refuses to let him into the mine and we called in sub-district Vice-President Cobb to handle the case. That same day the company ran more than one car over the general average on the scales each minute and the checkweighman comes and tells Henry Corbishly, president of Local 992, that he couldn't weigh the coal right.

Miners Leave Pits.

Henry told him he was under affidavit to weigh the coal right and that if he couldn't do it it was up to him to know what he could do. Pretty soon the checkweighman walks out of the scale room and tells Corbishly that he couldn't weigh the coal and was going home and for Henry to tell the miners. And Henry tells them, and pretty soon all the miners but a few walks out too, no one wanting to stay in the mine without there being a checkweighman.

At night the boys got together in the park and Henry spoke to them for more than thirty minutes and told them to go back and let the sub-district officials settle the dispute which they did. Next morning, in comes Cobb again from West Frankfort and for four days they hear evidence from the boys. The company wanted to have Corbishly, young Farthing, Pete Blazin, who was checkweighman, and Steve Meanovich removed. So finally Cobb and E. L. Berger,—that's the mine superintendent—bring in a decision giving the company what they want, and this with only four union men out of a hundred testifying for the company, and them four being liars as was proved in the other testimony.

Klansmen Rally Forces.

The boys were pretty mad about the decision and they refused to go back to work. So Lon Fox, our sub-district president, orders a special meeting of Local 992 to elect new officers, which he thought we would. Tuesday evening, we see a few carloads of Klansmen circling around and driving over to West Frankfort and then coming back with D. B. Cobb, Lon Fox, Darby Babbington and Hezza Hindman. We kind of felt there was something coming because they'd been scheming around in the sub-district office all the time. Anyhow, we were quiet.

Frank Skibinski opened up the meeting and Lon Fox gets up and tells the boys to elect new officials and go back to work. Cobb and Babbington says the same thing too. Then Corbishly spoke and that was pretty good for most of us, him showing that the sub-district officials always did what the operators wanted. Well, they told us to elect new officials and go back to work, but we just sat tight and didn't. So there was nothing to do for it, and we adjourned the meeting.

Klansmen Assault Aged Miner.

There was about seven or eight hundred miners at the meeting and when they had most of them left the hall and only fifty or sixty left inside, old man Bert Farthing said something. The old man and the young Farthing used to stick by the klan but turned bitter on it in the last months, and began helping Henry Corbishly. Well, no one knows what the old man said, but Asa Wilson and his brother, who support the klan, begin hitting him, and he being well nigh seventy pretty soon he's on the floor bleeding. Oscar Farthing's half out of the hall when he sees his old man being beat up and he runs in to help him, dragging off the Wilson brothers.

Cobb Pulls Blackjack.

Just then Cobb pulls a blackjack from out of his hip pocket and was attempting to use it when someone gets it on him and stops him. The boys got mad, Cobb trying to use a blackjack and none of the boys armed, or showing it, and so the fight begun. Some of the boys got pretty well bruised and Cobb got a couple of chairs bust on him which wasn't serious but laid him up in the hospital for a while and no one feeling sorry about it or sending him flowers.

Anyhow, when the fight was about over, Alec Hargis come in. He ain't got much standing in the union because he was part responsible for Mike Rosko getting away with $11,000 union funds, and Hargis himself being found guilty of stealing $67 from the benevolent society of the union. Well Hargis had a .38 automatic in his hand and just when big Mike Sarovich is going out, Hargis shoots him in the belly which it goes thru and lands in Board Member Hindman.

Hargis Shoots Sarovich.

A few days later Mike dies, suffering terribly all the time. But before he died we asked him who done it and Mike says: "Alec Hargis done it, looking me straight in the eye." Also, the night of the shooting, Roy Martin, the state's attorney finds Hargis with the .38 and looks at it and says: "Alec, this gun's been shot off right recent. There's still powder smoke smelling fresh from the barrel. Did you fire the shot?" And Alec says: "I ain't saying nothing."

So the coroner's inquest gave a verdict that Big Mike had come to his death by a bullet fired by Alec Hargis and they held Alec for $10,000 bail. And Lon Fox puts it up for him. Well, this looked bad for the reactionaries, and so they went to work pretty hard to get out of the hole they were in. Cobb and Lon Fox swears out warrants for twenty-six of the boys charging them with assault with intent to murder and conspiracy for same, when Cobb's the man who tried to sap up on the men with a blackjack. And then they get to work pretty hard and in a month or so we find that the grand jury won't indict Hargis for the murder of Big Mike and he's let off scot free.

Frame-Up Corbishley.

Well, Mike was dead and someone shot him and they just couldn't turn Hargis loose without saying someone else did it. So they indicts Frank Corbishly for having shot Mike dead and wounded Hezza Hindman. And anyone that knows anything about the shooting knows Frenk wasn't even in the hall when the shooting took place. But old man George W. Payne from Alabama, who we know is a klansman, testified that he saw a bulging under Frank's shirt which he said he thought looked like the print of a gun and Bill Hogan also gave some kind of testimony. So they picks on Frank as the killer when everyone knows Frank was a good friend of Mike's and never had nothing against him and wasn't even in the hall when it took place. But someone had to be the goat so's they could turn Alec Hargis loose.

Well, now they're going to try the boys in Benton with the coal operators and the kluxers and Lon Fox and Farrington planning to do everything to send them up the road. And every man in six counties knows why, too, because they've always been planning to get rid of our boys because they was always strict and honest by the men and wouldn't let the company run the cars fast over the scales, and because Local 992 was always progressive and fighting Mr. Lon Fox and the Farrington machine up in Springfield. And the're using the assessments and suchlike that Local 992 sent in to them to put our own members into the pen. But they ain't going to.

Terrorize Rank and File.

This is the story in brief. There have been stories before of a reactionary officialdom terrorizing a progressive rank and file. But this case is practically unique. The reactionary Farrington-Fox-Cobb machine has combined with the ku klux klan, the coal operators, and the republican party machine to bring progressive union members into capitalist courts on a frame-up of the bureucrats' own construction. Such a flagrant act of treason to the miners has seldom been seen in any labor organization in this country.

Defend Miners!

The twenty defendants may be railroaded. Determined and unscrupulous working class enemies have succeeded in framing-up on labor wnen the "evidence" was even more flimsy than it in this case. Men can still be found anywhere who will swear to anything and against anyone. Juries can still be handpicked and sewed up. The Franklin county miners are appealing to labor everywhere to assist them in this struggle against reaction and to remove from the shield of the union the blight of a united front against the membership of the officialdom and the instruments of capitalist injustice. Victor Cernich can be reached with money and mail at Christopher, Illinois. He is the treasurer of the Franklin County Defense Committee. Or else you can send it to the International Labor Defense, at 23 S. Lincoln St., in Chicago, which is actively cooperating in the defense.

The Negro and the Church

By Walt Carmon

WHAT labor has failed to do, the Negro church has done: It organized the Negro. How strongly it binds him can be seen in the fact that there is a church to every 256 Negroes in the country. The church gives him his ideas, gets his energy and takes his slaved for earnings—for capital.

Belong to More Than One Church.

There are today in the United States, with a total of twelve million Negroes, approximately 47,000 churches with a membership of 5,000,000. The number of churches compared to their membership and the total population, point to a strong penchant for the prvilege to belong to even more than one church—a religious dual unionism, one could call it!

Add to the number of churches the 46,000 Sunday schools with some 3,000,000 pupils, and one begins to realize the enormity of the influence of the Negro church. Here is a giant obstacle to progress, with property estimated at nearly a hundred million dollars taken from the pockets of the deluded, trusting Negro worker, who even today in the south, where four-fifths of the Negroes live, is paid the beggarly wage of one to three dollars a day.

In Chicago alone, a city with the fourth largest Negro populatior in the world, a survey taken in 1920 showed 15 churches in an area populated by 92,000 Negroes—a church to every 614 Negroes!

This all pervading influence of the church among Negro workers is indeed surprising. For after all, the heaven that the Negro church promises is a white one! A Jim Crow heaven, where the Negro will "keep his place" as in a Louisiana village. Explanations to this puzzling problem are being asked often these days by Negro workers as attested by the letters carried only the other day by a leading Negro journal.

57 Varieties.

Despite competing units, the Negro church has its highly developed and centralized body. Of the remarkably high percentage of churches to the population, about 25,000 churches, or well over half of the total number are of the baptist church ("national convention," "free will" and "primitive" baptists) with a membership of about 3,250,000, which would include more than one out of every four Negroes in the country.

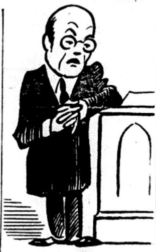
The methodist church with its 57—more or less—varieties is next in size. Some 14,000 churches belong to this domination with a membership of approximately a million and a half.

These are the most influential bodies, binding the Negro to his class interests. But in addition to these there are many others, among them: the churches of "living god," "evangelical," "Zionist" and—the catholic church.

Even among Negroes the catholic church has laid claim to a membership of some 250,000 with a parochial school attendance of 22,000 Negro children, and a good many more at its 134 lower and 15 Negro industrial and high schools.

Strange as it may seem up to the present time, the salvation army has made but little progress among Negroes despite many efforts to reach them.

In addition to the Negro churches, there are also 639,326 Negro members of white churches—an interesting figure to be sure, when compared with Negro membership in the mixed trade unions!



Tentacles of the Body.

That is the sum total of the various church bodies and its membership. But to build such in institution, it must also build its supporting units—its tentacles to absorb the energy and the meager finances of its sorely exploited membership.

For this the Negro church has built its propaganda bureau—its "mission work." For "home mission work" alone, $350,000 is spent yearly. The catholic church, a comparatively insignificant unit of the Negro church, has started sixty-nine new centers in the south with a hundred and seventy-two teachers engaged exclusively in colored missionary work.

The missionary is the propaganda mainstay of the church. Word of mouth must necessarily be the chief means of "opium" purveyance to Negro masses when among them are 1,842,161, ten years of over, who have been deliberately swindled of the right to public school education and who, therefore, form 37.3 per cent of all the illiterates in the country.

But this is only one arm of its extensive propaganda. Five denominational publishing houses are another, reaching the Negro with "inspired literature," injecting into the Negro worker the dream of another world and shutting out from his understanding and his vision the drab, unlovely picture of the one he lives on.

One of its distribution units is the American Bible Society among Negroes, established in 1901. It now annually places over 30,000 copies of the "good book" in the hands of Negroes and in 1923 bettered this average by over a thousand copies in its "most successful year," with illiteracy gradually on the down-grade.

Varied Activities.

The extent of the church activities bespeak the tremendous hold the church has upon the Negro. Not only does the church reach him thru the schools from childhood, but also in later life thru the religious clubs, societies, fraternal orders and other organizations.

The Y. M. C. A., befuddling the minds of all American youth, is most active also among Negroes. Founded first among them in 1853, there are today associations in 110 Negro educational institutions and sixty-two Negro city associations scattered thru twenty-six states.

This tentacle of the church is becoming ever more successful in paralizing the mind in draining the meager earnings of the Negro worker. Negro Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. buildings exist in fourteen cities, having a total Negro population of 943,312, where the Y. M. C. A. has a paid membership of approximately 16,000 among both sexes.

The employer, ever-ready to assist Negro church activities, gives the activities of the Y. M. C. A. among Negroes an equally warm welcome. In a large number of industries where Negroes are employed, the company puts up the building at its own expense, and pays the secretary. Annual and monthly dues are used to pay running expenses. Such work (reports the Negro Year Book) has been started among the Negro miners at Buxton, Ia., Benham, Ky., and Birmingham, Ala., and among the 5,000 Negroe employes of the Newport News (Va.) Shipbuilding company. This "philanthropy" is, of course, a trap for the Negro laborer to keep him from taking such steps as would really bring him some advantage thru self-organization.

Church Aids Imperialism.

Hand in hand with imperialism, the Negro church marches to all corners of the globe, together with the churches of the whites for the enslavement and suppression of its own peoples. Oppressed and exploited in Africa, Asia, the West Indies and other parts of the world by capitalism (preceded often and aided by the church always), the Negro in America contributes thru the chruch $200,000 annually to enable capitalism to better continue the process.

The Negro baptist church has conducted its foreign mission work since 1880 and is now the humble servant of capitalism in Central, South and est Africa.

The African methodist episcopal Zion church (what name could be more imposing!) has in its foreign mission field some 52 stations and 52 churches with approximately 7,000 members.

In this country the Negro church assists the employer in keeping the Negro worker contented at low wages in times of peace and gives aid in time of class war. Today it plays the role of a willing tool of capitalism, as the church has always played the servile role to every governing class in history.

To the Negro workers perhaps nothing could prove this more convincingly than a slight reading of the history of the abolition movement and the vile part the church has played in fighting this movement. But the church that only yesterday approved chattel slavery, today also approves wage slavery. The fact that on the opening day of the recent American Negro Labor Congress at Chicago, the capitalist press carried the warning of a Negro minister against it, with a pledge of the church "to capital, as a means of progress for the race," only attests to the fine sensitiveness of the church to its dangers.

Today increasing numbers of Negro workers, particularly in industry, are learning what their white brothers, thru bitter experience, have learned also—that the church is the handmaiden of capital. The Negro, permeated with religion even more than the white worker, because the Negro masses have been more extensively held in backward agricultural life in the south, will also learn—and quickly—that religion is only what Karl Marx called it, "opium of the people."

CZECHO-SLOVAK COMMUNISTS TO FORCE SOVIET RECOGNITION

PRAGUE, Czecho-Slovakia, Nov. 27.—Following the victory in the recent Czecho-Slovakian elections to the national assembly, the Communist Party has launched a drive to force the recognition of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

The national democratic party which has opposed the recognition of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, lost very heavily in the elections and the anti-Soviet bloc has been badly beaten.

The social-democratic party's executive committee has approved de jure recognition of the Soviets and will align with the Communists jn voting for recognition.

Czecho-Slovakia will be the fifteenth country to recognize the Soviet Union. If the drive that is now being launched by the Communists is successful, and the first of the petit entente to recognize the Soviets.

Czecho-Slovak industrialists are eager for Russian trade and are bending every energy towards the early recognition of the Soviet Republic. Recognition of the Soviet Union will be one of the first things to be discussed by the incoming national assembly and undoubtedly Russia will be recognized.

Says 2,300 Americans are Bribed by Foreign Nations' Decorations

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—(FP)—Sen. Norris has asked Secretary of State Kellogg to send him a list of American officials to whom France, Italy, Belgium, Poland and other countries—owing war debts—have given decorations. He has learned that some 2,300 Americans have been given the legion of honor ribbon by the French politicians in power. He describes this French and Italian policy, in an interview with The Federated Press, as "morally, an attempted bribery."

"If I had a lawsuit to be tried before a jury," he commented, "and I sent baseball tickets to each of the jurors, even though I declared that I did not want to influence their judgement I would be sent to jail for that act.

"Here we find hundreds of newspaper editors, press correspondents in Europe, university presidents, preachers, bankers, diplomats and politicians getting favors from the French government. And presently, when French artillery bombards a Syrian city and hundreds of helpless women and children are killed, the gratitude of these public men to Paris is supposed to have no influence on their discussion of the affair!"

In the Flames of Revolt Twenty Years Ago

By M. A. SKROMNY.

(Reminiscences of the Revolutionary Days of 1905, By an Old Rebel).

Editor's Note. — In connection with the 20th anniversary of the revolution of 1905 we will publish a series of word pictures of the revolution as told by a comrade who participated in the events of that time. We know they will prove interesting to our reades. This is the second story.

II.

The Slaughter of the Innocents.

AFTER the first successful street demonstration the revolutionary organization rapidly began to grow. The downtrodden, exploited and dissatisfied workers of the city began to flock to the organization. The twelve and fourteen-hour day, the endless fines, the beatings from the foreman and the bosses, the inability to organize legally in any way or manner drove the workers into the ranks of the underground revolutionary party. In the spring of 1903 the organization had grown to such an extent that it was decided to arrange another and bigger demonstration.

Preparations for this demonstration were under way when suddenly strange and wild rumors began to spread all over the city. At first we laughed at these rumors. What sane man could believe that the Jews are using christian blood in baking "matzos" (the Passover bread used by religious Jews on Easter)? It seemed so ridiculous that any sane man would just laugh at it. But thousands of circulars appeared and were spread on the market places, tea rooms, saloons etc., warning the christian population to watch its children, for "in connection with the approaching Jewish Easter they will need christian blood for matzos." The local subsidized anti-semite newspaper at the same time began a violent campaign along the same lines.

And then a christian child suddenly disappeared.

The alarm quickly spread all over the city. The backward elements of the christian population, mostly illiterate, "the dark people" as they called themselves, began to repeat the stories of the "christian blood in the Jewish matzos." The anti-semite newspaper carried warnings in big type: "Christians! Watch your children!"

THE Jewish population, the shop keepers, the poor market peddlers began to tremble with fear. The class conscious Jewish and christian workers were indignant and did what they could to stop these wild rumors. The shopkeepers had recourse to their old and tried means of dealing with the government officials: a rich collection was taken up and sent with a delegation to the chief of police and the governor. Both promised to keep "law and order," but at the same time warned them to keep an eyes on the workers. The shopkeepers and landlords willingly and gladly promised to do so.

Two days before Easter the child was found living with some relatives in the suburb of the city. The anti-semite newspaper forgot to mention the fact. The Jewish shopkeepers were happy and doing business as usual.

"You see, it worked,"—they told those who participated in making up the collection for the chief of police,—"he found the child."

The revolutionary organizations decided to postpone the demonstration to a more opportune time.

MERRILY clanged the spurs of the dragoons who were dancing with their girls to the tunes of the mechanical organ of the merry-go-round on Easter. The big square of the new market was crowded to capacity with drunken soldiers, peasants from the nearby villages, and pleasure seekers in general. The square was not paved and the clouds of dust raised from the sand by the dancers and the enormous crowd, floated over the square covering them, the pleasure devices and everything in sight finally disappearing way above in the clear blue sky.

Here and there could be seen a half drunken policeman, and occasionally a military patrol of three or five soldiers would pass by. On every holiday military patrols were sent out over the city to help keep order, because on those days there were more drunkards, fights and debauches than usual. The police was incapable of keeping order on such days. Altho there were was smashed up regularly on every military patrols, the red light district holiday, once by the soldiers of the infantry when the dragoons were on patrol, and the next time by the dragoons, when the infantry was on patrol.

A Memory of the Pogrom

The father of the sculptor was blinded in the pogrom and he made this sad reminder of the dark days, signing it: "To My Father, Blinded in the October Days of 1905.—B. Patlajan."

At this time the infantry was on patrol duty.

Suddenly a cry arouse on the square near the merry-go-round.

A woman, probably drunk, attempted to climb up into the merry-go-round while it began to move. The owner pushed her aside. She slipped, fell and raised a cry. Someone nearby began to fight with the owner. Another raised the cry: "She is killed!" Still another informed those in back of him who tried to find out what had happened, that "A Jew killed a christian woman."

The rumor spread like wild fire. The local fight near the merry-go-round grew into a general riot.

"Kill the Jews!"—cried a stout red faced fellow jumping up on a stand where lemonade was sold. He was later recognized as a local gendarme.

The cry was picked up by the drunken crowd: "Kill the Jews! Kill the Jews!"

SUDDENLY a gang of about twenty-five boys appeared armed with short clubs and began to smash windows and break up shanties and stands in which goods was sold in the market. On account of the holidays all the stores and the market were closed. The crowd from the square at once joined in the robbing and numerous new gangs formed on the spot armed with clubs hatchets, legs from smashed tables, etc. The windows of the richer stores were protected with metal shutters and plain wooden clubs could not smash them. Then axes appeared.

The clang of the axes in the metal shutters, the ringing of the broken windows, the knocking of the wooden stands that were being broken up, the rattling of the furniture and goods that had been thrown out thru the broken doors and windows, the howl of the drunken robbers, all blended into a terrific roar that spread terror all over the city.

The terrible word "pogrom" struck the city, and covered it with a blanket of death.

From the market place the pogrom spread in all directions.

The police and military patrols? Yes, they were there on the spot. Every group of rioters was followed by a captain of the police and a squad of soldiers. I watched many of them from across the street. When a store or building was sufficiently smashed up and robbed, the captain would order:

"Now, boys, move on."

They willingly obeyed and moved on to the next building or store to start all over again.

Usually they met with no resistence as most of the Jews had hidden away in the cellars or garrets, or fled to the houses of friendly christians.

Holy pictures of saints (ikons) began to appear in the windows to designate the homes of the christians, and thereby protect them from the rioters. Many a christian loaned some of his ikons to a friend—a Jew, to protect his home.

IN some instances the rioters met with resistance, with revolver shots. In such cases the police and soldiers would reply with their rifles and guns, as the rioters did not carry any guns the first day, except the leaders who in most cases turned out to be gendarmes. But where the police and soldiers were absent, two men with revolvers would drive off a crowd of a hundred rioters, or more. The rioters did not venture into unknown streets without the escort of police or soldiers.

There weren't many casualties the first day. Only a few were shot by the police and soldiers, a few stabbed with soldiers bayonets, and many beaten up by the rioters.

When darkness fell upon the doomed city the terror of the day turned into a nightmare. No lights could be seen anywhere, the street lamps being smashed and the inhabitants afraid to show any signs of life in the houses, for it meant the invitation of burglars and rioters. From afar could be heard the raise of gangs the mad barking of dogs, and occasional shot, a scream, a volley, and dead silence again for awhile. And then a squadron of dragoons would madly rush by, the hoofs of the horses clattering on the cobblestones.

ЖЕРТВЫ ПОГРОМА.

Victims of a Pogrom Driven from Their Homes.

As the gang of rioters would move nearer the noise turned into a roar. By this time they were all drunk and mad. Many saloons were broken into and the contents freely passed around during the day. They were informed (as it was later proven at the trial) that there will be no objection to robbery. But the "damnable Jews" objected to being robbed, the Jews who killed the christian child, the Jews who were using christian blood for matzos!

SOME of the gangs already saw blood, and like the wild bloodthirsty animals they longed for more. In fact the gangs of rioters were a horde of ferocious beasts under the skillful leadership of the organized power of the state. The police and soldiers were also tired and mad. If any resistence was shown they would fire volleys into the building prepairing the attack and then the rioters would rush in. Anyone found alive in such a building was killed on the spot. Women and children were attacked and in many instances horribly tortured before being killed.

In one case, a blacksmith was crucified and his eyes gouged from his head, in another, a pregnant woman was outraged and after the abdomen was cut open the baby was thrown into the mire and the belly filled with feathers. In one building a baby was thown out of a third floor window and then picked up by the frenzied crowd and torn in two. There were many other bestial atrocities.

In some of the raided buildings fires were started before the rioters left the place. In the streets huge bonfires were made of the furniture strewn all over the streets and squares. The glare of the bigger fires lit up the darkened sky throwing more terror into the hearts of the already terrorized population. The firemen were not allowed to extinguish the fires, and even if given a chance they would not be able to do it. There were many fires and only one fire fighting squad. Most of the streets were closed.

When dawn came the first rays of the sun looked down upon a miserable world. The city presented a view like in mid-winter: everything was covered white with feathers from the ripped bedding as if with snow. The buildings, the trees, the fences, the mud, everything was white. Feathers were floating in the air. The streets were littered with broken furniture, household goods, utensiles, torn clothing. The yawning gaps of the burned buildings sadly looked upon the hungry dogs that were fighting over the corpses strewn in the mud here and there.

THE calm that came just before dawn was broken by the arrival of the peasants from the nearby villages. They were informed that the stores in the city are wide open and that everybody can help himself to anything he wants. They were not robbers, nor murderers, just plain poor, dark peasants. They were badly in need, and when told that they can take anything they want free of charge, they did. They did not see anything wrong about it. After all, they were taking things from the Jews, those people who were using christian blood for matzos. They knew about it, because they were told about it by good people, by christian people.

They came in wagon loads and helped themselves. Nobody interfered. The bands of rioters appeared again and the attacks renewed with more savagery. Now they were out not only to rob, but also to kill. Vodka again appeared and was passed around freely, also to the peasants.

A house was attacked in the neigh-

Economic Prospects in the Soviet Union for the Year 1925-26

THE question if the national economy of the first socialist republic is developing and whether this development is in the direction of socialism is of the greatest interest to every class-conscious European worker. Figures are the best answer to these questions. A few days ago, a special group of Russian university economists (most of them non-party) examined at the instruction of the state planning commission (this commission is an organization which regulates the activity of our various economic institutions, which totals up the past economic progress and indicates economic prospects). The figures indicating the prospects of the main economic centers and sum them up in a special report which was endorsed by the state planning commission.

The work of these economists was extremely complicated. It was performed for the first time in history, for no country in the world has ever elaborated a perspective plan for the coming economic year, for the simple reason that the economic order which prevails everywhere is the capitalist, that is to say the anarchist order. Therefore, the commission does not claim absolute correctness for its deductions. But whatever science can give by way of foreseeing the economic prospects of the socialist republic, has been given thru the said group of economists.

1. Production.

LET us begin with production. In 1915-26 the total production of our rural economy amounts to 11,436,000,000 rubles, (*) including agriculture, 10,236,000,000 rubles. As compared with 1913 (prewar period) this will mean 89 per cent for rural economy as a whole, and 87 per cent for agriculture.

As compared with the previous year (1924-25) agricultureal production will increase 26 per cent, namely, more than a quarter. But is we take only main kinds of corn the increase will be nearly one-half (49 per cent) and will equal 79 per cent of prewar production. As to the production for culture manufacturing purposes this will exceed prewar figures.

With regard to industry we get the following picture: At the conclusion of the civil war, previous to the N. E. P. (New Economic Policy) big industry fell to one-sixth of the prewar production. The economic revival which followed the introduction of N. E. P. gave in 1923-24 already 45 per cent of the prewar production, in 1924-25 70 per cent, and in the coming year 1925-26 94 per cent, which means that the prewar level will be almost reached. In absolute figures we get the following picture:

For 1913 5,620 million rubles.
For 1923-24—2,570 million rubles.
For 1924-25—3,950 million rubles.
For 1925-26—5,280 million rubles.

Key Industries Grow.

BUT it is not enough to give only the figures showing the growth of industry as a whole for a proper characterization of the reconstruction process of industry. If we study this process in three directions: a) the bigger enterprises of the U. S. S. R. importance ("key" industries); b) lesser enterprises under the administration of local Soviets of national economy and c) small state, private and co-operative enterprises, we get the following picture:

General growth of production........	34%
Growth of production in group a	48%
Growth of production in group b	26%
Growth of production in group c	8%

This table shows that heavy industry will make a more rapid stride forward than industry as a whole (48 and 34 per cent).

The year 1925-26 will be significant for the enormous growth of branches of industry producing means of production. Everyone knows that the task during the preceding years was the revival of branches of industry producing menas of consumption. On the other hand, at present the increase will be in connection with manganese mines (9141 per cent), the electro-technical industry ([illegible] per cent the glass industry (71 per cent), the rubber industry (67 per cent), the metal industry (63 per cent). The latter, for instance, produced in 1924-25 a little over one-half of the prewar norm (55 per cent), whilst in 1925-26 it will almost reach prewar level (90 per cent).

Exceed Prewar Level.

THE fact that in 1925-26 the production of fuel and power will exceed prewar level deserves special attention. Particularly, production of electrical power will be almost four times that of the prewar norm. We will more fully realize the meaning of this fact if we recall to ourselves the immortal words of Lenin: Socialism is the Soviet power plus electrification.

The total production of the country (agriculture and industries) in 1925-26 will amount to 18.1 millard rubles. This sum will represent a growth as compared with 1924-25 of 28% and will be equal to 90% of the 1913 production one more such economic year and the national economy of the U. S. S. R. will exceed the levels of the pre-war period. This will mean that in the 10th year of proletarian dictatorship the country will not only have healed the wounds of the imperialist and civil wars, but will be far ahead of the record prewar year.

This will be the best answer to our caluumniators of the type of Kautsky.

2. Manufactured Goods and Fluctuation of Prices.

THE manufactured goods in a country with a peasant population of many millions are closely connected with the progress of the industrialisation of agriculture. This industrialization has made rapid progress during recent years, and this program will be reflected in the process of agricultural reconstruction. In 1925-26 the industrial production of agriculture will increase 27% as compared with the preceding year (3,639,000,000 rubles and 2,857,000,000 rubles). Whilst this industrial production amounts in 1924-25 to 64% of the pre-war level; it will reach 81% in 1925-26. The total industrial production of the country will increase 25% in 1925-26 (9,149,000,000 rubles, and 7,307,000,000 rubles) and will be 79% of the prewar industrial production.

As to prices, the prospects for 1925-26 are as follows: The general price index will decrease 8.3%, the industrial 9%, and the agricultural 8%. As far as industrial products are concerned, the greatest decreases is expected to take place in the rubber industry (over 20%), in the mining industry (over 10%) and in the metal industry (up to 10%).

3. Goods Traffic and Transport.

THE increase of manufactured goods will make great demands on transport facilities. The absolute and relative growth of goods traffic in 1925-26 will be greater than in the preceding year. In 1924-25 it increased by 460 million poods (approximately 11%), in 1925-26 it will increase by 1,524 millon poods, namely an absolutely more than three-fold increase, and as compared with the preceding year 33%.

With relation to 1913, the volume of goods traffic in the perspective year will be 80%. In connection with the growth of goods traffic, we witness reconstruction work on a large scale, much new rolling stock, etc. The state planning commission has fixed for the railway transport development fund 236,000,000 rubles. Out of this sum 100,000,000 rubles are for new constructions, and the remainder for reconstruction. This sum will be obtained in the following manner: 186,000,000 rubles, from the funds of the people's commissariat of ways and communications, and 50,000,000 rubles from the 300,000,000 loan for economic construction.

4. Export and Import.

In conformity with the general growth of industrial production, export and import are making great strides forward. Export will almost treble (178%) from 270,000,000 rubles, to 750,000,000 rubles. This increase will be mainly in connection with agricultural export, which will increase from 204,000,000 rubles to 559,000,000 rubles. (174%). Industrial export will almost double (83%) from 66,000,000 rubles to 121,000,000 rubles. As to import the figures are as follows: in 1925-26 518,000,000 against 339,000,000 rubles in 1924-25. Thus the increase will be 53%.

The payment balance which will amount to 150,000,000 rubles will go to the accumulation of valuta funds, and to increase the current accounts of the State Bank in foreign banks.

The enormous growth in exports and imports shows that great progress has been made in the direction of the establishment of economic relations between the Soviet Union and foreign states. The Soviet Union appears in the role of an exporter and importer on a large scale. The purchases and sales of the Soviet Union will be a determining factor in the economic life of a number of countries.

5. Productivity of Labor, Wages and Housing.

THE social-democratic penny-a-liners have been and are still raising a hue and cry about the process of dispersal among the proletariat of Soviet Russia, the exploitation of the workers, etc. etc. Figures give the lie to this fiction. In 1925-26 the number of workers will increase by more than a quarter of a million, over 20% With respect to the growth of output, the prospects are as follows: output will increase 10% (in 1924-25 31%), and as it is proposed to lower prices also 10%, the value of the workers' output will be on the same level as in the previous year. Just the opposite will be the case with wages. Wages show a great stride forward, especially in heavy industry. For instance, wages in the metal industry will increase 19%, in the mining industry 23%. The growth of the real wage will be greater still, because of lower prices for all produce (for the metal industry, this growth would be equal to 32%, and for the mining industry to 35%). For industry as a whole the increase of the nominal wage will be 16% (the increase takes also into consideration the rent increase, which will take place in 1925-26 in view of necessary repairs and the extension of housing accommodation) and of the real wage almost 20%. This will mean a wage increase up to the prewar level. (In 1924-25 the increase was 83% of the prewar level). But if we compare the total production and wages and see that in 1925-26 the wages percentage in production as a whole will exceed the prewar level. (14.5% and 13.9%).

In bringing to a conclusion this review of wages, it should be mentioned that the year 1925-26 will be particularly auspicous for the transport workers whose wages were lower than those of all the other categories of workers. In 1925-26 their wage will increase 45%.

The above-mentioned figures show primarily two things:

1. That the Soviet government and the Communist Party, who last year carried on a campaign for increased productivity of labor as a prerequisite for an improvement in the economic conditions of the workers, and who pointed out that this economic improvement was bound to come, were right. The promises which were made are being realized. Wages in 1925-26 are making a stride forward although the average output is almost the same as before. In 1925-26 the proletariat of the Soviet Union reaps the fruit of its efforts in 192425. Secondly it is a significant fact that wage increases in the Soviet Union are coinciding with a fierce attack on the proletariat in the capitalist countries in the direction of lower wages. Russian miners had added to every ruble another real 35 copeks, railwaymen—more than 50 copeks. British miners, German textile workers and many other categories of workers are faced with the prospect of lower wages than in 1924. Such is the stabilization of capitalism.

In conclusion, a few figures concerning housing. The housing question in the Soviet Union is very acute, for seven years of war and the growth of the population in large centres exceeding prewar level have created a great disproportion in supply and demand with respect to housing accomodation. The proposed housing expenditure for 1925-26 is 375,000,000 rubles. Out of this sum 100,000,000 rubles are for house repairs, 100,000,000 rubles for the prevention of the further dillapidation of housses and 70,000,000 rubles for the construction of new houses in lieu of those which have become uninhabitable, and 105,000,000 rubles for new houses to cope with the growth of the population.

6. Capital Expenditure.

THE year 1925-26 we shall witness the complete re-establishment and further growth of the basic capital of our industries. (Benches, machinery, buildings, etc.). Capital expenditure will, of course, take place in those branches of industry where progress is most rapid; the metal industry, the electro technical industry, etc. The proposed expenditure will amount to nearly billion rubles. (970,000,00), out of which two-thirds (646,000,000) on new works. The branches of industry which will require the largest amounts are the metal industry (182,000,000 rubles) the textile industry (145,000,000) the oil industry (116,000,000 and electrification work (80,000,000). The sources from which these expenses are to be covered are as follows: the industries themselves can provide 166,000,000 million (i. e. almost one-half of the total amount). 233,000,000 can come from the state budget and 271,000,000 rubles will be obtained by means of long-term credits.

7. Financial Problems (Money Circulation, Credit Budget).

THE accumulation of money grew very rapidly after the introduction of N. E. P., as this was accompanied by a complete change of our economy. But in 1925-26 the accumulation of money will be almost double: it will increase from 890,000,000 rubles to 1,580,000,000 rubles. Current accounts will also be doubled. Thus in 1924-25 deposits and current accounts amounted on an average to 811,000,000 rubles, and in the coming year they will amount 1,733,060,000 rubles. Discount and loan operations will also be doubled (from 1,420,000,000 to 2,850,000,000 rubles)

The growth of the budget in 1925-26 will be considerable. In commodity rubles it will increase from 1,537,000,000 to 3,242,000,000 rubles, i. e. 45%. As compared with 1913 the budget of 1925-26 will amount to 70.6%. It is characteristic that also in the coming year the growth of the budget will be greater than the growth of wholesale production and trade.

Economy of the Soviet Union.

THUS, the figures given above are a definite answer to the question if Soviet economy is progressing. But there is one more question: Is this progress in the direction of socialism or does our economy on the contrary, revert to capitalist methods?

It is figures again which will give us an objective answer. At the beginning of 1924-25 of the ready money in th ecountry 11.7 million rubles belonged to the state and to private enterprises, mainly peasant homesteads 7,500,000 rubles and to cooperatives 500,000 rubles. This means that 62% were socialized, i. e. more than half. In the villages this socialization was very small, 4%, but in the towns it reached 97%, the socialization of means of production amounting to 99% as to the total production of the heavy and light industries, we witness the following process:

Years	State and Co-op.		Private.
	Absolute.*	%	Absolute.	%
1923-24	5562	76.3	1,728	23.7
1924-25	7550	79.3	1,970	20.7
1925-26	9186	79.7	2,334	20.3

Thus we witness a slow but continuous growth (absolute and relative) of socialist element of economy. Very characteristic is also the growth of the concentration of industry, as compared with the prewar period. 56% of the workers of the entire mining and manufacturing industries work in enterprises which employed over 500 workers in 1911. On January 3rd, 1925 the percentage was 68.8%, i. e. more than two-thirds. Another interesting fact is that whilst in America the average number of workers for one enterprise is 151, it is 239 in the Soviet Union. Such is the material basis of socialism.

More satisfactory still is the great success of collectivism in trade and commerce. The following table gives an illustration of this:

Years.	State.	Co-op.	Total.	Priv.	Trade.
1923-24	2,942	2,653	5,595	3,994	49.6
1924-25	5,475	4,753	10,228	3,650	26.6
1925-26	6,342	5,490	11,832	3,728	24.

Thus we witness in trade and commerce not only an absolute growth of state and cooperative trading, (which doubled in the course of three years) accompanied by a certain decrease in private trading, but also an enormous growth of its relative role. In 1923-24 it controlled more than half the market, in 1925-26 its influence will attain 76%.

The commission of non-party university economists concludes its report by the following statement: if we add to everything that has been said that with respect to steam transport and bank credit, all the means of communication and circulation of money and credit notes are already socialized in our country to the full hundred per cent all that remains to be done is to formulate the general task; to maintain firmly the prewar position and to advance steadily every year, even if it were only one step towards socialism wherever the economic situation permits.

Such are the prospects of the national economy of the Soviet Union. Slow but sure progress towards socialism. Real socialism, not socialism in wards—a la Macdonald, Bauer and other "socialist" soothsayers.

STALIN---THE SECRETARY OF THE RUSSIAN COMMUNIST PARTY

JOSEPH VISSARIONOVITCH (Stalin), general secretary of the Communist Party of Russia, was born in 1879. His real name is Djougachvili (Stalin is his revolutionary surname). His father, a Georgian peasant in the government of Tiflis, had carried on business as a shoemaker. Stalin was intended to follow his father's occupation, but he was put into one of the numerous schools founded by the czarist government for religious education and the creation of cadres of instructed priests capable of combatting, with the aid of the police, the germs of the revolutionary movement.

This was during the period of Alexander III., the period of bigoted hypocrisy, darkness and the repression of revoldtionaries.

The school satisfied neither the desires nor the spirit of the young Djougachvili, and before he had finished his studies he was expelled for his "subversive" ideas.

About 17 years ago (at the close of 1896) Stalin became identified with, and took part in, revolutionary activity. He joined the social-democratic party, working at first as a tutor in elementary Marxism, then in agitational work among the workers of Tiflis, Baku and Batum.

Arrest and Siberia.

In 1902, for participation in the organization of demonstrations in Batum, he was arrested, and passed the remainder of 1902 and 1903 in the prisons of Koutais and Batum. In 1903 he was deported to Eastern Siberia for three years.

After the split in 1903 between Bolsheviks and mensheviks at the second congress of the social democratic party, Stalin took sides with the Bolsheviks and Lenin.

In January, 1904, he escaped from Siberia and returned to his revolutionary work interrupted by prison and deportation.

The czarist police exercising an active surveillance over all revolutionaries, and, at any moment, being able to put their hands upon the organizations, Stalin was compelled to resort to clandestine action and to change his name on several occasions. Thus, we find him working under the pseudonyms of Stalin, Koba, Ivanovitch, David, Nijeradze, and Peter Tchijileov.

But it is as Stalin that he is best known now among the working masses of the U. S. S. R.

Following his flight from Siberia, Stalin took up his work in the party. He was a member of the committee of the Caucasian Union, principally occupied in journalism, and was editor of many Bolshevik organs, legal and illegal.

Visits London.

In 1905 he appeared at the conference at Tammerfors. He also took part in the congresses of London and Stockholm, speaking under the name of Ivanovitch.

The revolution of 1905 was followed by the blackest reaction. Scared by the terror of the czarist government, the intellectuals and petty bourgeoisie deserted the revolution. The Bolshevik Party, however did not slacken its revolutionary activity towards the organization of the masses.

Stalin worked in Georgia, but, notwithstanding that he had changed his name and taken all kinds of precautions, the secret police succeeded in discovering him.

In 1908 he was arrested for activity on behalf of the committee of Baku. Once more, prison and deportation. This time he was sent away to the government of Vologda for three years.

But he could not resign himself to inaction, and in 1909 he made his escape and returned to Baku, where he resumed his revolutionary work. Once more he is followed by the police, and once more arrested at Baku. This time he was deported for six years to Solvuitchegod[illegible].

A year later he escaped and went to St. Petersburg (now Leningrad) where, within a month, he was arrested in connection with the activities of the Central Committee of the party. After several months' detention, he was deported for three years to Vologda, escaping again in December, 1911.

In April, 1912, he was deported to the region of Narim. September of the same year finds him once again in St. Petersburg.

In March, 1913, he was arrested for the last time and deported to Tourougau, at Koureika, north of the Polar circle. He remained there up to the February revolution.

Active in the Duma.

The frequent deportations to which Stalin was subjected never weakened his revolutionary energy. During the intervals between arrests and deportations, and while working illegally under the constant surveillance of the secret police, he maintained an intense activity and assumed important party functions.

In 1913 he organized the campaign in St. Petersburg for the elections to the fourth duma of the empire, subseqently leading the Bolshevik fraction in this duma.; 1912-13 saw him one of the editors of the Bolshevik papers Isvestia and Pravda. After the February revolution he was editor of Pravda, The Worker and Soldier, Worker's Path, and The Worker.

Fighting Counter-Revolutionaries.

In 1917, Stalin became a member of the Pan-Russian central executive committee and commissar for nationalities. In 1910-20 he was commissar for workers' and peasants' inspection, and from 1920 to 1923 he was a member of the revolutionary military committee for the republic.

The civil war obliged him, as with most influential members of the party, to go to the front. Here he took part in the campaigns against Yudenitch, against Denikin and against the Poles. For his military services he was decorated with the order of the red flag.

His Posts of Honor.

At the moment, Stalin is general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Russia, a member of the presidium of the Central Executive Committee of the U. S. S. R., and a member of the presidum of the All-Russian Central Executives Committee.

Socialist Paper Dies With Socialist Party

DAYTON, Ohio, Nov. 27—(FP)—The Miami Valley Socialist, long the official weekly of the Socialist movement of Dayton and the surrounding Ohio district, discontinues publication for lack of support. Once the mouthpiece of a strong party organization that was much feared as a contender in Dayton elections, it came on hard times after the war and its printing eventually fell into the control of klan interests. The paper then continued as a link in the socialist chain papers published at Reading, Pa. Joseph Sharts, who defended Bishop William Montgomery Brown in the Cleveland heresy trial, was editor of the paper.

The Spirit of the New Literature in Soviet Russia

By Morris Backall

SOVIET Russia has developed a new spirit in literature. The old writers like Tolstoy, Dostoyevsky, and Chekov are considered out of date. The types and ideals embodied in the literature of the former writers with the exception possibly of Maxim Gorky, are disappearing day by day. The revolution created a new people, brought out a new spirit and embodies new ideals and ideas and longings. Tho mode of life that created an "Anna Karenina," a "Katusha Moslova," a "Nachludov," and "Levine," is a thing of the past. The personalities and types of Dostoyevsky that were portrayed in "The Possessed" and "Brothers Karomosov" are not expressing the reality and life of the new order of Soviet Russia, there is no room for a 'Stavrogen" an "Alosha" or "Ivan" or even a "Dimitri Karomosov." The conditions of reality and life are so different that a reader of present day literature in Soviet Russia shakes his shoulders and pities the people of the past who had to lead a double life—a life torn to pieces with inner struggles, with inner consciousness, with inner depths that crushed both spirit and body. The result of their life was suicide or the insane asyleum.

Dostoyevsky, Tolstoy, and Chekov were truly very sincere and very deep artists, but they lived and labored and worked in a period of transition—when the air and breath of Russia was changing. There was an inner struggle of the personality that was torn to pieces, and the artist portrayed to us this struggle and this suffering and this agony of human life.

THE revolution of October compelled the population of Russia to undergo a terrific struggle, to undertake a test which concentrated the energy of the people and hammered out types that unite their inner consciousness with their outside activity and gave unity to the life of the Russian people.

The hard and cold and real facts of life developed an ideal of comradeship among the new population of Soviet Russia. Sacrificing their lives and freedom for the revolution, holding out against the enemies in a struggle for years, learning the truth of unity and of fighting brought an ideal that gives value and meaning to the lives of the Russian inhabitants. They cannot any longer understand the sentimental inner struggle that was going on in the personalities and types portrayed in the old Russian literature. The Soviet Russia inhabitant is now a unified personality. He is seeking his ideal in the collective ideal of the workers and peasants of the country and has an aim that is confronting the peoples all over the world. His problems are known to him. He learned how to face them with cold reason and seek a solution of the problems, not in his own inner seeking but the struggle of his class, of his country, and of the people all over the world. He has a reason why to live; even when the present is bitter and cold and hard.

The workers and peasants of Soviet Russia with their new problems and ideas and ideals, brought out a new element of writers and poets and artists, the spirit prevailing in the new literature and poetry and art is entirely of a different type than the former. The personalities and ideals breathe with health, with a future, with a name. It is true that Tolstoy or a Dostoyevsky or a Chekov is not yet to be found in the new literature because the writers and poets and arists may yet be too young to grasp the new situation in its manifold aspect.

On the other hand the character of prose is such that the material and the personalities must rest to be portrayed in literature.

THE peasants of Russia who are more static, till the soil in summer and warm months and lie on the ovens most of the time in winter, and speak out wonderful words of wisdom are mostly portrayed in the present day Soviet Russian literature. The landscape of the peasant is the field, and the forest and the lake. And his life streams with color and tune. The worker is occupied in the big city; eight hours a day he works in the factory, eight hours a day he sleeps and eight hours a day he moves the wheels of the revolution. The artist sees him in his mobile moments and is almost unable to get a hold of his inner life and moods and ideals.

But the worker is portrayed in the new Soviet Russian literature to a certain degree, but this may be called only preparations and efforts for the great novel and drama that will have to be written and brought out in the Russian new literature.

The spirit of the new Russian literature may be divided in two parts: the first is the portrayal of the first steps of the revolution and of the years of famine and suffering and attacks that Soviet Russia went thru. A. Navikov Briboi pictures in his novels how peasants went to confiscate the property of a biglandowner. cate the property of a big landowner the cellar, so they went down and became drunk, pushed each other, beat each other, hung on to the ceiling to get next to the whiskey and then took all the belongings away to their homes put fire to the remainder. But from the big city came the artillery men—a son of the village—a red army soldier and heard the sighs at night and said: "Not the landowner's property is burning, but Soviet Russia is on fire." A peculiar personality is brought out—one peasant—"Holiday" —covered with rags, stood and looked on. He liked to see the peasants carrying the belongings of the landowner but he didn't take anything himself. He remarked: "They suffered enough, they were cheated enough, so at least once they repaid with revenge." His wife pushed him on to participate in the affair but he said: "I want to be poor, I am one of the people." Another of his stories pictures a soldier arriving from the army, with jewels and money and keeping himself aloof from the entire population. Of course he was in the white army and he despised "the teacher" and shed suspicion on his wife and his own parents. He was entirely a stranger to everybody and he had to disappear from the scene of life. The village would not tolerate such a personality in its midst.

SEVOLOD Ivanov is one of the most popular writers of present day Soviet Russia. He gives us the entire tragedy that the revolution went thru in its fight against the many, many enemies that were confronted in the far away corners of Soviet Russia. He even pictures to us how a provincial city among the Kirghiz went thru the first days of the revolution. The contractor who held in his grasp the entire population could not understand what is happening. A steamer came along, landed a Soviet. It occupied his house. It brot a change in the life of the city. Workers marched thru the streets like the most important personalities. The Kirghiz population showed opposition to every rule of the church and of the employers. For the life of him he cannot grasp what it means. But the cosacks are expected. They will fight this new people. And of course he is with the cosacks. Months of struggle went on and the revolution finally succeeded in wiping out the remnants of counter-revolution and with it went the entire old life and human relations. The Kirghiz and the workers and the peasants became firm and strong and independent in both their physical and mental life.

Seyfulina is a young writer that gives us the entire situation of the first revolutionary days in her volume of short stories: "Putniki"—walkers. She tells us not only of the outside hardships but also of the innner struggles and suspicion and impossibilities that the revolution lived thru. Pavel was the chairman of the Ispolcom of a middle-sized town. He is one of the intelligetzia with individual struggles and sympathies. His closest friend is a social-revolutionist whom he warns to leave the town or be arrested. But he gives very severe orders to the peasant soldiers—"Pulyamiotchiki." The chief of this branch of the army has a suspicion that Pavel may be bought by the enemies, and when Pavel is occupied for days and nights in saving the revolution he makes a single handed raid in his home, scaring his wife, looking into the trunks for money that the bourgeois may have sent to Pavel, and he finds nothing. On the square the pulyamiotchiki demand alcohol from the drug store. The druggist replies that if Pavel will issue a permit he will give the alcohol. They call for Pavel. He refuses to issue the permit, shouting: "Alcohol is for the hospitals—for the sick." A revolver is placed to Pavel's temples. They shout: "Give a permit or you'll be shot." He stands ready to die. The workers of the factories are running with bayonets to save Pavel. They came in time. They bear him on their shoulders thru the streets of the village, shouting, "You are our hero, you saved the revolution from disgrace." Seyfulina also portrays heroes among the workers who sacrificed their blood, their lives and their families for the revolution.

THE second element of the new literature in Soviet Russia is the very broad portrayal of the new life of reconstruction, that is embodied together with the name and depth of Comrade Lenin. Seyfulina has a legend that was created among the peasants about Lenin. Nikitin in his story on the field brings out wonderfully how in the distant villages the news of Lenin's death was met with such a spirit and brought out such feelings towards the revolutionary country among its own population that we in far lands cannot fully comprehend. A peasant that never talked, stands up and pours out his feelings and confesses their non-sincere attitude towards the Communistic commonwealth, openly before the public he tells how he was thinking only of his own belly, speculating with the misery of the people, but at the fresh grave of Lenin he swears to become a true, honest revolutionist.

The spirit of the new Russian literature is entirely in conflict with the literature of Tolstoy, Dostoyevsky and Chekov because it embodies the personalities that are collecting a unified life and a unified ideal and a strong foundation on which to build the life of society and existence of humanity. There is no weakening, no sighing, no sentimentality in the personalities and types of the new Russian writers. They are conscious of their task, they know what they seek, and they believe in their future. Because they belong to the world yet to come while the old Russian literature portrayed a decaying and a decaying mode of life.

NOTE: Two books recently issued in America present an accurate view of the new Russian literature. "Flying Osip," is a collection of short stories representative of the most significant present day Russian writers. "Literature and Revolution" by Leon Trotsky, is a brilliant criticism of not only the new Russian literature which he analyzes in detail, but also the relation of literature to the revolution. Both books can be secured thru The DAILY WORKER Publishing Co.

Letters from Our Readers

Esperanto Congress in Vienna.

To The DAILY WORKER:—The annual congress of the "Sennacieca Asocio Tutmonda," an Esperanto revolutionary organization, took place in Vienna on Aug. 11-15, where 130 delegates from 26 countries were present.

The reactionary Austrian government refused vises to our numerous Russian comrades—except to Comrade Ernest K. Drezen whom, it seems, they had to reluctantly admit as he is a member of the all-Russian Central Executive Committee of Soviets.

Comrade Drezen at length recited how Esperanto has been practically applied in the Soviet Union by the recently visiting Swedish and German trade union delegations. He invited, in the name of the Russian comrades, the next congress to Leningrad.

As a protest to the Austrian government Comrade Drezen, midst deafening applause, was unanimously elected as chairman of the congress.

The following resolution was adopted unanimously:

"Whereas, Comrades Paul Grouch and Walter Trumbull are revolutionary Esperantists and, altho not members of our organization, acted more in accordance with its spirit than most of us would have done under similar circumstances, therefore be it

"Resolved, that the above mentioned comrades be hereby elected as honorary members, for life, of the S. A. T."

Comrade Norbert Barthelmess, the editor of our weekly Sennaciulo (antinationalist), defended his stand of publishing more Communist articles than others. It is not his fault, he stated, that the Communist comrades are more industrious than the anarchists or the adherents of the Second International. He refused to print articles on the Bolshevik "cruelties" to political prisoners because our is a cultural—united front—organization and therefore it cannot allow any factional polemics. He was sustained by a large majority.

George Saville.

"SUN UP"

Wall Street in its forsight is once more showing the masses, at present using the screens, that they must in case of emergency, stand by it and guard the gold squeezed from their blood. Once of the latest films produced for the purpose is, "Sun Up."

Let, "Sun Up" be a warning to every worker that the time is nearing when he must organize and build a solid united front to combat the approaches of his enemy, the capitalist class which has always subdued him and would continue to do so.

German Red Aid Calls on Workers to Demand Amnesty of Politicals

BERLIN, Nov. 27—The German Red Aid issues an appeal to the workers to continue the fight for a full amnesty, for the release of all proletarian political prisoners. The Hindenburg amnesty was actually only an amnesty for counter-revolutionaries, for the leaders of the Kapp-Putsch and for the fascist murderers. All of them were released or the proceedings stopped, despite the fact that hundreds of murders were committed by them. Of the workers, who were sentenced in the period between Jan. 1 to Oct. 15, 4,738 years of hard labor and prison, only 502 were amnestied. Thousands remain in prison and every day German class justice passes new sentences.

Lore and Loreism

By JOS. KALOUSEK, Secretary of the Czecho-Slovak Fraction Bureau, Workers (Communist) Party of America.

Ludwig Lore, until recently a member of the C. E. C., secretary of the German bureau and editor-in-chief of the Volkszeitung, was expelled from the party by the unanimous vote of the national convention of the Workers (Communist) Party, held in Aug. 1925.

Who is Lore and why was he expelled from the Workers Party?

Lore was the leader and spokesman of the remnants of the menshevik and social-democratic wing in the Workers Party and as such was continually in conflict either with the C. E. C. of the party, or with the Communist International itself. Every decision of the party as well as every decision of the Communist International found in Lore its bitter opponent.

Open Enemy of the C. I.

Lore, like many others before him, posed as a Communist and continually declared himself a loyal supporter of the C. I., at the same time that he sabotaged its decisions and propagated his own views, in contradiction to those of the C. I. Twice he was called upon to defend himself before the C. I. and the third time the C. I. itself tried to compel him to go to Moscow to defend himself, but in vain.

Even after his expulsion Lore declared himself as a loyal supporter of the C. I. But only for a moment. Hardly a week passed and he changed his tactics towards the C. I. and from a "loyal supporter" he became an open enemy. He is now engaged in organizing the "International Workers' Society," the aim of which is nothing else but to break the lines of the Workers Party. Only about half a dozen of his personal friends followed him into this new counter-revolutionary organization, which must end up sooner or later, in the arms of the social patriots. There is no other way. Such is the course of all such traitors. For a certain time they pose as innocent victims then, seeing their isolated position, they begin to spit out upon their former comrades all their wrath and proceed to stab them in the back. This was the way followed by Levi, Hoglund, Friesland, Bubnik, Beranek. . . etc. This very same way is followed now by Lore.

Follows in Footsteps of Bubnik.

Bubnik attacked the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia from the rear in its most critical time, the time when the party was organizing and leading the popular demonstrations against the high cost of living. Almost immediately after his expulsion he organized the handful of his followers into a so-called "Independent Communist Party" and started to publish a daily paper, being supported of course by the bourgeois Czecho-Slovakian government.

Beranek at the last conference of the Czecho-Slovak section, held in March 1924, also declared his loyalty to the C. I., at the time when he had his entire plan of desertion carefully prepared. After his desertion he also organized a so-called "Marxian" Federation, which pretended to "follow in the footsteps of the C. I.," but which, right from the beginning, followed in the footsteps of the Second International, and by this time has melted into it entirely. The aim of all such "Communists" is the same, conditions and circumstances only are different. They all begin and end the same way.

The Czecho-Slovak fraction bureau of the party, taking into consideration all these circumstances and also the serious situation in which our party finds itself now, during its reorganization and bolshevization period appeals to all the Czecho-Slovak workers who are members of our party to unite the ranks into one solid body for a fight against whatever remnants remain of Loreism and Beranekism.

A Lesson For all Comrades.

Comrades: try your best to convince all members who still hold to such ideas, of their erroneous and doubtful standpoint and bring them into the ranks of the reorganized party. Many circumstances, as for instance, the old and inherited traditions, habits and methods of the old organizational apparatus, and probably the insufficiency of our educational activities, are at the bottom of the fact, that some of the members still do not see and do not understand the necessity of the reorganization. Help them along; but fight with all possible means against those who stand against the reorganization of the party in principle. Only in a reorganized party, which will respond to the seriousness of the situation and to the coming political and economical conditions, will we be in a position to become real Communists and Bolsheviks, going forward in the spirit of Leninism.

There will be many obstacles. It is necessary to discuss them thoroly and then act. If you become conscious of all the obstacles, you will easily overcome them; if not, they will appear later when you probably will not be in a position to deal with them successfully.

The object of every party member at present should be the bolshevization of our ranks!

Long live the Workers (Communists) Party!

Long live the Communist International!

Pershing Rule Menaces Tacna-Arica

By MANUEL GOMEZ, Sec'y.
All-America Anti-Imperialist League

CHILE'S withdrawal from the meetings of the Tacna-Arica plebliscitary commission must not be interpreted as meaning that the commission has been supporting the demands of Peru. It is not Peru, but the United States, that Chile is afraid of . . . and Peru is afraid, too.

Recent announcements from Arica reveal that the plebiscitary commission, appointed by President Coolidge as an international body, has no power other than what Gen. Pershing is willing to allow it. The commission is supreme, but Gen. Pershing has "power to entertain appeals from the commission." Pershing has exercised his power to prolong the stay of American naval forces in Arica, he has postponed the date of the plebiscite and is doing everything in his power to thwart it. The opinion prevails that he is working according to carefully elaborated instructions, with a view to insinuating American imperialism so deeply into the situation that its influence will be felt thru all of South America.

In his letter of withdrawal to Gen. Pershing, Agustin Edwards, the Chilean representative declares:

"I shall not resume my attendance at the meetings of the plebiscitary commission until they shall include in their agenda the registration and election regulation and the dates for the opening of the registration and for the holding of the plebiscite. . .

"The arbitral award provides that the primary duty of the plebiscitary commission shall be to proceed at once to formulate the regulations governing the plebiscite and to fix the date thereof, and early four months have elapsed since the plebiscitary commission began to function, a term which corresponds to that fixed by the arbitrator (President Coolidge) for the appointement of its members.

"The plebiscitary commission received on Aug. 12, nearly four months ago, the draft of the registration and election regulations presented by the Chilean member. In the first days of October, nearly two months ago, it received the draft of the registration and election regulations presented by the Peruvian member. The member representing the arbitrator has, therefore, had ample time to examine the points of view of the parties to the plebiscite and to decide upon the election regulations that will guarantee the right of both."

Reports that Pershing has been favoring Peru are given out by the correspondents purely for propaganda purposes, to hide the fact that American imperialism has been playing, not Peru's game but its own. While it is true that one or two small decisions have operated to strengthen the position of Peru as against Chile, the general trend of the decisions has been rather favorable to Chile. Chilean police are given exclusive right to patrol the Tacna-Arica district, and the conditions of "Pres. Coolidge's award" are such that Chile is almost certain to win the plebiscite, when and if it should be held. It is possible that American interests may find it more profitable to switch the victory to Peru, but everything indicates that the nitrate magnates would prefer it otherwise, at least at this time. Arica is a leading nitrate port, and there are undoubted advantages in having the Chilean nitrate fields linked up with it.

Not all the advantages are on this side, however. The main thing for the American nitrate and other interests is that whatever country receives the nominal sovereignty over Tacna and Arica must be easily dominated by the imperialist will of the United States.

All South America is looking askance at the antics of Gen. Pershing and his side in the Tacna-Arica affair. Such things have long been familiar in Central America and the Caribean region, where the "Monroe doctrine" is mightily enthroned, but this is the first time that the peculiar method of "Monroe doctrine" penetration has pushed so far south. The whole tread of American imperialism indicates that it will not be the last.

IN THE FLAMES OF REVOLT

borhood where I was born. I knew everybody in that neighborhood as I had moved from there only a few years previously. It was the house at Aziyatskaya No. 13.

THE landlord, an old feeble Jew, and some of the neighbors hid in the garret. There was a small child with them. They were all shaking with fear. When the rioters broke into the house the child began to cry. The mother in an attempt to stifle the cry smothered the baby.

But the cry was heard. They were discovered.

"Hurra! Here they are! Let's get them!"—stormed the crowd.

Some of the rioters began to crawl up to the garret. In their attempt to escape, the victims broke thru to the roof, but they were captured on the roof killed and thrown down, others jumped down. The woman was attacked and thrown down from the garret together with the child that was already dead. Those who were not killed outright died under the ironclad heels of the boots of the wild crowd.

Altogether seven were killed in that one house. Some escaped by feigning death.

The pogrom raged all day and late into the night.

In the meantime telegrams were being exchanged between the governor and the ministry of inner affairs.

Next morning the peasants from the villages who attempted to get to town were met at the city limits by police and ordered to return back home.

"Why, what happened?" they inquired. They were informed that it was "for two days only, now you must go home." They went home.

NO crowds were permitted to congregate in the streets. The order of the police captain was usually sufficient to disperse a crowd. It was not necessary to use arms. Occasionally a policeman or a soldier would use the fist or butt of the gun, but more for the fun of it. Gradually the storm died down.

There were hundreds killed, thousands wounded, over a hundred girls outraged. Some of them committed suicide later on. Many went mad.

Among the killed rioters were found a gendarme and some policemen dressed in civilian.

For months the mute witnesses of the tragedy—the burnt and blackened buildings,—stood as sentinels over the dark and deserted streets. Some of the owners were killed, others left town. The house at Aziyatskaya No. 13 was not touched by a human hand for over a year. The blood of the victims was on its walls. People were afraid to pass near that house at night. There were rumors that at night wailing was heard there, that was the blood of the innocent crying. The superstitions dark people, christians and Jews alike, believed these rumors. The christians would cross themselves passing that house, the Jews would whisper a prayer.

THE political demonstration of the revolutionary organizations was postponed indefinitely.

Later on we learned that the pogrom was arranged at the suggestion of Von Pleve, the minister of inner affairs, for the sole purpose of frustrating our demonstration. The local gendarmes were the organizers of the pogrom, they also printed the circulars about the christian blood in matzos. The pogram was also expected to bring in race hatred between the Jewish and christians workers and thereby prevent their organization against the common foe, the murderous bloody czaristic government.

This fiendish plan worked for a while, but not too long, as will be explained in the other stories to follow.

Police Guard Millions.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—An entire block in the heart of the financial district was cleared of pedestrians and thrown under police guard to protect millions of dollars in cash, securities and jewels in the vaults of the United States Safe Deposit company, when fire broke out in an extension occupied by a branch of the Western Union Telegraph company.

U. S. Admiral in Spain.

BARCELONA, Spain, Nov. 27.—Admiral Roger Welles, commanding the American naval squadron now in European waters, arrived here aboard the U. S. S. Pittsburgh.

Admiral Welles left for Madrid to deliver a greeting from the United States to the king and queen.

Chicago Bandits Make Haul.

Six bandits held up an automobile carrying money from the Drovers Trust & Savings Bank to the Continental and Commercial National Bank, shot and probably fatally wounded a policeman and escaped with two chests containing more than $50,000 in money.

Save the Workers' Children from the Claws of the Capitalists!

IT is said that the Turks of the middle ages would never kill any young Christian boys who happened by any chance to fall into their hands. Nor would they condemn them to the slavery of the ordinary kind. These lads of the enemy faith would be kept separate and be given a carefully planned uphringing and education calculated to instil in them the most extreme fanaticism for the Moslen cause and most bitter hatred of the christian world. From these originally christian youths the Turks would recruit their best and fiercest troops—those that prided themselves particularly on their devotioon to their Mussulmen masters the Janisseries. And the whole christian world admitted that the greatest force it had to meet, the greatest obstacle it was up against, were these converted christian Janisseries.

Enemies Within the Workers' Ranks

A SITUATION like this, only a thousand-fold worse, exists right before our eyes to-day and yet most of us pay no attention to it. When the workers are slowly and painfully trying to organize themselves so as to be able to offer a stronger front to their enemy, the boss, they often meet with those who refuse to be organized, who refuse to join a union of any sort, because it is "un-American" to try to use "force" or the "threat of force" (a strike, etc.) against the boss. Who are these people? They are workers! Whom do they serve and fight for? The bosses. The Janisseries, at least, were fighting for their own interests which were at one with those of their Turkish masters, but these misguided workers are serving the capitalists directly against every interest of their own. When "patriotic" workers who do not "believe" in strikes scab on their fellow workers and break the strike, they are doing the same thing on a greater scale. Who are the soldiers and policemen that fire at striking workers at the command of the boss spoken thru the government? Are they not workers or the sons of workers? And yet they are serving as the Janisseries, as the tools of their bitterest foes, the capitalists who grow fat on the labor of their fellow workers. When, year in and year out, workers go to the polls and vote to keep in office this or that politician who is nothing but a puppet manipulated by the House of Morgan or by the Rockefeller's when these same workers are deaf to the call of the more far-sighted of their brethern to break with the boss' parties and strike out in a party embracing all labor—are they not fighting blindly for the cause of their enemies? This is the situation: The workers and the bosses stand opposed as two separate classes with different and antagonistic aims and interests as two armies constantly engaged in some form or another of struggle. Yet the strongest support the capitalists have consists in the masses of mislead workers who do not see their position in the struggle and who, contrary to their own interests, strike out blindly in defense of the masters that enslave them.

"Give Us the Young and We Have the Future!"

HOW can such a remarkable situation come about? Let us turn to the little story about the Janisseries for an answer. The Janisseries were turned into crack fighters for the Turks because the Turks got hold of them young and trained them for that purpose. It was one of the most fundamental principles of the Jesuits: "Give us the young, and we have the future." The capitalists go on the same principles. If they can only get hold of the working class children when they are young and their minds are unformed, then trust it to them and their learned and trained servants to make these children grow up into workers cut out on quite a capitalist model—into a strikebreakers, scabs, patriots, blind supporters of the bosses.

Workers' Children—Victims of Bosses.

AND get hold of them young the bosses certainly do. When the child is just old enough to begin forming more or less permanent social conceptions, he is sent to the public schools. Now even the more honest capitalist "educators" themselves will hardly deny that the fundamental purpose of the school is to train the "youth" (that means, of course, the working youth) into good, patriotic, and law-abiding citizens, "adapted" to the society in which they live. What is a "good" citizen? One who swears ten times a day that America and all its institutions are just perfect and need only to be maintained in their "pristine virtue." What is a "patriotic" citizen? One who goes to war cheerfully and gets butchered or crippled fighting for the greater profit of his boss all the while believing that he is fighting "for the greater good of humanity." One who scabs on his fellow workers and breaks their strikes because it is not in accord with "American traditions" to go on strike. What is a law-abiding citizen? One who believes that the words coming from congress or from the courts both of which are simply the megaphone of the bosses, are the sacred edicts of "abstract justice" falling with equal weight on the rich and the poor. Who is "adapted" to the conditions in which he lives? The abject slave, who is horrified at the very thought of freedom, and who thanks god that he is "permitted" to nibble his crust in "peace."

Public Schools—Poison Factories.

This is the mission of the public school and that this mission is carried we see every day around us in actual life. Who incites the children to look upon their fathers as criminals and loafers and "un-American" if they go out on strike? Who fills them full of the most poisonous patriotic venom and hate for the workers of other countries? Who lauds every brutal act of the government designed to seat the bosses a little more firmly in the saddle or squeeze a little more profit out of the workers? Who applauds the policemen when they break strikers' heads or the militiamen when they slaughter and cripple hundreds of workmen? Who urges the workers' children to stick to and trust the capitalist parties and who keeps any thought of the party of labor from their heads? There is but one answer. The public school—the factory where anti-labor, pro-capitalist poison is manufactured and injected into the workers' children.

School Not Alone.

EVERY institution in capitalist society in turned toward the "holy" purpose of corrupting the minds of the children of the workers. The movies, the newspapers, the children's books, the general run of boys and girls clubs, etc.—all can be shown to be consciously directed to that end. Above all the boy and girl scouts! Supported morally and financially by the biggest capitalists of this country, organized and administered upon the plans laid down by these finance lords, the boy scouts aim at rendering the children "loyal to god and country," at "preparing them for service to their country in peace (strikebreaking, scabbing, murdering strikers, etc.) and in war (slaughtering foreign fellow workers for the benefit of the bosses.)" Is there any wonder now why the large majority of working class children grow up into enemies of their own class, into reserves for the capitalists to be used against their own class fellows, perhaps against their own fathers and mothers. Is there any wonder?

The Problem—Save the Children.

There is no wonder: But there is a sore problem for every worker who has the good of his class at heart, who cannot bear see his own children grow up into his enemies, into the Janisseries of his boss. There is a sore problem for every militant worker who, as the days go by, sees his children grow more and more estranged from him, from his ideals, his hopes, his dreams, from his class. There is a sore problem for every worker who fights bitterly, devotedly, for the victory of his class—for how can his class conquer when most of it take their stand on the other side.

FOR all these the answer is: We must save our children from the fate that the capitalists have in store for them: We must make our children into clear and militant working class fighters! Our children belong to our class—the bosses must not be allowed to corrupt them!

Young Pioneers of America.

The militant working class children of this country have already set up an organization that is out to fight the poison of the bosses and to draw in all workers children into the class struggle at the side of their fathers and brothers. This organization, the Young Pioneers of America, has already spread all over this country and there is hardly a city or town in the United States where it has not yet reached. It aims to root out the capitalist anti-labor poison from the minds of the workers' children and to bring them up in the spirit of the proletarian class struggle. It aims to show the children that their place is side by side with their parents and brothers and sisters in the ranks of the working class. Of course, the lighter sides of their activity such as games, singing, plays, and dramatics—are not neglected, but it is all directed to one aim, it is all animated by one common purpose—to help the children of the workers develop so as to be able to take the place that is properly theirs in the ranks of labor.

Every Workers' Child a Pioneer.

EVERY worker who understands what fate the capitalists are holding out for his children and who wants to save his children from that fate, every worker who wants his children to grow up loyal to the working class and its ideals—every such worker must see that his children join the Young Pioneers of America. There is an organization in every town, in your also; if you don't know anything about it, write to the national office of the Young Pioneers of America, 1113 West Washington Blvd., Chicago, Ill. You will receive all desired information there. Every workers' child in the Young Pioneers ,of America!

The Young Comrade!

The Young Pioneers of American publish a monthly paper called The Young Comrade. This paper is gotten out for the working class by the working children. It is full of interesting stories, news, poems, pictures, etc. showing the truth about the world we live in and explaining the duty of the workers' children. Every workers' child should read it! It costs only 5c. an issue and the subscription rates for a whole year are only 5c. Let your children have the Young Comrade! It will help to combat the poison instilled by the capitalist schools. Every workers' child a subscriber to the Young Comrade!

Join the Young Pioneers of America!

HAIL FIRST DISTRICT CONVENTION OF NEW YORK YOUNG PIONEERS

IT is now over two years that a new force first made its appearance on the scene of the working class movement of New York. It is now over two years that the militant workers of New York began to grow accustomed to find conscious and spirited proletarian children coming to their mass meetings and demonstrations, taking part in their everyday struggles against the capitalists and against the forces of capitalism, and in every way living up to their role as comrades in the struggle of the whole working class. It is now over two years that the agents of the bourgeoisie, the police and the school authorities, suddenly awoke to the existence of a determined and active organizations of Communist children intent upon fighting the class struggle in the schools and in winning away the masses of workers' children from the influence of capitalism and for the working class. It is now over two years that the Young Pioneers of America—then known as the Junior Section of the Young Workers League—made its appearance as a factor in the working class movement of New York.

Pioneers First Convention.

Now the Young Pioneers of the New York district are preparing for their first district convention! This is an event of historic importance in the revolutionary movement of New York City and its surroundings as well as of the whole country. The first district convention is a living symbol of the two years of activity and struggle on the part of the Young Pioneers and the Young Workers League that have resulted in a fine, conscious, active and spirited Communist children's organization, participating in the struggles of the whole working class, carrying on the struggle in the schools, fighting tooth and nail to save the working class children from the claws of the capitalists. The first district convention marks the beginnings of the reorganization of the Pioneer League on the basis of school nuclei of the consolidation, of the organization into a real league, of the real struggle against child labor and child misery, of the systematization and development of the school struggle—in a word, of what may be called without any sentimentalism, the bolshevization of the Young Pioneers of America!

For this reason, since the development of a militant revolutionary organization of proletarian children is of the greatest importance not only for the children of the workers but for the widest masses of the proletariat and the proletarian youth, the whole of the revolutionary working class must consider the first district convention of the New York Young Pioneers as an event of the greatest significance for them in their struggle.

Greetings to the first district convention of Dist. No. 2 of the Young Pioneers of America!

Long live the struggle for the winning of the masses of proletarian children from the clutches of capitalism!

Long live the Young Pioneers of America!

MUSSOLINI CALLS HIMSELF THE STATE

FRANK FARRINGTON'S MACHINE AIDING CAPITALIST COURT TO SEND UNION MINERS TO PRISON

By MAX SHACHTMAN.
(By I. L. D. Press Service)

ZEIGLER, Ill., Nov. 29.—"The entire resources of the organization will be used to bring those to justice who so dastardly attacked the sub-district officials in the discharge of their duties," was the substance of a telegram sent by Frank Farrington to E. R. Hewlett, one of a committee of three appointed by Orient, Ill., Local 303 of the United Mine Workers to protest to Farrington against the action of sub-district officails bringing to court for prosecution twenty Zeigler miners.

The union miners not only of Orient but of the entire county of Franklin and outside of it are aroused by what is known far and wide to be a frame-up against the progressive miners of Zeigler Local No. 992. The militant membership of Zeigler has always been one of the sharpest thorns in the side of the Farrington machine's attempt at undisputed and autocratic rule.

Farrirngton Aids Frame-Up.

Farrington is now actively aiding the prosecution to railroad the defendants to the penitentiary. The growing resentment against the actions of Lon Fox and Del Cobb, miners' sub-district officials who are backing the prosecution and bringing the charges, is being answered by Farrington in the words he telegraphed to Orient.

The miners here point out that Farrington conveniently overlooks the years of attacks made by himself and the sub-district machine against the Ziegler officials whom he has finally suspended. The constant robbing of elections and general reign of terror experienced by the local unionists for insisting on their rights and duties as members of the United Mine Workers of America receive no mention from Farrington, who inspired these attacks himself. CAROLINA JAIL OFFICIAL KILLS NEGRO CONVICTS

Prison Head Brutally Beats Inmates

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ALBEMARLE, N. C., Nov. 29.—Tales of most brutal and revolting beatings of Negro convicts for minor infringements of prison discipline are now being related in the trial of M. C. Hanford, Stanley county convict superintendent. Witness after witness that has been called to the box have described the cruel beatings that Hanford has given Negro convicts.

Die Within Few Hours

Many of the convicts were beaten so unmercifully that they died within a few hours of the beatings.

Two of the white convicts in the prison testified that they had seen two Negroes beaten by the superintendent in one afternoon and that both of these men died on the same night.

Died From "Overheat."

Dr. C. M. Lentz testified that he had examined the negroes on the evening of their death and denied that these men were beaten and stated that the prison superintendent and the wardens had told him that the men had died from "overheat."

The judge scored this attempt of the doctor to make light of the death of these two Negroes and asked him whether he had ever heard of any negroes dying from "overheat."

It was finally brought out that the men had died as a result of the wounds inflicted by the inhuman beating delivered them much to the discomfiture of the jail superintendent.

Inquisition Tortures Used.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 29.—Methods approximating the torture devices of the Inquisition were revealed to be in operation in Georgia prisons to "discipline" convicts for infringements of jail rules was exposed in a report by the sub-committee of the Georgia house of representatives penitentiary committee on conditions in Georgia prisons. In one camp prisoners were backed up to a post and their arms chained behind it. The arms were then fastened as high as possible and the chains hooked to nails. The prisoner was left in this suspended position for several hours.

Use "Sweat" Boxes.

In another camp prisoners were fastened to a hollow box so that they could not move their arms. Molasses was smeared over their exposed faces and they were left powerless to brush away the flies attracted by the molasses. "Stock and sweat boxes" were found in other camps, the report pointed out.

STUDENTS OF PEKING STAGE BIG PROTEST

Demand Arming of the Toiling Masses

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PEKING, China, Nov. 29—Demanding that Tuan Chi-jui, provisional president resign, distributing literature of the left wing section of the Kuomintang or people's nationalist party, calling for the overthrow of the militarist government which is but the tool of foreign imperialists, the disbanding of the regular armies and the arming of the workers, and the dissolution of the so-called "tariff conference" now being held, thousands of revolutionary students filled the streets of Peking today.

Students in Action.

They concentrated on the officials of the corrupt provisional government. They entered and turned inside out the houses of seven prominent government officials, including the home of the chief of police, the Chinese finance minister and the chief secretary of the cabinet. They pulled out one high dignitary from an automobile and gave him a beating.

The defense commissioner of the metropolitan area, Lu Chung Lin, has declared martial law as an attempt to check the demonstrations by students, but it is well known that no power in China can stand against the will of the students, especially when they are joined with the organized proletariat, which wholeheartedly supports the red Kuomintang and the nationalist liberation movement to oust all foreign imperialist domination.

Mutineers Dig In.

Kuo Sung-lien, the leader of 100,000 mutineer trops of Chang Tso-lin, has established headquarters at Chinwangtao on the Chilhi coast. A battle is expected between his troops and Chang's "loyal" white guards at Shanhaikwan.

Altho Japan has protested loudly that she is "neutral" in the matter of Chang being put down and out by mutinous troops, the destroyer Tachibana has been ordered to sail from Port Arthur to Chinwanto, the headquarters of the mutiny, to "protect Japanese nationals employed there."

Your neighbor will appreciate the favor—give him this copy of the DAILY WORKER.

ZEIGLER MINERS FIGHT THIEVING COAL OPERATORS

Bosses Frame Militant Union Leaders

By MAX SHACHTMAN.
I. L. D. Press Service.

ZEIGLER, Ill., Nov. 29—The struggle of the miners for each ton of coal they send up into the world looms in the background of the frame-up and trial of the twenty Zeigler progressives.

The bitter battle of the United Mine Workers of America to incorporate into state legislation and into contracts with the coal operators a point providing for an accurate weighing of each ton of coal as it comes on the scale has become a victory that depends upon the militancy of the check weighman who is elected and paid by the membership of every local union.

Miners Cheated at Scales.

For some time, the checkweighman at the Bell and Zoller mine in Ziegler complained of the fact that the miners were not being given correct weights for their loadings. The progressive administration of Local 992 therefore provided him with an assistant checkweighman who was able to take tally of the cars as they were run over the scales. The weigh boss, who had been running the cars over the scales so swiftly that the indicator was never

MINERS! RALLY TO THE DEFENSE OF FRAMED-UP ZEIGLER COALDIGGERS!

I. L. D. Press Service.

ZEIGLER, Ill., Nov. 29.—The members of the Zeigler Local, 992, of the United Mine Workers of America who are under indictment and bond upon one or more of the four charges in the trial which opens at Benton Monday, are as follows:

Henry Corbishley, Frank Corbishley, Bert Farthing, Oscar Farthing, Pete Blazin, Steve Meanovich, Matt Crnoevich, Ed Wise, Ed Maleski, John Lake, Frank Skibinski, Stanley Pauraz, William Bartash, Ignatz Simich, Martin Simich, R B. Slivonson, Marian Soyat, Walter Bielsky and Mike Karadich.

The prosecution itself moved in the preliminary hearings that ten of the defendants originally named be discharged.

One of the defendants, Frank Corbishley, brother of the deposed president of the local, is being held under all four charges: Assault with intent to murder; conspiracy to murder; murder in the first degree in the case of Mike Sarovich; and intent to murder in the cose of Hezza Hindman. These charges against young Corbishley are typical of the entire Zeigler frame-up: he was not even present in the hall when the fighting or shooting took place.

GITLOW PROTEST MEETING ROUSES NEW YORK LABOR

Demand Immediate Release of Fellow Worker

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—That the masses in New York are awake to the great wrongs imposed upon the active leaders in the movement for working class freedom was shown in a most effective manner at the Gitlow protest meeting that filled Webster Hall on Tuesday evening. The meeting was arranged by the International Labor Defense for the purpose of demonstrating the outraged feelings caused by the imprisonment of Ben Gitlow, now serving a sentence of five to ten years in Sing Sing.

P. Pascall Cosgrove, organizer of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union, acted as chairman and showed in his opening address how the master class is tightening its lines all over the world imprisoning workers who have been prominent in the work of organizing or in leading the masses toward bettering their conditions.

NEW TERRORIST LAWS ENACTED TO PROTECT ITALIAN TYRANT AS HE THREATENS OTHER NATIONS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROME, Italy, Nov. 29—Mussolini and his cut-throat fascists are held in such widespread contempt here that more and more stringent laws are passed every session of the chamber in order to defend the tyrant from the open denunciation of all sections of the population. Yesterday a portion of the new fascist legislative program was adopted and the chamber of deputies adjourned until Wednesday when the remainder of the program will be adopted. Of the ten articles already adopted one of them increases the dictatorship of Mussolini and attempts to protect him from political attacks by providing a penalty of fifteen years' imprisonment for anyone who "insults" the premier or tries to injure his reputation in any manner.

Another part of the laws adopted reaches beyond the confines of Italy and strikes at those property owners who have been driven from the country for anti-fascist activity. This part of the new laws decrees that any person outside Italy critizing the fascist regime will have his property within Italy confiscated. This is recognized as a blow at the Garibaldi's who have not renounced the traditions of the first Garibaldi who bears an illustrous name among certain classes in Italy.

Cannot Describe Tyrant.

Communists here point out that laws against insulting Mussolini are ludicrous because the series of bestial acts of Mussolini are of such a character that it is not possible to calumniate him. He has committed all crimes known to mankind and new words will have to be invented to describe some of his despicable acts against the people of Italy. It is not possible to describe him, to say nothing of reviling him.

He has managed to pervert parliament to such a degree that he can-

I. T. U. FAKERS REFUSE TO DINE AT UNION HOUSE

Chamber of Commerce to Be Host

By A Worker Correspondent

Spokane, Wash.—Despite all efforts of the local Cooks and Waiters Union to get visiting officials of the International Typrographical Union to dine at a union house, these labor-fakers will banquet at a scab hotel as guests of the local chamber of commerce.

One union restaurant even offered to close its doors to the public for the time being, just to make it especially pleasant for these so-called "union" leaders, so that they could do their feasting for once in their lives, at least, in a fair restaurant. But the chamber of commerce and scab joints are more to the taste of this motley crew.

J. Ford White, president, and Albert Leslie, secretary, of the local I. T. U., are in charge of the entertainment of the officials, who are James M. Lynch, I. T. U. president; J. W. Hays, secretary-treasurer; and Seth R. Brown, vice-president.

"It promises to be a red letter day in the history of Local 193," comments a local scab sheet, in referring to the chamber of commerce banquet for the reactionary officials, to be held in the largest scab hotel in the city.

ARBITRATION IS PINCHOT'S NEW BETRAYAL

Miners' Heads Consider Proposal Today

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 29.—Gov. Pinchot of Pennsylvania is again trying to betray the anthracite miners into arbitration as he did in 1923.

In a proposition laid before President John L. Lewis and the scale committee of the miners' union, who are to consider it Monday, Pinchot makes the first move for betrayal, the first proposal always made by an enemy of any strikers—"go back to work at existing conditions, and accept the award of arbitration when it is made later."

Grants no Concessions.

Pinchot proposes no concession to the union and his proposals may well have been written by the mine owners. Not only no concessions are given, but he asks the miners to bind themselves to at least a five-year contract in a time when the cost of living is steadily rising.

Pinchot's main bid for the support of his anti-union scheme is his proposal that under all circumstances there be no increase in price. He plays up artfully the alleged interests of the "consumers."

But the governor offers very little indeed—nothing in fact—to the union. He creates a "board of arbitration" of two from each side, these four to choose three more "impartial" members, all seven to decide "whether the operators can pay increase in wages without an advance in the price of coal." The award to be made in six months, retroactive to the resumption of work.

Wants Open Shops.

Pinchot's proposal gives no comfort to those who thought that he would agree to sponsor the union check-off of dues and thus get, formally, at least, a closed shop. He says:

"Full recognition of the union, the check-off, shall not be granted by the operators, but any operator shall honor the voluntary individual written request of any member to assign the amount of his present union dues,

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Nov. 29.—The Miners' Union in Azerbaijan this year distributes the fund to raise the standard of living of the workers as follows: 300,000 rubles to build sanatoria and rest homes, 100,000 rubles to build hydropathic institutes, 30,000 rubles for co-operatives and 816,000 rubles to build private dwellings.

VON HINDENBURG SIGNS LOCARNO 'PEACE' PACTS

Means Germany Is Vassal of Britain

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN, Germany, Nov. 29.—President von Hindenburg signed the Locarno treatiles enabling bill yesterday evening and also the bill providing for Germany's entry into the league of nations.

Berlin envoys have already left for London where the pacts will be signed on December 1.

Communists are increasing their agitation against the pacts, declaring that they tend to make the German working class the pawns of British imperialism in its efforts to dominate the world.

Government to Resign.

As soon as the pacts are signed the Luther-Stresemann government, according to prearranged plans, will resign and a new government will be organized. It is thought that Hindenburg will have difficulty obtaining a premier who can create a government that will be able to cope with the internal situation which is momentarily becoming more serious.

American Movie Picture Magnates Gain Control of German Productions

BERLIN, Nov. 29.—The American moving picture interests in the Universal Pictures corporation have gained control of the Universe Film association of Germany and have drawn up an agreement as to the showing of German films in America and American films in Germany and the other parts of Europe where the German corporation had the right to exhibit its movies.

The American movie interests were able to gain control of the German Independent Producing company thru loaning the Universe Film association $3,750,000.

Thru this means the American moving picture interests have succeeded in breaking down competition in the European market and have established a monopoly.

SWEDISH GOVERNMENT RE-AFFIRMS SENTENCE OF COMMUNIST EDITOR

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Nov. 29.—The sentence of four months' imprisonment upon O. N. Engranez, editor of the Stockholm Communist daily Folkets Dagbladet, for his attack on the president of Finland and the Finnish government for jailing a number of active Communists, has been confirmed by the Swedish government.

The Dagbladet in an article commenting on the sentence passed by the Swedish government, declares that it will defy any attempts to muzzle its exposures of the character of the Finnish government.

REACTIONARY MINE UNION HEAD SEEKS TO PREJUDICE SENTIMENT BY SUSPENSION OF CORBISHLY

By MAX SHACHTMAN.
(I. L. D. Press Service.)

ZEIGLER, Ill., Nov. 29.—A new act of treachery against the men on trial now in the Zeigler frame-up was accomplished today by the Fox-Cobb-controlled sub-district executive board of the United Mine Workers. Recording Secretary George Thornton, of Zeigler Local 992, has received official notication from the sub-district president of the suspension for six months of Henry Corbishly, Matt Crnoevich, Frank Skibinski and Walter Bielsky.

The action is allegedly based upon charges presented to the sub-district executive board by "Lige" Walker, Farrington's special agent in Zeigler, against the signers of a leaflet entitled "The Facts About Zeigler." The charges had been previously thrown out by the trial committee of the local union. The leaflet contained an effective and truthful story of the incidents leading up to the latest occurrence in Zeigler and lpaced the blame for the matter on the shoulders of those to whom it belonged.

Part of Frame-up.

"Everyone knows why this decision was made right now," declared Henry Corbishly, deposed president of the local and one of the leading defendants in the case. "The Farrington machine wants to show in court we're such bad disrupters of the union that we had to be suspended for six months, and in this way they hope to prejudice the judge and jury against us. The same men who are behind our frame-up are behind this suspension.

"It's significant that when we await a decision on some question of wages or of the checkweighman affecting the interests of the miners it takes from two to three months, in spite of the fact that the sub-district office at West Frankfurt is less than an hour away from Zeigler. This suspension decision was made a little over a week ago and is timed to take place just before the actual opening of the trial.

"We had to get the truth to the miners and the public somehow," continued Corbishly, "and there isn't a paper in the county that would print our stories. Lon Fox and Del Cobb see to that. There was only one thing we could do, and we did it, because we're entitled to it. We printed this leaflet to let everyone know what actually happened in Zeigler."

Will Fight an Appeal.

The suspended members have announced their intention of appealing to the district executive board, and if necessary to the international executive board or the international convention.

It is openly stated here by supporters of the prosecution that the actual charges and issues will be evaded by the prosecution and that every effort will be made to base their side of the case on the "Bolshevik scare" and the "red menace" in the hope of prejudice a jury which is likely to be made up mainly of farmers from the other side of the county.

In private conversations, Farrington men admit that the basis of the indictments lies in the fact that the coal operators in Zeigler were out to get rid of the local progressive union officials led by Corbishly because of the latter's insistence on correct weighing of coal and wages to the miners in accordance.

The frame-up against them is the result of the co-operation which the ku klux klan and the Farrington-Fox machine is giving to the owners of the huge Bell and Zoller mine No. 1.

CLEVELAND WORKERS HEAR OF MINE STRIKE ON TUESDAY EVENING

CLEVELAND, Ohio Nov. 29—The workers of Cleveland will be able to gain a good insight into the real struggle of the anthracite coal miners in Pennsylvania at the meeting that has been arranged to take place Tuesday evening, December 1, 8 p. m., Insurance Center Building, 1783 East Eleventh St., corner Walnut Ave. Room 601 at which Comrade Pat H. Toohey, member of the National Executive Committee of the Young Workers' (Communist) League and youthful strike leader, will tell of the problems that the striking miners face in the present crisis.

Farrington, Illinois Head of Miners, Aids the Capitalist Courts

shooting of a progressive Zeigler miner by a known klansman who is being shielded by the Farrington-Fox machine, and the illegal and provocating actions of Fox and Cobb, are also permitted to go by the board in the anxiety of Farrington to rid himself of his union opponents.

Quite a Difference.

Local attorneys and union men are indicating a significant camparison between the Herrin cases and the Zeigler cases. In the Herrin trial all of the legal talent and financial resources of the union were thrown in the balance on the side of the union defense. Farrington made constant assessments on the membership for the Herrin defense because the nationwide publicity given the case drove him into it, because the Herrin unionists were not in opposition to him, and also because, as the miners explain, he was building up a good reputation for himself in order to be able to carry on his current feud with John L. Lewis.

It also developed that Farrington has to this day refused to make accounting for the hundreds of thousands of dollars collected from the miners for the Herrin men.

Miners' Own Money Pays Bill.

In this case, however, the entire machinery of the union, the operators and the klan has been brot to bear against the defendants because the latter's policies haves been in opposition to those of the officialdom. It is common talk in the county that the district and sub-district treasuries are at the command of the prosecution and that miners' money will be used to pay attorneys to assist the state prosecuting attorney, Roy Martin, to send the Zeigler men to jail or gallows.

Besides Martin, the prosecution is said to have assisting it in the court Mr. W. P. Seeber, a former United Mine Workers' attorney, A. C. Lewis, a U. M. W. attorney, Rufus Nealy, hired by the U. M. W. and it is declared that added to these will be George R. Stone, another U. M. W. attorney, with the likelihood that Angus Kerr, chief counsel for the district executive board, who defended the Herrin miners, will be brot here to prosecute the miners of Zeigler. Every one of these lawyers, as well as Farrington's whole machine, are republicans and supporters of Governor Small.

Farirngton Knifes Defense.

Farrington, who has made arrangements for this imposing legal array to put thru the frame-up, has also taken precautions to prevent the defendants from raising funds for their defense. He is interpreting the constitutional clause which declares that locals may expend their funds only for the benefit of the union to mean that they cannot give a penny for the Zeigner defense, since the men involved are "disrupters and red-necks."

Dozens of sympathetic locals know that the minute they vote a donation to the defense will mean the beginning of a similar campaign against them as has been waged against every one that has dared to stand for progressive policies in the union.

The defense is finding it difficult to raise the necessary fund among the miners who have not worked for months and sometimes a couple of years at a time. They are depending upon the workers thruout the country to come to their aid in this case thru contributions to the International Labor Defense which is helping them in their trial. Generous aid is immediately needed by these courageous men who are fighting their honest battle against such desperate odds.

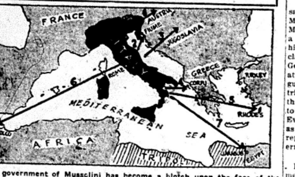
Fascism—A Blotch Upon the Earth



THE government of Musscl ini has become a blotch upon the face of the earth. It is endeavoring to reach out and sink its fangs into surrounding territory in order to quiet opposition in Italy. Its ambitious plans are indicated by this map. From the bloody, thieving, corrupt center of banditry, the fascist chief, under half-idiotic delusions of grandeur, has a vision of conquest that rivals that of the Ceasars.

1—The arrow points toward Austria, the country threatened by the cutthroat chief of Italy because a miner official of that country told the truth about Mussolini.

2—The forcible seizure of Fiume is a source of antagonism in Jugo-Slavia against Mussolini, while

3—Italy's threatened seizure of part of the Dalmatian frontier has evoked a sharp rebuke from the Jugoslavian peasant leader, Radich, who last week defied the fascist chief.

4—Greece has cause for hatred against Mussolini for the threat against Corfu, as well as

5—Where the arrow points to Rhodes already seized by Italy. This antagonism aroused in Greece will probably bring Italy into conflict with England, whose control over Greek policy in the Balkans is well known. The antagonisms growing out of this situation may cause an orientation of Italy toward Turkey in a conflict with Britain.

6—Mussolini tried to horn in on the Morocco affair, but both France and Spain soon disposed of his ambitions in that part of the world.

His vision of conquest extends to all points of the Mediterranean Sea, where he hopes to revive the power once weilded by the ancient empire of Rome. But the result will once more vindicate Marx's famous observation that "History repeats itself: first as tragedy then as farce."

By provoking a war and arming the workers of Italy they will have weapons at their command with which to speedily dispatch this braggart maniac who waded to power thru the blood of the working class of Italy and who carries out a policy of government by assassination.

CUBA'S EXHIBITS DO NOT INCLUDE ENSLAVED PEONS

Imperialists Display Commodities Only

By ESTHER LOWELL.

NEW-YORK—(FP)—The first booth one sees at the Cuban exposition in New York is that of the National City Bank of New York. From it one passes to exhibits of West India Oil Co., another ramification, as National City bank is, of Rockefeller interests. One sees the displays of General Electric of Cuba, Otis Elevator Co., American Car & Foundry Co., Munson Steamship lines, International Nickel Co., National Sugar Refining Co., etc. one big American concern after another until the wonder is where Cuba comes in.

But Cuba is there, in the corner of the Pennsylvania Hotel roof, with a government exhibit of the island's rich possibilities for American exploiters. But nowhere in the exhibit is there an indication of the status of Cuban workers, except in the United States commerce department's booth. Here one finds a report on Living and Operating Expense in Cuba. Natives get from $30 to $50 to $100 less per month than white clerks, bookkeepers, stenographers and salesmen.

"Unskilled day laborers are paid from $60 to $75 per month, though more liberal employers may pay as high as $3 per day," reads the official U. S. report. "Porters receive a minimum of about $60 per month."

Domestic servants are paid $30 per month for maids, $35 for cooks and $50 to $60 for chauffeurs, with meals. Gardeners are paid from $3 to $5 per day.

The other side of Cuba is supplied in Dollar Diplomacy, the book by Scott Nearing and Joseph Freeman.

Russia Increases Tea Cultivation in Soviet Georgia

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R.—At the present time there are 915 dessiatins of land under tea in Georgia as against 839 dessiatins in 1914. In the pre-war days this was the most highly developed of all tea plantations. The amount of lands adaptable to tea culture alone in Georgia amount to 45,000 dessiatins.

If all this area be utilized, Georgia will be able to supply 100,000,000 poods of black tea which will statisfy the entire demand of the Union of Socialist Soviet Russia.

During the next five years it is proposed to lay out 5,000 dessiatins in plantations. In order to assure correct methods of tea growing it is proposed to inaugurate 5 experimental stations and to equip 4 large and 16 small factories.

To Establish Aerial Lines.

MOSCOW, (Tass) Nov. 19.—Mr. Parkel, director of "Aero-Lloyd" having recently investigated the possibilities of regular aerial communication between Germany and Japan thru Siberia declared that now it has been definitely decided to organize two lines of communications in the Eastern Siberia: one Irktsk-Vladivostok, and another Irkutsk-Peking. The communication will commence probably during next year.

Marathon Pianists.

BALTIMORE, Nov., 29.—B. G. Burton, 42, of Jamestown, N. Y., established what is claimed to be a world's record by continuously playing a piano for 52 hours and 20 minutes. He also won a side bet of $1,0000.

Camilla Baucia, another contender, dropped out after playing 52 hours and 15 minutes.

Increasing Water Transport.

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R.—Traffic on the Volga has increased by 170 per cent as compared with last year. Demands for the coming year indicate a further increase. In connection with this the merchant fleet will be increased by 80 units.

Whole Working Class Must Realize Anthracite Coal Strike Is Its Affair

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the mine barons whistle for courage at the threat of the mine workers that the soft coal fields will come out in sympathy with the anthracite strikers now entering their fourth month of battle. At first John Hays Hammond, the leader of the anthracite mine owners, claimed the strike of the 158,000 Pennsylvania hard coal diggers could easily be broken thru the use of substitutes, especially oil and bituminous coal. Now the mine owners, facing a soft coal strike, put up the bluff that enuf bituminous coal can be mined in the non-union fields to supply the demands of the entire nation.

• • • •

There are two big facts that the mine barons do not admit publicly, even tho they may realize it among themselves. These are:

First: That great masses of mine workers in the unorganized fields are ready to strike. In fact the coal miners in West Virginia have been waging brilliant struggles during the past year; struggles that still continue.

Second: Coal supplies are useless unless they can be hauled over the railroads to the market. A bituminous coal strike would furnish another opportunity to develop solidarity between the railroaders and the mine workers; in spite of the officialdom.

In fact the anthracite strike that was called to better the working conditions of the 158,000 miners in a small area in Pennsylvania may develop into a nation-wide labor struggle of great proportions,
